Indianapolis, Nov. 23. — Mark Yen, one of five Chinese captured at Muncie by government officers on the charge of coming into the United States without a certificate, is to be deported to China. A hearing was given him yesterday before Commissioner Moores, who directed Marshal H. F. Pettit to take him to San Francisco and see that he leaves for the Flowery Kingdom. This is the first case of the kind in Indiana.

BAD OUTLOOK FOR MISS STONE.

No Prospect for a Settlement With Abductors.

Sofia, Nov. 23. — Mr. Dickinson, the United States diplomatic agent here, will leave Friday or Saturday for Constantinople. There is absolutely no prospect of a settlement with Miss Stone's abductors. The departure of Mr. Dickinson will probably have a good effect upon the brigands who have Miss Stone in their possession, as they may fear to lose everything by not accepting Mr. Dickinson's proposals.

Mysterious Murder.

Peoria, Ill., Nov. 23.—The dead body of William Gerber, a prosperous farmer living across the river from Peoria, in Tazewell county, was found in the road near the upper Adams street bridge yesterday. He had been to Peoria and had started home Wednesday night. Nothing has been seen or heard of his team and wagon, and it is though he was murdered and his team stolen.

No New Bridge Contract.

London, Nov. 23.—The Times says in reference to a report that a Philadelphia firm has secured contracts for building bridges for the Uganda railroad, that it understands that no contracts of that kind have been placed since December, 1900, as no more bridges are required.

Violated Anti-Trust Law.

Dallas, Tex., Nov. 23. — The Fort Worth brewery at Austin yesterday afternoon pleaded guilty to the charge of violating the anti-trust law and was fined $5,000. The other accused breweries will do the same, but will be fined in proportion to their accrued penalties.

Unparalleled Winter Weather.

Lead, S. D., Nov. 23.—All records for nice weather in the Black Hills have been broken this winter. There has not been any snow to speak of, and the prospect is the ground will be bare until the first of the year.

Russians for Morton County.

Mandan, N. D., Nov. 23.—Many Russian emigrants have arrived to take up land in Morton county. Some of them have enough money to take up the work of farming on a systematic basis next year.

Rickerby's Folly

By TOM GALLON

CHAPTER II. (Continued.)

The tall man seemed about to speak, but checked himself hurriedly. There was an awkward pause, while he stood waiting for the policeman; he wanted to get away, and yet seemed, in some strange fashion, dazed and perplexed. Moreover, there was a reason, in his own mind, at least, why he did not want to be subjected to further questioning; watching his opportunity, while the constable was talking with one of the porters, he strolled towards the door, passed through quickly, and ran down the steps into the street. There, hailing a cab, he was driven back again towards St. John's Wood.

It was now nearly 2 o'clock in the morning—and neither wind nor rain had abated in the least. He got back to the house and stood looking up at the windows, undecided what to do. All the lights had been extinguished in the house, and there was no sign of life anywhere about it. He stood still in the street wondering what was best to be done. There was no sign of his messenger—that messenger who had been swallowed up by the dark house, and who had sent, as it were, two men flying frantically from it but a few moments afterwards. What did it all mean? Had the messenger come away again, and not finding the other man in the street, had he gone elsewhere?

After walking about aimlessly quite a long time he went back to the hospital and rang the bell there. As he stood parleying with the porter the surgeon he had seen before crossed the hall of the place, stopped, and came forward. He was a young man, keen-eyed, and quick of speech.

"Halloa—you've turned up again, have you?" he said. "Our friend, the policeman, was looking for you—he thought he might want you as a witness. I'm afraid the man who tried conclusions with the machine is in a bad way."

"I'm sorry to hear that," replied the other. "I was obliged to hurry away on a matter—matter of business. I came back in the hope of learning how he was." He had come back in the hope of learning something else, too—but he did not say so.

"You can come and look at him, if you like," said the surgeon, carelessly. Then, as they went along, he asked: "Do you know the man at all?"

"Not personally."

"Oh! I merely asked because strangers don't usually trouble themselves about a man picked up in the streets—that's all."

"I—I know the name—or I thought I did," said the other, slowly. "I had heard the name before, and I had some slight interest in it. Has he recovered consciousness at all?"

The surgeon shook his head. "Not really. Once or twice he has spoken, but only to say that one name—'Gilbert Rickerby.' Which reminds me, by the way, as you say you have an interest in the name—I found this, clenched tight in his fingers, a few moments ago—so tightly that I tore it in getting it away from him. It's a man's visiting card, with just that one name upon it."

The visitor took the crumpled pieces of pasteboard in his fingers and looked at them. Scarcely two hours before the man who had left to enter that dark house in St. John's Wood had carried that card in his hand. He felt that the eyes of the young surgeon were upon him; he passed back the torn pieces with what carelessness he could muster.

"His own, I suppose," he said. "Do you know anything of him? Have you found anything on him?"

"Nothing—and he's likely to die without saying anything—except that name. And he shrieks that out every now and then, in a fashion to shake the nerves. Here he is."

They had come into one of the long, clean, dimly-lit wards—a place of silence, save now and then, some sleeper twisted uneasily and moaned a little—or when a nurse rustled down between the beds and spoke in a low voice to a patient. Here and there a listless pair of eyes was turned upon the man who walked softly beside the surgeon; in one corner a screen had been drawn around a bed, to show that Death had come softly in the night-time and healed someone for good and all. The surgeon leaned down beside the bed of the man who had been so recently brought in, and gently but firmly held down the restless arms and looked into the staring, unconscious face.

"Steady—steady! You'll wear yourself out, my friend, at this rate, in an hour or two. Something here more than broken limbs and concussion," he added, glancing up at the other man. "If death comes here, it'll come not quietly, but with fears and tortures."

"Is there—something troubling him—some mystery, perhaps?" asked the other. He spoke in a low voice, and kept his troubled eyes upon the face of the man on the bed.

"Heaven only knows!" responded the surgeon, shrugging his shoulders. "We have no time to think of trouble or mysteries here; our business is to look after men's bones."

"I should like—to—stay with him a little while—if I may," pleaded the other, hesitatingly. "As I have said, I have some—some interest in the name—and I may learn something about him."

"There's no harm in that," said the doctor, readily enough. "It isn't much more than any one will see of him, I'm afraid. I'll tell the nurse you have my permission."

Left there with the injured man, the visitor sat down beside the bed, quite silently, and looked down at him; thought of the torn card that had been found in the man's clenched hand, and felt his brain reel. Then, in the silence of the ward there broke from the man on the bed a low muttering, which gradually swelled and swelled, until it became a scream.

"Gilbert Rickerby—Gilbert Rickerby—Gilbert Rickerby! No—no—for God's sake!—not, that—not that! Gilbert Rickerby—Gilbert Rickerby—keep him back!—Murder!"

The word rang out in an ear-piercing shriek, and the man started up in bed, struggling fiercely with some unseen thing. The startled nurses came running to the bed, where the tall man had his arms about the sufferer and was striving to lay him down. The horrible thing he had seen, whatever it was, had gone from him; he lay breathing heavily and quite passive. The man who held him got away from the bed, and stood nervously wiping his face, out of which all the color seemed to have fled. He made a hurried excuse, and got out of the place and into the cold night air. The rain had ceased and the wind had dropped a little; some stirring life, in the shape of carts and wagons was in the streets.

He walked a long way in one set direction, and mechanically, as a man might walk in a dream; stopped suddenly, as if under the influence of a new resolution; turned about in his tracks and went in an opposite direction.

"No—not there—not where any man knows you, and can clap a hand upon you and cry, 'That man is Gilbert Rickerby!' Hide yourself—slink and creep and crawl in dark ways, as you have done so long. To-night Gilbert Rickerby comes back to the world; yet to-night, a broken, unknown thing they call Gilbert Rickerby lies dying in a strange place, and shrieks 'Murder!' in my face! God of mercy—keep me sane till I see this thing in its true light, and know who I am and what I am and where I am!"

He was in no mood for sleep, or even rest; he buttoned his coat about him and went striding away, not caring whither, with his thoughts hurrying on in maddening confusion. As the dawn was breaking he found himself coming nearer to St. John's Wood again; and so turned into Regent's Park and sat down on a seat there to think. It was very peaceful there, and the only things that were stirring were the birds, fluttering about the trees and the grass. Gradually some of the peacefulness of the scene stole over him, and he became calmer and better prepared for sober thought.

"Now, let me think, let me piece this thing together, and see what it spells. I, Gilbert Rickerby, unfortunate wandering son of old Jonas Rickerby, after years of dodging about the earth, come back to the place where I was born. I am expected; I have a purpose to fulfill, and, hard though that purpose is, I have made up my mind to fulfil it, and to do what is right—to undo some of the wrong of old, unhappy years, and to do one clean, sweet thing at least. At the last moment I determine to play a trick, to gain some knowledge of the man I've never seen before I really see him. I send my trusted servant and friend, James Holden, into the house wherein I was born and at the hour at which I was expected. So far, good; now what follows?"

He stared straight before him for a minute or two with a puzzled face, then went on again, speaking to himself, always in the same low tone:

"This follows: That James Holden enters the house, armed with my card, to prove his bona-fides. Within a few minutes a man rushes out, pursued by another. I chase the first; he meets with an accident in the street, and now he lies dying in the hospital, crying my name, calling out warnings to me in his delirium, and shrieking 'Murder!' What foul, black business is at the bottom of all this—and where is James Holden?"

All that day Gilbert Rickerby wandered about—forming a dozen schemes in his head, and as rapidly abandoning each one in turn. Now he would go to the house in St. John's Wood, make himself known, and boldly ask for his servant; but the plan had to be cast aside, because he told himself that he had yet to understand the mystery of the man who had carried the card and coupled the name of Gilbert Rickerby with murder. Again, he determined to go to the hospital but gave up that idea, also, because he feared to be questioned—perhaps even to be associated with the man who cried his name so persistently. Beset with doubts and fears, he went, when night was coming on, not to the lodging which he had occupied before, but to a quiet little hotel in a street off the Strand, registered under the first name that occurred to him, and sent a note by a messenger, addressed to James Holden, at the rooms they had occupied in Camden Town—rooms they had taken in pursuance of Gilbert Rickerby's plan of hiding until the schemes he had on hand were worked out.

The messenger returned with his note and with a line in pencil, scrawled on the back by the landlord, to the effect that Holden had not been home all night, and that nothing had been seen of him.

The matter was growing exciting; Gilbert Rickerby determined to set about, in his own peculiar fashion, to solve the mystery. But that mystery thickened considerably when next day there appeared in all the morning papers the following advertisement:

£100 REWARD—A gentleman named Gilbert Rickerby has mysteriously disappeared. He failed to keep an appointment made by himself two days ago. He is implored by the advertiser to communicate at once with his friends. Any one supplying information concerning the missing gentleman shall receive the above reward. Apply, Mr. Nugent Leathwood, Rickerby's Folly, St. John's Wood, London.

"I don't understand it," muttered Gilbert Rickerby to himself, as he stared at the advertisement. "Holden went there—to see Nugent Leathwood—and to explain matters; he was there to the minute. Yet there is this same Nugent Leathwood advertising for me. And then, that man in the hospital—what about him?"

Still vainly hoping that Holden might turn up and some explanation be given, Gilbert Rickerby waited all that day and did nothing; wandered at night to the house outside which he had at first stood, and wandered away again, undecided still what to do. After a sleepless night he set off the next morning for the hospital.

As he entered the place he saw the surgeon he had met before, coming slowly towards the door, side by side with a gentleman of swarthy skin. Both the surgeon and the other man raised their eyes as they came opposite to Rickerby, and the surgeon recognized him.

"By the way," he said, quickly, "here is the gentleman who was good enough to interest himself in your cousin. Found him in the street, I believe, after the accident, and assisted to bring him here. This"—he indicated the man of the swarthy skin—"is Mr. Nugent Leathwood, cousin of the man you brought here, sir. The man, I regret to say, died last night."

Gilbert Rickerby looked steadily at Nugent Leathwood; for a moment there was silence, while Leathwood watched the newcomer keenly.

"And you recognized your cousin, Mr. Leathwood?" asked Gilbert, at last.

"Perfectly," replied the other. "Poor fellow, it was a sad home-coming for him—to come so far—and to be cut down in a moment, like that. Oh, yes; I know it is my cousin; we were boys together. I understand, too, that, even in his delirium, he gave some clue to his identity."

"So I understand," replied Gilbert, dryly.

"I have begged the good surgeon of this hospital to accept the amount of the reward, as a donation to the funds; it is the least I can do, after the care that was bestowed upon my unfortunate cousin," said Leathwood. "By the way, sir"—he addressed Gilbert in a hushed tone of voice—"I shall make arrangements for the funeral as soon as the inquest is over. As you have been good enough to interest yourself in the matter, perhaps you would like to appear with me as a mourner?"

"I shall be very glad—I mean I will be willing—to follow—Gilbert Rickerby—to the grave," said the other, in a low voice.

"By the way," said Nugent, suddenly turning to the other, "I don't think I caught your name!"

Gilbert hesitated for a moment, and then gave the first that occurred to him; it happened to be that of the landlord of the house where he had been lodging. "My name," he said, "is Reeks—George Reeks."

CHAPTER III.

Rickerby's Folly.

In the days before Rickerby's Folly received its suggestive name—more than a quarter of a century before this history begins—it had been a place of joy and laughter, a cheery home to which a happy man brought his bride. An old man he was, in comparison with his young wife; yet an old man grown young again, for love of her. Men had spoken of Jonas Rickerby as a man soured and embittered; he determined from the time of his marriage, to be soured and embittered no more. The world was a green and flowery place, after all; and the house in St. John's Wood should be a very Paradise, set in the midst of it.

The Paradise lasted for nearly two years; and then Jonas Rickerby shattered it at a blow. No one ever quite knew what the story was; whether the suspicious old man grew jealous of his wife; whether a younger lover came on the scene; or whether May and December were ill-matched, and merely drifted apart. Suffice it to say, when her baby boy was little more than a year old, they took—the husband and wife—separate sides of the house. Then the quarrel grew, so that, for some reason, never fully explained, or for no reason at all, they could not bear to see each other; and the man entered upon that strange business which was to give the house forever after its title.

The place was his own, and he had a lot of land attached to it and inclosed within the high wall which shut it off from the outer world. He got builders to come—men who worked, for liberal pay, day and night—and began to build up another house, scarcely a dozen yards from the old one, of exactly the same shape and style; in fact, the original house was copied, brick for brick and beam for beam. Then, when all was finished and furnished, he sent her into it.

"No man shall say," he told her, brutally, "that you fare worse than I do; no man shall reproach me for not giving you the house I promised you. There is your home; take your child there; choose your own servants; live your own life. Henceforward I know as little of you as though were in a spot thousands of miles away. You shall be amply provided with money; the world shall know you as Mrs. Rickerby, but Jonas Rickerby knows you no more. Go!"

So she went; and for ten long, unhappy years lived the life of a nun, eating her heart away, some said, for love of him—raging her heart out, others said, in hatred of him. All that time she brought her son up carefully; and if he ever saw his father at all, it was only when he wandered—poor, solitary baby—in the neglected garden, and saw the old man passing to and from behind the windows of the separate house. In building the second house, it should be mentioned, that old Jonas Rickerby had a long covered way constructed between the two, so that the world might think, perhaps, that they were still united and that the houses were one. But the covered way was never used, and the door of communication was strictly locked and barred.

Ten long years; and at the end of the ten years she died. Died under strange and awful circumstances—died almost at his feet, as it were. The frightened servants who told the story afterwards, said that she had long been ailing; that she had sent him pathetic little letters across the space that divided them—letters which he had returned unopened—letters in which she told him that her end was near, and prayed him to be mindful of the child who would be left alone.

On that last night, it was said, she crept down into the passage he had constructed and found her way to the door that led into his house; that she beat upon it with her hands, and cried to him, in old, endearing terms that ten years of neglect and silence had not driven out of her—for God's sake to speak to her, for pity's sake to let her look upon his face again and hear his voice.

He may have heard, or he may not Be that as it may, the door remained locked, and in the morning they found her, with her face pressed close against it, cold and dead. Even then he gave no sign, and the servants who followed her to the grave were apparently the only mourners. The boy he took into his house, with a mental vow to bring him up to his own stern creed of life.

The boy had been given the name of Gilbert, and the name rankled. It had been the name of a friend of hers (the husband swore he was her lover)—a man something near her own age. Perhaps the giving of the name had been the first cause of their quarrel. Suffice it that he showed the boy no tenderness; that he merely tolerated him and let him come and go as he would, without interference. And when the boy was nearly sixteen years of age a strange thing happened.

There came a girl to the house—a mere child, some five years younger than the boy. She was a ward of the old man, the daughter of a dead friend who had left her as a charge to Jonas Rickerby. She made whatever of sunshine there was in the boy's life; there sprang up between them a youthful attachment—growing, even in that atmosphere, beautifully.

Then the blight that was upon the house fell upon the boy, also; some quarrel arose between him and his father, and he left at a moment's notice. But he came back—secretly and at night—for the most part, to see the girl, and she crept out to meet him. When he was twenty-two and she but seventeen, they met one night in the wilderness of a garden, and solemnly plighted their troth. They were never to be parted, in spirit, at least; they were to look forward to a brighter time—when Rickerby's Folly was a thing left behind in the hateful past—and the world and Heaven should smile upon their love. On that very night old Jonas Rickerby surprised them together in the garden; ordered his son away; and packed off the girl next day to a dreary school in the country, where she occupied the position of a parlor boarder and was strictly watched.

Then, with that little romance nipped in the bud, Jonas Rickerby took to his heart—if he may be said to have possessed such a thing, one Nugent Leathwood, a nephew of about the same age as the son he had discarded, a specious fellow, who flattered and pitied him, and made the most of his chances. But when, within a year after his son had finally disappeared, old Jonas Rickerby was dying, he happened to hear, in a roundabout fashion, where his son was, and wrote to him, and implored his forgiveness, and died without receiving it.

Then, for a time, Nugent Leathwood settled down, to wait and see what would happen; chose companions to suit his needs, and laid his schemes for the future. This was the position of affairs as regards Rickerby's Folly at the time Gilbert Rickerby came home.

This, too, was the position of affairs a few days later, when Gilbert Rickerby stood outside the house one night and gazed up at the windows. Truth to tell, he was placed in an awkward situation. He was keenly anxious to find out what had happened, yet he scarcely dared to make inquiries. All his thoughts came back to that scene in the hospital; forever there rang in his ears the shriek of the man who had coupled the name of Gilbert Rickerby with murder. Over and over again in uneasy dreams he fled through the streets after that man; over and over again he followed him to the grave, side by side with Nugent Leathwood; over and over again he saw him committed to the earth as Gilbert Rickerby. For he had really carried out that amazing part of the business; had stood beside the grave, and had consented to see this mysterious man buried as himself.

But in doing that he realized, when it was too late, that he had spoiled his chance of making direct inquiry into the mystery which surrounded his name. Gilbert Rickerby had been advertised for in the public press. The extraordinary case of the man who had come from abroad, after so many years, back to his father's house, only to die in the streets on the very night of his arrival, had been commented upon freely in the press; enterprising reporters had raked up the story of Rickerby's Folly, and had told it, with additions. For that reason, because he had, in a sense, forfeited his name, he dare not go back to his lodgings, was obliged to be contented with sending messages to his servant, James Holden, and had no real opportunity for discovering the reason of that man's silence. His ill-fortune, begun in his boyhood and continued through his manhood, seemed to be dogging him even here. For he stood, on this night, homeless and nameless; knowing that his cousin, Nugent Leathwood, had claimed some dead stranger for reasons of his own, as the man from abroad; knowing that, with the disappearance of his own messenger and the apparent public burial of himself, Gilbert Rickerby was disposed of and done for for good and all.

"If I could meet the man, if I could by any means find out what is going on in that house," he muttered to himself, "I might be nearer a solution of the matter. But I, who have been buried and forgotten for so long, am buried in good earnest now, and shall be forgotten, like a nine-days' wonder. If I could only get into that house!"

Houseboat Hotels.

A company is about to open a houseboat hotel at Abbazia, on the Adriatic. This floating hotel will have accommodations for 100 guests, and will contain a fine dining hall and saloons. It will also be seaworthy, so that the visitor can be treated to a trip on the Adriatic from time to time.

There is no surer beginning for a home than simple furnishing. In simplicity lie safety, reason and art. There is nothing finer nor higher. It is supreme.—November Ladies' Home Journal.

BOUNDARY LINES.

NATIONAL FRONTIERS ARE NOT ALWAYS DELIMITED.

The Alaska-Canada Line, for a Great Part of Its Length, Can Only be Guessed at Asserts This Writer—Possible Controversy.

Dr. Mill, the British geographer, recently called attention to the fact that Great Britain has still one important colonial boundary entirely undelimited in a little known region, where gold fields will probaby be found or reported before long, and where therefore, a serious international question may suddenly arise. He says it would cost a comparative trifle to survey the region in question and to lay down the boundary line before the gold fields are touched, so that no international trouble about it could ever arise. Dr. Mill did not mention the particular boundary to which he referred, but there is little doubt that he was thinking of one of two lines. The boundary between Alaska and Canada along the 141st meridian has not yet been delimited except along its southern part. The exact frontier between the two countries, for several hundred miles, can only be guessed at until it has been scientifically determined and marked at frequent intervals by boundary monuments, such as the United States and Mexico have erected along their entire frontier between the place where the Rio Grande ceases to be the boundary and the Pacific ocean. It is not at all unlikely that gold may be discovered in the neighborhood of this boundary at any time. When this occurs it will be a source of inconvenience to miners if they do not know definitely whether their claims are in the United States or Canada and history would only repeat itself if the misunderstanding arising from this lack of knowledge should result in some international unpleasantness. It is possible, however, that Dr. Mill refers to the boundary line between German southwest Africa and the British possessions. It is known that the German colony is rich in minerals. New discoveries are frequently made, and no one knows yet how extensive the profitable mining region may prove to be. The larger part of the boundary extends along the meridian of 20 degrees east longitude, but this line has not been delimited. It is certainly better to determine by an exact survey the position of such boundary lines before the value of the land near them may give rise to disputes and result perhaps in bloodshed. We had an illustration in June last of the embarrassment which is apt to result from ignorance of the location of a boundary line. It will be remembered that some of our miners have invested considerable money in claims a little to the north of Mount Baker, which is in the state of Washington, before it was discovered by a survey that our citizens had opened their claims under the provisions of our mining laws in territory that was clearly over the border in Canada. The result was most energetic claim-jumping on the part of Canadians and there was some trouble and bad feeling before the matter was finally adjusted. It was, of course, unfortunate that the boundary question between our country and Canada in the neighborhood of Skagway had not been settled before the interests of the citizens of both countries were determined to hold on tenaciously to territory which each declared was in his own country. This boundary question is still undetermined, though a modus vivendi has been arranged.

It sometimes costs a great deal of money to postpone the settlement of boundary questions until claims have been pegged out on debatable land. The historic controversy between Venezuela and British Guiana should be a warning to all nations that danger lurks along the line of unsettled boundaries.—New York Sun.

Saved by His Gallantry.

Good maners have always been recognized as a valuable help to comfortable living, but a story told by Andrew Lang, who declares that he had it from a descendant of the gentleman in the case shows that they may also afford, on occasion, the only way of living at all. Roderick Macculloch, a Highland giant, no less than six feet four inches in height, had been arrested for treason and was on his way to the Tower, when the procession was temporarily blockaded. A lady, looking out of a window, called to the victim: "You tall rebel! You will soon be shorter by a head." Roderick took off his hat and made a profound obeisance. "Does that give you pleasure, madam?" he asked. "It certainly does," replied the lady. "Then, madam," retorted Roderick, with another flourish, "I do not die in vain." The answer so captivated the sensibilities of the lady that she made an immediate appeal for clemency to the reigning monarch, George II., and Mr. Lang declares that he saw the rebel's pardon, beautifully engrossed within a decorative border, on the wall of his descendant's study. A novelist would have married the lady to the gallant Roderick, but there seems to have been some objections to this romantic conclusion.

Polite Custom in Sweden.

It is the custom in most countries in Europe to hold the hat in the hand while talking to a friend. In Sweden, to avoid the dangers arising from this during the winter, it is no uncommon thing to see announcements in the daily paper informing the friends of Mr. So-and-So that he is unable, through the doctor's orders, to conform to this polite usage.

The Bath Room Window.

It is occasionally desirable in a bath room window or in one having an objectionable outlook to have an opaque pane. The pretty, frosted effect often seen in restaurants and saloons can be readily produced at home at little cost. To a pint of stale ale add a handful of Epsom salts. Mix and apply with a brush. This makes a hard finish that will remain indefinitely, or, if desired, may be removed by scrubbing at any time.—New York Evening Post.

New Fuel for Locomotives.

One of our largest railroads has decided to substitute oil in place of coal as fuel for its locomotives, and while there may be some doubt as to its success, there is none concerning the value of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. It has been given a thorough trial during the past fifty years and has never disappointed any sufferer from dyspepsia, indigestion, constipation or flatulency who have given it a fair trial. Be sure to get the genuine.

SHOULD HAVE BEEN AN ACTOR.

He Did Not Want to Pay What He Owed His Neighbors, This Farmer.

"Look here," said a Suffolk farmer to a friend, "I'm going to kill my pig, but I owe so much pork to my neighbors that I shall have none left for myself if I pay it all back. What would you do?"

"Quite easy to trick 'em," said the friend. "Kill your pig and leave it hanging outside until late at night, so everyone can see it. Then take it in, and say someone stole it. Stick to the tale, and you'll be all right."

The farmer followed instructions, and the kind friend watched his chance and stole the pig. The poor farmer came around the next morning to tell what had happened.

"Somebody has stolen my pig!" he cried.

"Good!" said the friend. "Stick to it, and the neighbors'll believe you, sure enough."

"But it was stolen, I tell you!"

"Excellent!" quoth the friend. "Just you stick to that tale."

"You confounded ass!" yelled the farmer. "Don't you understand? It was really stolen."

"Superb!" laughed the delighted friend. "You ought to have been an actor, so you ought."

That Suffolk farmer slammed the door and went away fuming.—London Answers.

CANADA'S CAPITAL AROUSED.

Never Was There Such Excitement—Physicians' Association Trying to Explain.

Ottawa, Canada, Nov. 25th.—This city is stirred up as never before. Some seven years ago the local papers published an account of a man named George H. Kent of 408 Gilmour street, who was dying of Bright's Disease, and who, at the very last moment, after several of the best physicians had declared he couldn't live twelve hours, was saved by Dodd's Kidney Pills.

People who know how low Mr. Kent was refused to believe that he was cured permanently, and the other day, in order to clinch the matter, the papers published the whole case over again and backed up their story by sworn statements made by Mr. Kent, in which he declares most positively that in 1894 he was given up by the doctors, and that Dodd's Kidney Pills, and nothing else, saved him, and further, that since the day that Dodd's Kidney Pills sent him back to work, seven years ago, he has not lost a single minute from his work. (He is a printer in the American Bank Note Printing Company.)

Mr. Kent is kept quite busy during his spare hours answering inquiries, personally and by letter, but he is so grateful that he counts the time well spent. Indeed, he and his wife have shown their gratitude to Dodd's Kidney Pills in a very striking way by having their little girl—born in 1895—christened by the name of "Dodds."

Altogether, it is the most sensational case that has ever occurred in the history of medicine in Canada, and the perfect substantiation of every detail leaves no room to doubt either the completeness or the permanency of the cure.

The local physicians have made the case of Kent and Dodd's Kidney Pills the subject of discussion at several of the private meetings of their association.

The Raw Food Habit.

Just now the raw food diet threatens to become a fad. Certainly many people are experimenting with the new dietic idea. It would be far better for the average man or woman to adopt an absolutely raw diet, and eat everything which he could possibly eat or relish in a perfectly raw state, than to swallow into his stomach the horrible messes which are concocted by the average cook. It is safer, on the whole, for man to take his food as he finds it in its natural state than to take it as he finds it on the table of the average boarding house or hotel. In other words, it is safer for man to take his food straight from the hands of his Maker than from the hands of a French cook.—Good Health.

Buffalo Bill's Horses.

Buffalo Bill greatly bewails the loss of his horses in the recent railroad accident to his show. "All these horses," he says, "were thoroughly trained and experienced, and it will take time and money to replace them. It is not easy to train these mustangs, and even after they're well trained, they need experience to become reliable and serviceable. Insured for $250 apiece, they were worth at least $1,000 each to me. My horses have to do so much more than the circus horse that they cannot be so readily replaced. I have already made arrangements for another lot, and will soon have them in training at the Bridgeport winter quarters."—New York Times.

"WHAR DEW I CUM IN?"

(Being the Soliloquy of a Farmer on the Free Raw Sugar Question.)

"Thar's a mighty lot er talkin' about farmers 'n thar rights,
'N the wonderful prosperity thet beet growin' invites.
Thar's a heap er foolish crowin' 'n the 'beats' begin ter shout
'n holler fer the Tariff ter keep free raw sugar out!
But I notis thet the beet-producin' farms are very few,
An' the farmers through the country ain't got much ef it ter dew.
The hull land ain't a-raisin' beets, 'n ain't goin' ter begin,
Beet growin's right fer sum, I guess—but, whar dew I cum in?

The farmer gits four dollars now fer every ton o' beets—
A hansom price, I must allow—but hidin' sum deceits.
Beet sugar manyfacterers admit es they hev found
Thet "granylated" costs 'em sumthin' like tew cents a pound.
In fact thet leaves a profit on which they'd greatly thrive—
And—if it kin be sold fer three, why should we pay 'em FIVE?
It seems ter me es thet's a game thet's mighty like a skin—
But—if thar's any benefit—waal,—whar dew I cum in?

When Uncle Sam's in want o' cash we're glad ter help him out,
'N we'll stand all the taxes thet are needed, never doubt,
But when his pocket-book's well lined an' nary cent he lacks,
Et seems ter me his duty's ter repeal thet sugar tax.
Them fellers wot is interested sez its to protect
The beet-producin' farmer thet the duty they collect,
But I guess thet explanation es a little bit too thin—
The sugar maker,—he's all right;—but—whar dew we cum in?

Take off raw sugar duty an' the price will quickly fall,
To everybody's benefit, fer sugar's used by all.
The poor will bless the Government thet placed it in thar reach—
('n millions of our citizens free sugar now beseech)
The dealer 'll be delighted—less expenditure fer him—
More demand 'n bigger profits—which at present are but slim.
An' the farmer 'll be as well paid as he ever yet hes ben—
But he'll buy his sugar cheaper—thet's whar he an' I'll cum in.

Now, whar's the sense er reason of the sugar tax to-day,
When our treasury's a-bulgin' an' we hev no debts ter pay?
The duty on raw sugar's Fifty million every year—
An' the people's got ter pay it—thet's a fact thet's very clear.
Fifty million! Great Jerusha! Ter protect beet magnates, too,
Why should they tax ALL the people—just ter help a scattered FEW?
And the FEW? Beet-sugar MAKERS! Don't it really seem a sin
Thus ter help an' fill thar coffers? Whar dew you an' I cum in?

The farmer growin' beets hes got a contract price fer years,—
Free raw sugar wouldn't hurt him, an' of it he hes no fears.
But mebbe, like myself—he's also growing fruit so nice—
Ter preserve it—at a profit—he needs sugar—at a price!
The repealing of the duty surely cuts the price in two—
Thet'll make a mighty difference, neighbor, both ter me an' you!
Let the sugar manyfactrer make such profits as he kin—
Ter him it may seem right enuff—but whar dew I cum in?

An' I ain't a-goin' ter swaller all the argyments they shout
Thet the farmers need protection—an' must bar raw sugar out.
Common sense is plainly showin' that the people in the land
Want raw sugar free in future—an' its freedom will demand.
'Tis a tax no longer needed—hateful to the public view,—
Taxing millions of our people to enrich a favored few.
They can't blind me any longer with the foolish yarns they spin,—
While they're busy makin' money—whar dew you and I come in?

I'm a-goin' ter keep on hustlin', talkin', pleadin' with my frends,—
Ain't no sense in lettin' others gain thar selfish privet ends.
I'm a-goin' ter write ter-morrer to my Congressman 'nd say
Thet he oughter do his best ter kill that tax without delay!
Feller-farmers, do your utmost—whether you grow beets or not
To repeal the tax on sugar—you can but improve your lot!
Cheaper sugar helps your pocket, greater blessings you can win—
When we've three-cent granylated—that's whar you an' I come in!"

KILLING TO CURE PATIENT.

The Old-Time Method of Bleeding People to Death.

All kinds of cures for rheumatism, from baking to vibration, are now being exploited. This disease, judging from the amount of space devoted to it in the public prints, is getting to be more and more a common complaint. "Tip" seems to fairly revel in new and wierd cures for the affliction, and the patent medicine advertisements set forth a tempting list of remedies. Probably the reason that people with rheumatism did not talk so much about it in the old days was for fear the doctor would be called in. One has only to look over an old medical book to realize that a visit from a doctor a hundred years a go was no joke. Here is a book on "The Practice of Physic," printed in Edinburgh in 1784—a hundred and seventeen years ago. It is written by the foremost doctor of his time, William Cullen, professor in the University of Edinburgh, "First Physician to His Majesty in Scotland," and member of all the learned societies. In its day "Cullen's First Lines" was the greatest medical text book in the English language. Now this is what Dr. Cullen would have done to "Tip," or any other seeker after a cure for rheumatism. The learned doctor says: "The cure requires in the first place an antiphlogistic (inflammation-checking) regime, and particularly a total abstinence from animal food and from all fermented or spirituous liquors; substituting a vegetable or milk diet. Blood-letting is the chief remedy in acute rheumatism. The blood ought to be drawn in large quantity and the bleeding to be repeated in proportion to the frequency, fullness and hardness of the pulse and the violence of the pain. For the most part large and repeated bleedings during the first days of the disease seem to be necessary." In addition to these general bleedings the doctor recommends local bleedings wherever there appears any "swelling or redness."—New York Press.

HYGIENIC BATHING.

Public Swimming Pool Dangerous to Public Health.

The dangers of the public swimming pool should not be forgotten by those suddenly interested in the subject of cleanliness among the poor of the cities. The proper methods of bathing are four: (1) By the bath in ocean water at the seashore. For only a very few of the entire people, and for but one-fourth of the year is this possible. Such bathing, like many other kinds of bathing, is not for cleansing the body. (2) By the bath tub with pure water, possible only for the well-to-do, and a limited number in public bath houses. (3) By the spray or rain bath, the sole method advisable in public baths, and especially if supported by the benevolent, by the state, or by city appropriations. (4) By means of sponge or towel at home, even with only a few gallons of water. This method should be encouraged by hygienists, physicians and all those who would discriminatingly help forward the cause of the public health. The free swimming bath for the vast majority of our people is impossible to provide if the water shall be pure; and it is impossible to keep the water pure when it is provided. We leave out of the count the not-to-be-sneered-at fact that unless the bathing is done unclothed, soap and cleanliness are not thought of, and, even at best, modesty, that hardly-won virtue, is not encouraged in public bathing. The only incontestable fact is that the public swimming pool is a danger to, not a promoter of, the public health. The newspapers, the politicians and the selfishly charitable are right in their efforts to encourage cleanliness, but the mere desire to do good nowadays does not prevent the final result from showing wasted effort, and, not infrequently, positive evil. Science should ballast our sentimentalism, and nowhere more carefully than in socialistic experiment and fervors.—Philadelphia American Medicine.

King of Denmark's Palace.

Fredensborg is the largest of the King of Denmark's palaces. It has an imposing exterior, and is surrounded by wonderful avenues of limes, but is extremely simple in its interior arrangements. The bedrooms are small and furnished in the plainest style, and there are hardly any dressing rooms or wardrobes. A very wonderful view may be had from the palace roof, which is made entirely of copper. This metal is much used in Copenhagen; some of the steeples have copper steps by which they can be ascended. Rosenborg has a handsomer exterior than Fredensborg, and is full of beautiful artistic objects, including, it is said, the finest Venetian glass in the world.

Serum for Snake Bite.

Dr. Calmette, the director of the Pasteur Institute at Lille, is the discoverer of a curative serum for snake bite. He was severely bitten recently by a poisonous reptile, and at once gave himself an injection of his cure. His hand swelled badly and acute fever set in, but during the same day he was well enough to attend a meeting of the general committee of his department and to make an argument in favor of a grant of money to a sanitarium which he has founded at Lille. On the following day he was perfectly well, having thus afforded in his own person, albeit unwillingly, a convincing proof of the efficacy of his remedy.

It is as easy to draw back a bullet after discharging the gun as it is to recall an unkind word.

The Bishop as a Parishioner.

It is told of Frederick Temple, now archbishop of Canterbury, that when he was Bishop of London he was examining theological students on the matter of parish calls, and offered himself as an object-lesson for such a call. He went into the next room and lay down on a sofa, with his face to the wall, and a young Irishman, whose lot it was, entering directly after, walked up to him, laid his hand on Dr. Temple's shoulder, and said: "Ah, Frederick, Frederick!—the drink again!"

Artificial Larnyx Used.

The latest achievement in surgery is an artificial larnyx. The patient using it was presented before the Academy of Medicine. He was able to eat and speak. The apparatus consisted of a vulcanite reproduction of a larynx adapted above the trachea. A rubber diaphram replaces the glottis. It vibrates, but gives only one note. The patient's speech is, therefore, monotone. A metallic grating prevents the ingress of solid food. Liquid food falls into a funnell, and is conducted to the oesophagus. An interior orifice facilitates respiration.—New York Herald.

Whisky and Whiskey.

What is the difference between whisky and whiskey? Most people imagine that it is a mere difference in spelling, but a correspondent writes that, in answer to a written order for whisky, given to a spirit merchant, Scotch was sent. This led to a personal interview with the seller, at which it was pointed out that the customer always bought Irish, never Scotch. The order was referred to, and the merchant, placing his finger on the word whisky, said, without an "e" it denoted Scotch; if Irish was required the spelling should be whiskey. It would be interesting to know why "e" should spell "Irish."—London Chronicle.

Parental Sarcasm.

"Isn't that rather an unprofitable result?"

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

Indian Commissioner Jones in his annual report says in substance that the Indian must be brought to recognize the dignity of labor and the importance of building and maintaining a home. He must understand that the more useful he is there the more useful he will be to society. It is there he must find the incentive to work, and from it must come is the home. Improvement is the uplifting of his race. The key to the whole situation must begin there. The first and most important object to be attained is the elevation of the domestic life. Until that is accomplished it is futile to talk of higher education.

The Grant County Herald tells of a couple of smooth agents who visited Elbow Lake to secure the privilege of printing the pictures of some of the "prominent men" in a book containing the pictures of 2,000 other prominent nent men, all for $17, including a copy of the book. The Herald sounds a note of warning. We think it is unjustified. Rev. L. J. Parbst left last Friday for Montivieo, Minn., where he will be in charge of the Norwegian Baptist church at that place three for months. His family will continue to reside here.

The Sixth district could not send a better man to congress than A. N. Dare.

Eugene Piche arrived in the city Tuesday from Pembina, N. D. to visit his son, Albert Piche. Mr. Piche, Sr., is 85 years of age, yet he looks younger than his rotund son, and could no doubt larrup him as easily as in days gone by.

There is no need of having your photograph sent away to be enlarged. Borry, the photographer has in his gallery a big instrument of the finest make and can now take large pictures from life. He can also copy and enlarge your old photographs.

An exchange avers that a man who received a note from his lawyer that he could not decipher stepped into a drug store and handed it to the clerk with a word. The latter looked at it carefully, went to the prescription counter and soon returned with bottle of medicine duly labeled with directions for taking.

C. C. Elliott, of Ogden, Iowa, was in the city last week with a special car loaded down with land seekers. They made headquarters upon the car while here, driving into the country in the day time to look at the land which they purchased. Mr. Elliott will open up a real estate office in this city, and as he is a hustler he will be sure to do a good business.

Only a few weeks and we have Christmas. A Christmas present that never gets out of style is a beautiful photograph of yourself from Borry's studio. It is cheap and always welcome. Also rolled gold brooches and cuff buttons with your picture in and picture frames. Borry, the photographer, has now a large assortment of frames, for large and small photographs.

THE THIEF RIVER FALLS NEWS.

VOL. XVIII. THIEF RIVER FALLS, MINN., THURSDAY, DECEMBER 5, 1901. NUMBER 48.

25 YEARS

Mr. and Mrs. Jackson's Silver Wedding Celebrated.

Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Jackson were very pleasantly surprised last Thursday evening by a large number of their friends, the occasion being the twenty-fifth anniversary of their marriage. The evening was spent in card playing and all had a most enjoyable time.

The fact that Mr. and Mrs. Jackson were married at the Red Lake Agency so long ago undoubtedly entitles them to the distinction of being the first white couple to be married in Beltrami county. At that time there were no settlers in that county, and even the site of the city of Thief River Falls was government land. There were only about a half a dozen white people at the Agency at that time, Mr. Jackson being employed as a clerk, and Mrs. Jackson was the daughter of the Agency physician. The nearest railroad was at Brainerd, from which place all the supplies were brought, it taking several days to make the trip. Although twenty-five years does not seem so very long, the change that has taken place in this section of the state during that time has been great.

In token of the high esteem in which they are held in this city, Mr. and Mrs. Jackson were presented with a dozen handsome silver forks by the guests.

Bisazza Is Free.

Judge Amidon last Saturday reversed the order of Referee Vaule in the Bisazza case and when Spiro Bisazza completes the eight months time of imprisonment which he is now serving for canceling his assets he will be a free man. Halvor Steenerson argued the case all day Friday and until noon Saturday, for the defendant befor the U. S. court at Fargo. The decision the court decided that Mr Bisazza could not be held for contempt for disobeying Referee Vaule's order to turn over $10,000 to his creditors.

Commenting on the dismissal of the Bisazza contempt proceedings, the Fargo Call thinks he should lose no time in acquiring a name that don't sound so much like a hive of beer on a strike.

RESIGNED

Rev. Sterling no Longer Pastor of the Methodist Church.

In the interest of harmony, Rev. W. Allen Sterling has resigned as pastor of the Methodist church in this city. Rev. Sterling has been pastor here for the past year and was resently called to serve another year. He has been an extremely energetic pastor, and has worked hard for the success of the church here, taking it in a weak and strugling condition and making it one of the strongest societies in the city.

[The News is in receipt of a communication from a member of the Methodist church severely criticising another member of that body for the part he has taken in opposing Rev. W. Allen Sterling, and recites that the proper time to have made complaint was before the state conference was held, which would have given Rev. Sterling an opportunity to have secured a good calling, and that now all the desirable places are filled, and that Rev. Sterling will be a great sufferer. The communication is too personal to be printed, and the News does not believe any discussion of the affair will be of any benefit to the church. Let bygones be bygones.]

Lumber Shortage.

It would appear that by January this territory will be in the throes of a lumber famine, so far as the better grades are concerned, says the Minneapolis Lumberman. When sawing to their fullest capacity, the manufacturers were not able to much improve the broken condition of their stocks, so heavy has been the demand. With one or two exceptions, the mills have been closed down for the season and as there will be no more sawing until next spring, the demand that is sure to come the remainder of the year and the early part of next will render the already bad condition worse. Without doubt many items will be wiped out. The low and broken condition of stocks on this market is but an example of what is the case on others. Down river points reports stock demoralized.

You Have Your Own Idea —of the kind, quality and price of the goods you must, like every one else, purchase at the beginning of the winter season.

Perhaps you have had difficulty in finding just what suited you. Permit us to assist you in this difficulty. We could quote you prices here, and possibly may, but they would not convey to you such an idea of our bargains, as a personal examination could.

We are continually adding to our extensive stock, and are determined to please the most fastidious, as well as the closest buyer. We invite you to inspect our stock and carefully note what we offer. We also court comparison and competition with others, for goods that can't stand this ought not to be sold. It is our constant aim to offer you your money's worth and establish a reputation for fair dealing. Try us and see.

Very truly yours,

As usual the Irishman has made the best suggestion as to how to dispose of the anarchists. Some one ventured the opinion that they be collected and placed on a lonely island in mid ocean and be allowed to carry out their own peculiar ideas. The son of Erin advanced his idea that a good amendment would be to put them to hunt their own island.

L. G. Browning, United States commissioner for the district of Minnesota, is prepared to give at ention to homestead fil ings and take final proof.

EDDY'S VIEWS.

Favors Commissioner Jones' New Indian Policy.

Washington, Nov. 29.—Representative Eddy was at the land office to-day to confer with Commissioner Hermann in regard to the opening to settlement of eleven townships on the Red Lake reservation, near Thief River Falls. This land is the surplus remaining unallotted and Mr. Eddy proposes to have congress authorize that it shall be opened for settlement. He wants a special agent of the land office sent to Red Lake on which the land commissioner can base a recommendation to congress in the matter.

Representative Eddy is in favor of Commissioner Jones' new Indian policy. He thinks that all Indian should be allotted lands; that the Indian should not be given title in fee simple for some years thus preventing him from getting money for his land and squandering the proceeds. He believes that the policy of leasing allotments should be continued, but that the Indian agents approval of such leases should be final. The present plan of having these leases approved by the secretary, he says, causes great delays and in many instances causes the lessee considerable loss. Under the present law white men often make a lease, go ahead and take the land and put in a crop. When this is done the Indian changes his mind, action on the lease is suspended and the lessee loses his season's work and the Indian has his land broken ready to be worked by himself. If the law is changed to provide for approval by the agent this fraud on white men could be prevented.

Mr. Eddy is still opposed to the establishment of a national park in Minnesota. He bases his objection on the fact that no natural wonders are to be preserved and such action would only result in the preservation of good, merchantable timber, which is bound to deteriorate and valuable agricultural lands which ought to be thrown to settlement and cultivation.

If you want to file on a piece of government land it will not be necessary to go to Crookston Make your filing in Thief River Falls before L. G. Browning, U. S. commissioner for the district of Minnesota.

For a good turnout go to Joe Ryson's livery stable.

NELSON ON LANDS

He Wants Agricultural Lands Opened Up.

Washington, Nov. 30—Senator Nelson today called upon Indian Commissioner Jones and discussed the matter of the proposed opening of the agricultural lands on Red Lake and other reservations in Minnesota. No action can be taken on this subject by the commisioner of Indian affairs and it is not yet known what position Secretary Hitchcock will take before the close of the coming session. Senator Nelson makes a strong plea for the opening of these lands, and his ideas on the subject are backed by the sentiment in the state in favor of the disposition of these agricultural lands and opening up the country to settlers. The senator sees no connection between the lands in question and the controversies that have arisen in regard to the disposal of pine timber on the Chippewa reservations. Secretary Hitchcock, however, has taken the position that there will be no further movement by the department in regard to Chipdewa matters until a solution of the Indian timber problem has been reached by appropriate legislation in congress.

TERRIBLE DEATH.

A Three Year Old Child Burns to Death.

Word was brought in Saturday from Beard, one of the new postoffices in the Red Lake country of the burning to death of Ingebret Torgerson's three-year-old daughter there last Tuesday. Details are meagre, but it seems that the little one was playing in the fire at the stove when her dress caught in flames and she was frightfully burned before the fire was quenched. Everything was done to ease the unfortunate child's suffering, but death came to her relief about ten hours after the accident. It makes the occurance still more sad that her father was away from home at that time. The little girl was a niece of Amund Torgerson of Fosston.—Crookston Times.

Some people say that advertising does not pay, but the other day in Chicago one of the big department stores signed a contract for a page advertisement in the Tribune of that city every day except Sunday for which the firm agreed to pay $120,000. This is said to be the largest single newspaper contract ever made. Yet some people say that advertising does not pay.

Resume of the News.

Fresh
Reliable
Brief

From Washington.

Secretary Gage has received from an unknown person through the collector of customs at New York a conscience contribution of $18,669.

The collections of internal revenue for October amounted to $24,359,907, which is a decrease as compared with October, 1900, of $3,104,672.

Since July the treasury department surplus has increased $30,800,000. This is the largest increase in this length of time in the history of the republic.

William Gwyn, who for thirty years has served as chief messenger to the secretary of state in Washington, is dead. He had been in feeble health for some time, but persisted in sticking to his work.

The state department has received from Minister Conger translations of two imperial edicts providing for the establishment of schools throughout the Chinese empire and ordering the viceroys and governors to select and send students abroad to be educated in special branches of industrial science.

Another chairmanship will fall to the Minnesota delegation in the house the coming session of congress. Representative Tawney was chairman of the committee in the last congress which had to do with the legislation pertaining to the St. Louis fair, and it has been decided that this committee shall be made permanent.

The Washington asqueduct tunnel, commonly known as the Lydecker tunnel, work on which was begun twenty years ago and was suspended for ten years following 1888, when sensational discoveries of faulty construction work were made, has been put into operation. This reservoir will give fifteen feet of additional pressure in many parts of the district. The work will cost $3,000,000.

Senator Quarles of Wisconsin and Senator Nelson of Minnesota are very fortunate. They have been assigned committee rooms in the remodeled part of the capitol formerly occupied by the congressional library. These rooms, while removed from the senate chamber have been lavishly finished and equipped, embodying all of the latest improvements, and were eagerly sought by most senators.

Unfortunate Happenings.

The residence of J. C. Miller, on Zara street, Knoxville, Pa., was destroyed by fire, and his four daughters, ranging in age from eighteen to twenty-five, were burned to death. Mr. Miller and his wife were also badly burned in trying to rescue them. The fire was the result of the explosion of an oil can.

During a motor car race from Turin to Bologna, between the duke of Brussi and Signor Cotellitt, the machine of the former, while going at the rate of fifty miles an hour, came into collision with a mile stone. The car was smashed, but the duke escaped with trifling injuries.

Luytles Bros.' wholesale and retail grocery of St. Louis was burned, the loss reaching $75,000; insurance, partial. Four young women employes, were rescued from death from the fourth story by firemen, who carried them out in an insensible condition.

Jonestown, Miss., was practically destroyed by fire, fourteen stores and six residences being burned. The total loss will be about $75,000.

Personal Mention.

Rev. Dr. Davis H. Greer of New York, recently elected bishop of the new diocese of Western Massachusetts, has declined the honor.

Dr. James P. Jackson, aged fifty-seven years, prominent as a hospital surgeon in the service of Western railroads and for twenty years a leading practitioner in Kansas City, Mo., died at his home recently.

Judge Clarence Selah died at his home in O'Neill, Neb., of typhoid fever. He was a pioneer editor, having published papers at O'Neill and Ewing during the early history of the state. He was prominent in politics.

Prof. Christian Luecke died in Springfield, Ill., at the residence of his son, Rev. Martin Luecke, pastor of Trinity German Lutheran church in that city, aged seventy-four years. He had taught in Lutheran schools in New York, Cleveland, Milwaukee and Chicago.

Prof. Joseph Henry Thayer Bussey, professor of emeritus of the New Testament criticism and interpretation of Harvard university, is dead in his seventy-fourth year. Prof. Bussey had been connected with Harvard for many years, but retired last year.

FIRED FROM THE WOODS.

A Murder Mystery Is Being Unraveled.

Duluth, Nov. 28. — Nov. 16 Michael Hill, a prosperous Finnish farmer of Carlston county, was shot dead from ambush near his home, and yesterday Jacob France, a neighboring homesteader, was arrested by Detective Troyer of Duluth in one of the logging camps of Alger, Smith & Co., where he was working as a woodsman. France is charged with the murder of Hill, and he will be tried in Carlton county, where he was jailed yesterday. The arrest is based on the reported infatuation of France for Mrs. Hill. France knew the woman in Finland before coming to America. Mr. Hill preceded her several years, and when she came France followed her, leaving his own family behind. Hill is said to have discovered that France was madly in love with his wife, and had forbade him the house. Nov. 16 a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Hill was married to a Moose Lake man, and the occasion was celebrated in great style. During the afternoon of that day Hill was out in the yard, and a shot fired from the neighboring woods killed him.

MILTON HOWELL WILL NOT HANG.

Montana Governor Commutes Death Sentence.

Helena, Mont., Nov. 28. — Yesterday for the first time in several years a governor of Montana exercised his constitutional right and commuted a death sentence to life imprisonment in the state penitentiary. In response to petitions and letters from the judge who presided at the time, seven of the jury, a former and the present attorney general and many citizens of Fergus county, where the crime was committed, Gov. Toole commuted to life imprisonment the sentence of death that was to have been carried out Dec. 13 in the case of Milton Howell, who killed Thomas Rosling July 23, 1898. Since Howell's conviction some new evidence was discovered that he did not shoot Rosling in the back, as the state claimed at the time. Both men were ranch hands, working for neighboring, but unfriendly ranchmen, and they quarreled over an irrigation ditch.

CANAL FOR IOWA.

Proposal to Convert Des Moines River Into Road for Commerce.

Ottumwa, Iowa, Nov. 28. — A movement has been started here for the construction of a system of canals, using the Des Moines river from Keokuk to Des Moines. An appropriation from congress will be asked for the purpose. Arrangements are being completed to get an appropriation from the Iowa state legislature for a preliminary survey. It is proposed to transport freight as far as Des Moines, using barges and having them handled by tugs, in order that the scheme will not be objectionable on account of the many bridges between the two cities. The new system will open the corn and coal market of Iowa to the world and enable Iowa wholesalers to ship goods here to compete with Mississippi river points.

PASSED BOGUS CHECKS.

Two Men Arrested and Held to the Grand Jury.

Emmetsburg, Iowa, Nov. 28. — A couple of men giving their named as Frank Howard and Bush, came to town and passed several checks ranging from $6 to $11 on merchants here for dry goods, furnishing goods and money. The checks were signed P. K. Peterson, and were drawn on a bank at Cylinder. It has been discovered that the checks were bogus, and an information was sworn out for their arrest. They waived the preliminary examination and were held over to the grand jury, which convenes next week. They did not get much money, as most of the checks were exchanged for goods.

Washington Chat.

Special Correspondence.

It is probable that Senator Quarles of Wisconsin will furnish the senate committee with some interesting information and recommendations in regard to timber operations on the Minnesota and Wisconsin reservations. He insists that the operations of the past year in Minnesota should never be repeated, and that the large tracts of timber should be sold to the highest bidder and milled on the reservations, according to the policy adopted on the reservations in Northern Wisconsin.

After an investigation of the situation on the Minnesota reservation, Senator Quarles has changed the opinion which he entertained last winter in regard to the National park project.

"Last winter," said the senator, "when the hearings were held before the Indian committee in regard to the project for making a national park of the Chippewa reservation in Minnesota, I was impressed with the feasibility of the idea, and thought it would be practical and desirable. I spent some time on the reservation this summer, and traveled over it extensively. I reached the conclusion that the park project would not be practicable, and I should be opposed to having the lands utilized for that purpose. I am convinced that pine timber lands could not be reserved—and they are not fitted for park purposes. Most of the pine timber on these reservations has reached maturity and is beginning to die. Such timber should be utilized for lumber purposes. This dying timber increases the danger of forest fires, and the result would be that the timber would be consumed and the park rendered unsightly. The pine timber lands are not to be compared with hardwood timber lands for park purposes, and are in many ways unfitted for such purposes."

Developments are expected to follow as a result of the recent abrogation by Secretary Hitchcock of the Browning ruling. It is stated that the bureau of Catholic Indian missions will soon urge a proposition which will involve the payment of money from Indian trust funds to defray the expense of educating Indian children in sectarian schools. Father Ketcham, assistant director of the bureau, was a caller at the Indian office recently, and it is understood he had a conference with the officials on the subject. Temporarily, at least, the Indian office is committed to the policy of permitting Indians to send their children to schools which they select themselves.

"There is no doubt," said an official of the interior department, "that an effort will be made to divert Indian funds for the support of sectarian Indian schools. The abrogation of the Browning ruling is the first step in this direction, and will doubtless be followed by representations that the parent of an Indian pupil has the right to select the school his child shall attend; that portions of the tribal funds should be diverted to pay the expenses of such children as may attend the sectarian schools. It is our belief that the wisdom of again invoking the ruling will soon become apparent. The proposition that will undoubtedly soon be made as to the tribal trust funds is an important one. If adopted it would defeat the spirit of the policy of congress in withdrawing government aid to sectarian institutions. An effort was made to divert a part of the trust funds of the Menominee Indians of Wisconsin a few years ago in support of sectarian schools, but the proposal was rejected then, as it will be again, if the Indian bureau has its way."

The navy department is greatly embarrassed by the scarcity of commissioned officers and the lack of enlisted men. The placing in commission of the Cincinnati and the Rainbow have caused additional drafts upon the personnel to the extent that officers whose last cruise was ended not more than a year ago must again be assigned to duty on shipboard.

When the Olympia and Illinois are placed in commission, later, the list of available seagoing officers, practically, will be exhausted.

The time has come when there must be a rearrangement of the shore billets, and the scarcity of officers for duty on shore already is manifest.

The navy department is finding some difficulty in securing good men for the navy. This is not due to the fact that the navy is unpopular in any sense, but it comes from the condition which exists all over the country, where men who would be apt to go into the navy under ordinary circumstances are finding ready and profitable employment in all lines of trade. The prosperity of the country naturally affects recruiting in both army and navy, and with the small force at the disposal of the latter service, the disinclination to enlist in the navy is naturally felt.

Indian Commissioner Jones has prepared a reply to the recent letter of Fire Warden Andrews of Minnesota, concerning the preservation of the Indian forests of the state. No reference is made to the proposition to establish a national park on the Minnesota lands. Approval is expressed of that portion of Gen. Andrews' letter concerning the necessity of an adequate patrol to prevent forest fires, and to the recommendation that the cutting of timber be done on the progressive and scientific plans followed in Germany and other foreign countries. Such a policy is favored by the interior department officials, and will be adopted in future operations in Minnesota under the legislation which congress is expected to enact at the coming session.

Several personal letters from Mrs McKinley to friends in Washington recently passed through the hands of the local postoffice authorities. The letters were, of course, stamped. This calls to mind the fact that one of the first bills to be presented at the coming session of congress will give Mrs. McKinley's personal franking privilege, such as has been conferred upon the widows of deceased presidents. Mrs. Grant and Mrs. Garfield both enjoy such privilege, and Mrs. McKinley, undoubtedly, will be given the same postal franking right early in the coming session.

Weekly Market Letter.

The following market letter is furnished by Edwards, Wood & Co., grain and stock brokers, 8 Chamber of Commerce, Minneapolis, 310 Board of Trade, Duluth.

Nov. 26.—Influences which affected wheat last week were, heavy Western Primary receipts, reports of drouths in the winter wheat districts and lower cables. Bradstreet's estimated increase of over 10,000,000 bushels in the World's wheat supply compared with less than ing week the year before was a bear influence. Wheat continues to be dominated by the strength in coarse grains. Western Primary receipts of corn for the week were 2,387,000 bushels over 600,000 bushels more than for the week before, but December corn, nevertheless, gained nearly 3 cents and the May about 2 cents for the week. The demand for corn in the Southwest continues to be very strong. Oats were in very strong and active demand and the December option gained 3 cents and the May 2 1-2 cents for the week. The excited advance of oats on Saturday has caused by covering by December shorts. Western Primary receipts of wheat were 7,400,000 bushels for the week. Exports from seven principal ports were 189,000 barrels of flour and 1,560,000 bushels of wheat. On Monday of this week exports were 890,000 bushels. Western Primary receipts on Monday were also large being 1,600,000 bushels. The visible supply increased last week 3,2500,000 bushels.

Good rains were reported on Saturday from Dakota to the Gulf, but it is thought that enough has not fallen to do much good. Duluth flax declined sharply losing about 7 cents per bushel for the week. The decline continues to-day and November flax is now quoted at 133, December at 130 1-2, and May 135 1-3 as compared with 144, 140 1-2, 145 respectively for last Monday. Receipts of flax in the Northwest continues large.

Chicago, Dec. 1. — The story of a kidnapping forty-five years ago in the little town of Luebecke, Minden province, Germany, was yesterday related to Acting Chief of Detectives Rohan. The police department was asked to help find the victim of the abductors. If alive the victim is fifty years old. His aged mother has not seen him in almost that length of time. If alive he will be the heir to a large fortune left at the death of his mother's second husband. It was forty-five years ago when John F. Zimmerman, five years old, was kidnapped while asleep. The affair created much excitement in the little village. Responsibility was placed upon a brother of Mrs. Zimmerman's first husband. The country was searched without success, and finally the quest was given up. Years passed but nothing was heard by the mother from her son. Recently the boy's stepfather died, leaving a large estate, half of which he bequeathed to his stepson if alive.

WILL FIGHT REDS

VEST AND JENKINS TALK ABOUT PLANS TO WIPE OUT ANARCHY.

MOVEMENT IS NON-PARTISAN

SENATOR VEST BURIES CONVICTION OF A LIFETIME TO TAKE LEAD.

FOUL BLOT MUST BE WIPED OUT

REPRESENTATIVE JENKINS DEEPLY INTERESTED IN THE MATTER.

Washington, Nov. 30.—There will be a prompt movement in congress looking to the stamping out of anarchists. It will be a non-partisan movement, and headed by a veteran legislator who buries the convictions of a lifetime on the subject of state rights in order to aid in the effort to remove the blot from the nation's record.

Early in the session a resolution will be offered by Senator Vest of Missouri calling upon the committee on the judiciary of the senate to furnish all laws known in this country on the subject of anarchy and its doctrines. This will be done as a action. Senator Vest believes that nothing effective can be accomplished without an amendment to the federal Constitution.

"This is not a question upon which parties may divide" said Senator Vest. "I am an old-fashioned states rights man and would naturally be inclined to think that it is the province of the states to enact legislation suited to stamp out anarchists within their borders. But this is a national question and can only be reached properly by a constitutional amendment. It is amazing to reflect upon the fact that if President McKinley had been only seriously wounded or perhaps paralyzed for life, by the ball striking the spine, it would have been only possible, under the laws of New York, to punish the assassin by imprisonment for ten years. Then the assassin would have been liberated, to become a hero among the members of the anarchist brood. Such a condition of affairs and the peril which surrounds men in high places demand the prompt and vigorous assertion of the majesty of law. We have followed England in many things and we might go further and adopt her policy for founding a penal colony and deport such criminals as those who assail law and government itself."

Jenkins Takes It Up.

Representative Jenkins of Chippewa Falls, Wis., who is a member of the house committee on judiciary, to-day spent several hours at the department of justice in conference with the officials concerning plans for the suppression of anarchy. Judge Jenkins expresses the opinion that this evil cannot be reached by amendments to the immigration laws. He says Booth, Guiteau and Czolgosz were native-born Americans, and that the enactment of stringent immigration laws will at best only be one of the measures to be adopted to suppress anarchy. He is of the opinion that the most effective means for this country to adopt, is to co-operate with foreign countries in deporting anarchists to a penal colony. The law should be so drafted as to prevent the violent abuse of organized forms of society by such agitators as Goldman, Most and others. Representative Jenkins will have charge of the bill, in the house, proposing to create a national bureau of identification. If passed, such a bureau would be most effective in exercising a general surveillance of anarchists. This legislation has been approved by the chiefs of police of the United States. Its purpose is to establish a bureau here which shall keep a complete record of all criminals in this country.

CAINE TAKEN TO TASK.

Hall Displeases His Club by Speaking in Complimentary Terms of Catholics.

London, Nov. 30.—According to the Daily Mail the National club of London, one of whose rules obliges its members to support and promote protestantism, as embodied in the articles of the Church of England, has fallen foul of Hall Caine, the novelist and member of the House of Keys of the Isle of Man, who is a member of the club, for opening a Roman Catholic bazaar on the Isle of Man and making a speech in which he spoke approvingly of the Roman Catholic church and referred to the pope as his holiness and holy father. The committee of the club has been summoned to consider the matter, and a resolution has been passed denouncing Mr. Caine's conduct and demanding an explanation from him. If the explanation is unsatisfactory the rules prescribe resignation or expulsion.

GATES COUNTY STANDS.

Wisconsin Supreme Court So Decides the Case.

Madison, Wis., Nov. 30.—The supreme court has sustained the act of the legislature creating Gates county. The opponents of the law claimed the law was unconstitutional because it contravened the appointment law of 1901, which went into effect before the Gates county law, the latter breaking county lines in the formation of assembly districts. The apportionment gave to Chippewa county two assembly districts. Gates county was created out of a portion of the second Chippewa county district, thus making an assembly district which consisted of one county and part of another.

CREATES A SENSATION.

Nephew of the Pope Attends a Foreign Function.

Rome, Nov. 30.—Much excitement has been caused in Roman society over the presence of Count Camillo Pecci, a nephew of the pope, at the Thanksgiving reception held here yesterday by George von L. Meyer, United States ambassador to Italy. This is the first occasion when a relative of the pontiff has been present at any ceremony given by the representative of a foreign power. The wife of Count Camillo Pecci is a Cuban, but this fact is not regarded as sufficient explanation for this innovation.

JUROR'S DEATH INTERRUPTS.

Des Moines, Nov. 30. — In the United States district court yesterday the Balliett jury was dismissed, owing to the death of one of its members. The contending sides in the case could not agree as to trying it before the eleven remaining jurors. The case was continued until next term.

Balliett is the owner of the White Swamp mine at Kaer, Or., and is accused by the United States with having used the mails to further a fraudulent scheme by which he sold stock to the amount of a quarter of a million dollars.

THE THIEF RIVER FALLS NEWS.

VOL. XVIII. THIEF RIVER FALLS, MINN., THURSDAY, DECEMBER 12, 1901. NUMBER 49.

$18,000 BUILDING

The Proposed New School Building.

IT SHOULD BE BUILT.

More School Room Badly Needed.

The school board held an important meeting Monday evening and as will be noticed by an item in another column have called a special school meeting for Saturday evening, December 28 between the hours of 7:30 and 8:30. The meeting is called for the purpose of voting bonds to the amount of $18,000 to be be used to purchase a site and construct an eight room brick school house. The site selected by the school board is block 65 of the original townsite, and it is understood that this can be purchased for $2000, although the school board sets the price af purchase at not to exceed $2,500--which is very cheap for this property.

The action is taken by the school board at this time for various reasons. The need of more school room is a problem which has confronted the board since last spring and which will soon have to be settled. At present one store room and two rooms over the city hall are being used for school purposes places that are entirely unfit for this purpose—while a large number of pupils are refused admission to the public schools simply because there is not room to accommodate them. The city is rapidly filling up with new residents, and unless some action is taken now, so that work on the school building can be commenced early next spring and completed before the first term of school commences next fall, the situation will become more critical, and many desirable people will refuse to take up their residence here. The cost of the proposed building complete is $18,000, and Thief River Falls with all its wealth surely can afford to construct it and ornament the city. The bonds are not to be paid until fifteen years and the interest is only five per cent, making the total amount due each year $900. The city now receives state high school aid to the amount of $400 a year, and the superintendent of of public instruction has informed the local school board that in case a suitable high school is built the amount will be increased to $1,000 per year or $600 more than at present, nearly enough to pay the interest on the entire proposed bond issue. But the school board figure that the cost of renting buildings and additional heating expense amounts to more than $300 a year, and that in the long run it will be much cheaper to build.

Of course there will be those who will object to the site that the school board has selected and will vote against the bonds for that reason, but in this connection it might be as well to state that there would be objections to any site that could be selected. The board cannot build a school house in everyone's back yard. There is plenty of room for a large play grounds; the price paid is reasonable, and it will be situated in a conspicuous place where it will be seen by all visitors to the city, and make a favorable impression. The site is not the first choice of the NEWS, but we are not going to oppose the bond issue on that account, and we hope that all the citizens of Thief River Falls will be public spirited and magnanimous enough to support the project. Let us work and build up Thief River Falls.

A Communication.

To Whom It May Concern: There has been some persons making themselves very conspicious talking about me taking wood from the school house in this city and using it. I want to say right here that whoever told this is a liar, and if anyone takes exception to this let them come to me and not do any talking behind my back.

G. E. Lipscomb.

A Needed Convenience.

The First State bank has made arrangements to put in a number of safety deposit boxes for the convenience of those who have valuable papers, jewelry, etc. The cost of a box will be about $2 per year and it will undoubtedly be appreciated by the public.

The Merry Christmas

Season is fast approaching. It entails many extra purchases for the comfort and pleasure of those at home and abroad. Would it not be wise economy to purchase goods and articles that represent value, and one also ornamental and useful, instead of something trashy or out-of-date? We have many articles that are very suitable for this season's trade. Call and examine them, and prove whether or not this store practices what it preaches.

THE NEEDS OF THE KITCHEN are many also, and our well known grocery department is stocked to the fullest with fresh goods. There is not a shelf worn article in the lot. In fact, as we have said before, everybody, dealers and buyers, admit the superiority of the famous HOME BRAND grocery. If you don't know them, ask your neighbor who uses them. A first class article of coffee, tea, spices, canned goods, etc., can always be found in our store.

GERMANTOWN.

Married, Dec. 7th Miss Minnie Anderson and George Wold. The ceremony was performed by Justice Olson at the home of the bride's father.

Judge Watts and clerk of Court Mourk were in town Dec. 5th and 6th to issue citizens papers. They issued eighty-nine second papers and two first papers.

L. G. Browning U. S. Land Commissioner of Thief River Falls was in town Thursday and Friday and was kept busy transacting business with his office.

John Havel, Editor of the Eastern Marshall County News, was in town last week securing subscribers for his papers.

U. S. Land Commissioner Clark of Rollis was in town for a short time on Thursday.

Mr. and Mrs. D. Dorr gave dancing party to their friends Wednesday evening. All spent an enjoyable evening.

PRAISE HIM

A Correspondent at Germantown Lauds Judge Watts.

Germantown Dec. 8th 1901.—In compliance with the request of the settlers in this locality Judge Watts spent a couple of days at this place, for the purpose of issuing citizen papers, nearly one hundred persons taking advantage of this opportunity obtained their second papers thereby saving the time and expense of a trip to Crookston with their witnesses. The Judges kindness in this matter is highly appreciated by this community as well as by those who were immediately benefitted. It is a rare occurrence now days to see a public officer devote so much of his time his own expense and without expecting or getting any remuneration. The parties benefitted by the Judges disinterested act are the men that under great disadvantages are developing the resources of this section of the public domain and any thing done to help them is of benefit to all.

Can't "Skip" School.

Boys who "skip" school should beware. Last winter the legislature passed a law making the offense of systematic "skipping" punishable by commitment to the state school. The law provides that upon the approval of the board of education pupils who make a habit of staying away from school and who will not mend their ways after the truant officer has done what he can to persuade them to do so shall be made wards of the state if convicted in court and sent to Red Wing, and the first case under the new law was tried in Minneapolis on Saturday the youth in question being sent to Red Wing.—Brainered Dispatch.

From One Kernel.

To the unthinking mind it may seen marvelous, but a single kernal of wheat planted at the Minnesota experimental station in 1892 has increased and multiplied each year since then so that its direct product was sufficient this season to seed 15,000 acres. Not only that, but its breed has been so developed that its yield averages 1.4 bushels more per acre than ordinary wheat, or a total of 21,000 more bushels of wheat than any ordinary scrub lot of seed would have produced with the same care and on the same land.

NO INQUEST

Was Held Over the Remains of Brown.

Coronor Blair was up from Red Lake Falls last week to view the remains of E. Brown, whose body was found in the Red lake river, about a mile north of St. Hilaire. No request was held, as it did not appear that he met a violent death.

Brown was last seen alive on the evening of October 3rd. He was then in an intoxicated condition and it is thought that he fell in the river by accident.

The funeral services were held last Friday.

TONIGHT

Royal Neighbors to Give an Oyster Supper.

The Royal Neighbors will give an oyster supper and bargain bazzar in the Odd Fellows hall this evening. A good supper and excellent entertainment is promised all who attend.

Full supper with oysters, will be 35 cents; without oysters, 15 cents

The rport of the secretary of the interior shows that about 20 per cent of the men enlisted to do battle with the Spaniards in the late war have filed claims for pensions. In one volunteer regiment out of a total enlistment of 990 officers and men 477 claims for disability are now on file. At this rate more than half the Spanish war soldiers will shortly be added to the list of pensioners. No such a mania for pensions followed the great civil war, and probably this one is due to the activity of pension attorneys who are anxious to fill their own pockets with fees, and who venemously abuse all who stand in the way of their greed.—Duluth News Tribune.

Postmaster Arrested.

Fergus Falls, Minn., Dec. 7.—Nathaniel Head, who was postmaster on the Red Lake reservation until a short time ago, was brought to this city this morning to await the action of the federal grand jury on a charge of embezzling $800. The postoffice inspector is said to have found his account short this amount when he came to check up.

SHAW'S PURE MALT.—Its value in sickness has been tried and proven. In the home it is not safe to be without it. Absolutely pure sold by John Morgan Thief River Falls Minnesota.

SOME STOCK

Theo. Dangerfield Returns from Iowa With a Fine Lot.

Theodore Dangerfield, of Germantown, one of the progressive young settlers of Eastern Marshall county, who recently proved up on his claim, has just returned from a trip to Iowa, where he went to buy cattle to put on his ranche. He returned with two car loads of young cattle, consisting of 84 head of two year old thoroughbred and grade Hereford heifers and two bulls of the same breed. Mr. Dangerfield is a thoroughly progressive stockman, and has explicit confidence in this section of the country for stock raising. The herd is a fine lot, a fact which all who saw them in this city can testify to, but Mr. Dangerfield is not yet satisfied, and he is now in the market for one or two of the best animals of this grade to head his herd and none but the best will satisfy him.

If more of our farmers would follow his example in the way of improving their stock and caring for them, it would greatly add to their profits. With the natural advantages of this section and intelligent handling of the venture, his success is assured.

The only thing to be regretted is that there are not more men of Mr. Dangerfield's stamp farming around here.

If you have a farm for sale call on the Northern Real Estate & Mortgage Co. Office next First State Bank.

USE MINNESOTA PLAN.

Montana Will Follow Gopher State's Lead in Method of Securing Exhibits.

Helena, Mont., Dec. 7.—The commission recently appointed by Gov. Toole to devise ways and means for raising money for a state exhibit at the Louisiana Purchase exposition has decided to adopt what is known as the "Minnesota plan." This scheme was suggested by T. C. Kurtz of Helena, formerly a member of the Minnesota world's fair commission. It was decided to raise a fund of $25,000 for the preliminary work of erecting a building at St. Louis and the collection of exhibits. The amount will be apportioned to the various counties, according to their assessed valuations, the legislature to be depended upon to reimburse them later. Among those working side by side in the meeting were Millionaire Charles W. Clark and Millionaire F. Augustus Heinze of Butte, whose mining interests in Butte have been clashing for some time.

INDIANS FINED.

Red Game Poachers Treated Like White Violators.

Edgemont, S. D., Dec. 7.—The Black Hills people for a number of years past have been greatly put out by the poaching for game by the reservation Indians. A large band of Sioux recently got permission from the agent to gather tepee poles in the southern portion of the Hills, and for pastime began shooting deer. Sheriff Miller, with deputies, went after them and captured nine bucks who had game in their possession. They were taken before the police judge and fined $10 and costs each. The Indians are still in this city trying to raise their fines by selling their horses. This is the first time the state game laws have been enforced against the Indians, and it is expected that it will be a lesson to them.

IS CAPTURING PRIZES DAILY.

Minnesota Comes Nobly to the Front at the Show.

Chicago, Dec. 7. — Minnesota has come to the front in the international live stock exposition. The state has thus far captured fifty-two prizes, and the dead meat classes have not yet been judged. Much disappointment was expressed at the result of the sales, the prices being much lower than last year. In some cases the steers brought less money than an ordinary year. Peter Hopley got $9 per hundred, the highest price of the day, for fifteen Angus animals, which went to Swift & Co. The average price of the entire sale was about $7—less than the market price of steers of the same quality.

VALUABLE TIN VEIN FOUND.

Custer County, S. D., Has Rich Deposit of Metal.

Custer, S. D., Dec. 7. — A very rich vein of tin ore has been discovered near this city by James Demereau, the width being about six feet. Large blocks of ore carrying casiterite have been taken out, which are the richest ever found in the Hills. The property is to be opened up immediately, and a deep shaft is to be sunk to ascertain the extent of the find. Several other discoveries of tin ore have recently been made in Custer county.

KEEPERS OF INSANE.

Wisconsin Asylum Managers Elect Officers.

La Crosse, Wis., Dec. 7.—The Association of Trustees and Superintendents of County Asylums of Wisconsin elected the following officers: President, J. E Coffland, Richland Center; vice president, W. H. Smith, Eau Claire; secretary, Ross C. Grignon, Kaukauna; treasurer, T. D. Wheeler, Hudson. The next convention will be held at Oshkosh in 1902.

Many Old Settlers There.

New Richmond, Wis., Dec. 7. — The largest attendance at a semi-annual Old Settlers' meeting in the history of that organization was held at the opera house yesterday. Many new members were added. The local body was aided by the ladies of New Richmond, who rendered a splendid program, serving a free turkey dinner and an oyster supper. The next meeting will be in Hudson in June.

Young Priest Promoted.

Winona, Minn., Dec. 7. — Rev. H. Sherlock of Ireland, a young priest who recently completed his studies, has been appointed assistant in St. Thomas' pro-cathedral in this city. Rev. P. J. Gallagher, rector. It is understood that as soon as La Mollle is made a mission of the pro-cathedral his duties will be divided between this church and the church at that place.

Rear-End Collision.

Dickinson, N. D., Dec. 7.—Engineer Pat Needham was seriously injured in a wreck near here. He was running his engine light to Lehigh for coal cars, following the regular east-bound freight. The freight broke in two and before he could slow down his engine crashed into the caboose. The trainmen were all on the forward section and thus escaped death.

For Advancement of Deadwood.

Deadwood, S. D., Dec. 7.—A petition is being circulated among the business men asking for the organization of a club to promote the interests of Deadwood. The initiation fee is to be $5, with monthly dues of $2. This organization will take the place of the old Deadwood Commercial club.

Charges Not Sustained.

Kenosha, Wis., Dec. 7. — Ald. Peter Pierch and Albert Smith, accused of receiving bribes from Gustavus L. Clausen of Chicago for voting for the passage of an ordinance granting to Haynes & Clausen a street railway franchise, were discharged by Commissioner Baner yesterday.

Arrested on Serious Charge.

Fargo, N. D., Dec. 7.—Fred Koors, a youth who has been employed in a restaurant here, has been arrested on the charge of having taken two young girls to Barnesville, Minn., where he endeavored to have them become inmates of disorderly houses.

Killed by Fall Down Stairs.

Ruthton, Minn., Dec. 7.—Ole T. Bly, a farmer living four miles east of here, was accidentally killed. He fell down a flight of stairs, receiving injuries from which he died in a few minutes.

BIG IRON TRUST

ONE BEING PLANNED WITH EIGHT HUNDRED MILLION CAPITAL.

H. C. FRICK TELLS ALL ABOUT IT

WILL DEVELOP UNOPENED MINES IN LAKE SUPERIOR AND OTHER REGIONS.

NOT TO COMBAT STEEL TRUST

LARGE EXTENT OF IRON LAND HAS BEEN SECURED AROUND DULUTH.

Chicago, Dec. 6.—Plans are on foot for the organization of another gigantic trust, to be capitalized at $800,000,000, and to be known as the United States Steel and Iron company, according to the announcement made by H. C. Frick of New York, who is stopping at the Auditorium Annex.

The object of the new company as stated by Mr. Frick is to develop unopened mines in the Lake Superior region, Pennsylvania and Tennessee, and to engage in the manufacture of billet, rails, pig iron and bars. Mr. Frick denied any attempt to combat the present steel trust and declared the intention of the new corporation to be simply to supply steel and iron at existing prices. Mr. Frick said:

"A large number of prominent steel manufacturers and large companies are interested in the new organization. In fact, it includes most of the companies who are at present outside the United States Steel corporation. We have the support of the Columbus Iron and Steel company, the Sharon Steel and Iron company, the Tennessee Steel and Iron company, and the National Structural Tubing company. Rufus K. Polk, a member of congress, is with us, as is also John D. Rockefeller.

"A large extent of iron ore land has already been secured in the neighborhood of Duluth, and more iron and coal mines will be secured in Pennsylvania and Tennessee. Iron and steel will occupy the entire attention of the organization and no attempt will be made to operate any copper lands in the neighborhood of the Lake Superior holdings. The new company is to be organized under the laws of New Jersey. All that the new company will attempt to do in the market will be to meet the prices of the corporations already in the field."

FATAL COLLISION.

Three Persons Killed and Thirty-Eight Injured.

Malvern, Ark., Dec. 7. — Three persons killed and thirty-eight injured is the result of a head-end collision between two passenger trains on the St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern railroad one and a half miles south of here, at 6:32 o'clock last evening. The two trains were No. 3, known as the St. Louis fast mail, south-bound, leaving St. Louis at 3 a. m., and No. 14, known as the Little Rock and Eldorado passenger, north-bound, due in Little Rock at 8 p. m. Train No. 3 was to meet No. 14 at Malvern, but the latter train was late and No. 3 moved ahead expecting to meet the other train at the next station. A mile and a half south of Malvern the two trains collided. The engineers of both trains jumped to save their lives. The two engines were wrecked and the colored coach next to the baggage car on the south-bound train was badly smashed. It was crowded with colored emigrants en route from North Carolina, Georgia and Alabama to Texas. The smoking car of the north-bound train was badly damaged and most of its occupants were injured, but the rear coaches on this train did not suffer. The dead and injured were brought here as soon as possible to receive medical attention.

WHOLESALE LYNCHING.

Possible Result of the Killing of a White Man in Alabama.

Andalusia, Ala., Dec. 7. — Sheriff Bradshaw returned to Andalusia yesterday with twenty-two negroes who are accused of complicity in the killing of J. W. Dorsey, a merchant, and Fate Atkinson, city marshal at Opp Wednesday evening. The negroes brought in were chased with bloodhounds and captured by the sheriff and his posse. There is great excitement and some fear that the friends of the dead white men will attempt a wholesale lynching. The sheriff landed the negroes safely in jail here and has taken precautions to resist the mob in case one is formed.

BIG CAPTURE OF BOERS.

Two Hundred and Fifty Prisoners Taken by the British.

Pretoria, Dec. 7. — The largest captures of Boers made in many months occurred yesterday when three columns secured an aggregate of 250 prisoners. Gen. Bruce Hamilton, near Ermelo; Maj. Dawkins in the Waterbury district and Gen. Methuen in Northwest Transvaal rounded up three laagers with only a few casualties on either side.

ROOSEVELT ON CANVAS.

Russian Artist to Paint a Portrait of the President.

Washington, Dec. 7. — Commissioner Makovsky, the Russian artist whose works have gained for him recognition from connoisseurs in this country and Europe, has been engaged to paint the president's portrait.

WILL BE A BENEFIT.

Meeting of Dairymen's Association Will Give Impetus to Growth.

Sauk Center, Minn., Dec. 7. — The coming meeting of the state dairymen's association, which is to be held here Dec. 10, 11 and 12, bids fair to be a very interesting one. A large attendance is expected, and among them some of the most noted men in the state. This industry this far north is in its infancy, and it is thought that this meeting will lend impetus to the progress of the industry.

Weekly Market Letter.

The following market letter is furnished by Edwards, Wood & Co., Grain Commission Brokers, 8 Chamber of Commerce, Minneapolis, 310 Board of Trade, Duluth:

Dec. 4.—Last week's grain market was quiet and steady until on Friday, when an advance began, which has reached 4c per bushel for wheat; 4 3-8c per bushel for Chicago corn; 3 7-8c for Chicago oats.

The news for the week was the same as it has been: Large primary receipts of wheat with good cash demand; small receipts of coarse grains, with a large demand and advancing prices; continued dry weather in the Southwest. The advance is based on large buying by the country, continued drought in the Southwest, and higher cables. There was a decrease in receipts on Monday and Tuesday of this week, with a decrease of nearly 3,000,000 bushels in the amount on ocean passage, and small deliveries on December contracts have also helped. An increase of 3,500,000 bushels in the world's visible supply has been ignored. This week wheat has shown great strength, independent of corn, and has led the advance. Western primary receipts of wheat were about 7,000,000 bushels for the week. Exports were 6,117,000 bushels. According to Bradstreet, the world's visible supply of wheat has increased 22,125,000 bushels in the last three weeks. Primary receipts from July 1 to Nov. 25, aggregated 144,000,000 bushels, and exports for the same time were 128,000,000 bushels. Exports of corn since July 1 are but 19,250,000 bushels, compared with 74,333,000 bushels for the same period last year. Receipts of corn are very small. The steady advance in price signally justifies all predictions made in these letters during the past month. Minneapolis May wheat is now quoted at 76 5-8c; May flax, $1.44 1-2; Chicago May corn and outs, 68 1-2 and 46c, respectively. We think wheat high enough for the present. Advise purchases on any material decline.

FARM AND GARDEN.

MATTERS OF INTEREST TO AGRICULTURISTS.

Some Up-to-Date Hints About Cultivation of the Soil and Yields Thereof—Horticulture, Viticulture and Floriculture.

The Agricultural Department of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition.

In the Agricultural Department of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition the agriculture of the past and of countries other than the United States will be shown, and the agriculture of the Indians and of frontier and ranch life. The Experiment station is a modern institution of great influence and will have a prominent place here for the display of agricultural geology, physics, chemistry and biology, physiology of plant and animal life and meteorology. Soils will be classified by their characters and by regions, systems of tillage and the rotation of crops will be shown, drainage and irrigation systems will be illustrated and the subject of fertilizers and their application will be treated in a way to be understood by the inquirer. Agriculture and its relation to stock raising constitutes another attractive branch of the subject.

Perhaps more interesting than all is that subdivision which will treat of the farmer, his comfort and advancement shown by the home and the architecture of all the farm buildings, the machinery, tools and appliances, and the systems which he employs in the management of the farm. The condition of the farmer past and present may thus be shown, bringing to attention the history and development of farming, the relation of farming to other industries, the allotment of lands in new countries and effect of transportation systems upon farming.

Farm engineering will embrace the laying out and improvement of farm lands, local irrigation and drainage, drain tiles, fences, gates, roads, bridges, windmills, motors, etc. Farm architecture will include plans and pictures of typical farm houses, cottages and tenements of many localities, farm barns, stables and folds, granaries, tool and wagon houses, hot houses, poultry houses, apiaries, cocooneries and kennels.

Feeding Wheat.

Press Bulletin 75, Oklahoma experiment station: Feeding wheat to farm animals is not a novelty to the farmers who passed through the years of '93, '94 and '95 in this country, as many thousand bushels were fed during that time. Due to a very severe drouth which has caused almost a total failure of corn the farmer now has the choice of feeding wheat, of which he fortunately has plenty; or letting his stock go without grain. At 57 cents per bushel, wheat is by far the cheapest grain within his reach, and if the price of fat stock is maintained it can be fed with profit if the proper methods are followed. The feeder has the advantage of the experience gained from '93 and '94 and any one not familiar with them should get them as they have been widely published in reports and papers.

The value of wheat for hog food has been demonstrated by practical feeders and the experiment stations. Pound for pound it is equal or slightly superior to corn when properly fed. A bushel of wheat will produce from 12 to 15 pounds of pork when fed to thrifty shoats. Grinding at five cents per bushel pays well, since, when fed whole and dry, about one-fourth passes through the hog undigested. Soaking does not lessen this materially, although the results are some better. Feeding sheaf wheat to fattening hogs has not proven economical, but with pigs and stock hogs on a light grain feed it is practiced with good results.

Little definite information is on record in feeding wheat to cattle, although hundreds have been so fed with good results. In the few experiments at experiment stations in this line, wheat has been fed mixed with other grain. When fed this way it has given results fully equal to corn. At the Ohio station steers fed on a mixture of wheat meal and bran, required 6.7 pounds of grain to produce a pound of gain. At the Kansas station twelve steers fed on wheat meal for 63 days required 5.72 pounds of grain for each pound of gain. This is 10.5 pounds of beef from a bushel of wheat. The 63 days were the first part of the feeding period. When the grain fed was limited in amount the steers ate it well without getting off feed. A thousand pound steer should not be fed over 16 to 18 pounds of wheat meal per day, as wheat will surfeit a steer more readily than corn meal. Ground is the only condition in which to feed wheat to cattle, and better results will be obtained with this if it can be mixed with bran or cotton seed meal. Wheat meal makes good feed for dairy cattle, but should be fed with alfalfa, bran, cotton seed or cotton seed meal, for the best results. With sheep wheat feeding has been very successful, as the grain gives the best results when fed whole and dry, and the cost of preparation is saved. At the Michigan experiment station wheat fed to lambs returned 100 pounds of gain for each 653 pounds of grain fed.

Opinions differ much on the merits of wheat as a horse feed. Due to improper methods of feeding, many poor results have followed, but this should not detract from its worth for this purpose. Whole dry wheat cannot be fed to horses with good results, especially to work or driving horses. Soaking it improves it some, but grinding is by far the best method of preparing it for horses, but if it is fed as an exclusive feed, even in this condition, care will be necessary to avoid colic at times. Much better results will be obtained by mixing half bran, oats or corn with the wheat or mixing it with chopped feed. The composition of wheat is such that for the animal to make the best use of it some food rich in protein must be added. Cotton seed meal can be used in most cases for this purpose. When corn or wheat is 25 to 30 cents per bushel this consideration has not much importance, but with the present prices the saving made by balancing up the ratio will be considerable. There will be considerable question as to how wheat will pay out this year when fed to fattening stock, but there can be no question but that it will pay to feed it to growing and breeding stock rather than to sacrifice them or let them suffer and deteriorate.

Fertility in Dirty Water.

Prof. R. H. Forbes, of the Arizona Experiment Station, has this to say of the fertilizing value of river water: The alluvial silts which are always carried, in greater or less quantity, in river waters, although they detract from their agreeableness, are second in irrigating value only to the water itself. In wild country, undisturbed by *the operations of man, and still cov*ered with its natural vegetation, the quantity of silt contributed to running streams is comparatively small, and consists largely of materials eroded from steeper slopes. But when forests and grassy plains are overrun with sheep and cattle, when the grasses are destroyed and the surface is ground to powder by trampling herds, when the rainfall begins to gully the depleted range and carry the debris into the rivers, the quantity of mud carried in irrigating streams becomes very much greater. Its quality, also must be affected by the stock-manure swept into the drainage from the surface of the ranges.

Now, just as the deposit of mud resulting from the annual overflow of the Nile accounts for the fertility of the Egyptian lowlands; so do the rich silts deposited upon irrigated lands in Arizona account, in large part, for their constantly increasing productiveness. The two most valuable constituents of our river silts are nitrogen and organic matter, being precisely the elements of fertility deficient in our burned-out arid region soils. The addition and incorporation of these deficient materials is largely responsible for the well-known improvement by irrigation of desert lands.

The fertilizing value of these river silts to an irrigated district may be judged when it is stated that, for the year ending August 1, 1900, the mud deposited on the irrigated lands of Salt river valley, valued at commercial rates for fertilizers, amounted to about one million dollars, or, not far from eight dollars per acre for the valley. Considered as an investment, this eight dollars of value, which is disregarded in the cost of the water returns with increase in the resulting crops.

Facts on Hog Feeding.

Young animals will give more gain for the same amount of feed than will older animals. There is no advantage in farmers carrying along their animals with just enough feed to keep them alive. It is not wise to have the hogs on scant feed either summer or winter. Swill and milk will not work well with silage, that combination making an unbalanced ration. During the winter season some of our best feeders make corn one-third to one-half of the ration, using swill with ground peas and oats for the balance of the ration. One feeder that we know of makes his swill of milk and middlings, making a thin mixture. Into a barrel of this is thrown a shovelful of hardwood ashes.

Corn Crop Value, 1900.

The leading corn states last year produced that cereal to the values noted below:

Burning of Family Plunder.

Election night I skirmished about the lower districts to see the sights, and one of the most interesting was the burning of family plunder. From time immemorial almost it had been the custom in the old wards for the mistress of the house to use election night as the occasion for a general cleaning out of the lumber-room. All the worthless trash that has collected in the closets and corners is then cast into the street to be destroyed in bonfires. At other times the police exercise a strict surveillance.

Natural Breeding

(From the Farmers' Review.)

It is too commonly held by the average farmer that the breeding of "fine" stock as he terms it is beyond the reach and purse of his class. By fine stock he of course means pedigreed, registered stock, and his idea of such animals is that they are difficult to find, difficult to raise and maintain in their original excellence, and costly. He makes the mistake of thinking that no stock is fine unless possessed of pedigrees which will allow it to enter in the respective stud or herd book of its kind. Let us say for his benefit that "all is not gold that glitters;" all stock is not really fine by reason of the mere fact that it is pedigreed. Live stock properly produced from reasonable mating of excellent animals may be indeed excellent in most respects or only fall short of perfection on account of some admixture of blood or slight diversion from a straight line in breeding which renders it ineligible to record. At the same time thousands of poor specimens of pedigreed cattle, horses, sheep and swine are annually produced and retained for breeding purposes which should by rights be castrated or rejected for breeding service. The pedigree is not always proof positive of excellence. It may and is reasonably certain to prove that pure blood is prepotent above that of the scrub animal and often explains the power of an apparent scrub possessed of a pedigree to beget progeny greatly excelling the parent in every good point and particular. But nowadays the pedigreed animal is no longer in demand unless he or she possess not only pure blood but the apparent evidences of superior excellence in every respect as the result of long continued breeding in the same direction and purity. In other words the pedigreed animal must carry its pedigree upon its back, as has been well said by a practical man who looked more to present gain than future possibilities. Really fine stock can be easily produced by any careful, persevering farmer and at a small outlay of cash if he follows natural methods of breeding. To him the main object should be to produce practical beasts for immediate returns in flesh, wool, work, etc. It is rarely his province or power to compete successfully with the "big breeder" in the production of pedigreed animals for sale as breding stock. He should rest content with the attempt, which will usually succeed, to improve his home animals up to a point of similar excellence when compared with pedigreed stock. This he can do in comparatively short time by selecting all of his best breeding females, of a similar type and character and then mating them to a pure bred female that in every respect meets his approval as a representative of the breed which is his choice for breed excellence and his ideal as to individual excellence. Starting with this foundation he should then breed in a natural manner and by that term we mean breed without regard to family or pedigree so long as no departure is made from the breed originally selected to improve the home herd, stud or flock. If this be year after year followed patiently, ever seeking when the time comes to purchase a new male to select an animal of the same breed and type and character and individual excellence steady progress will be made in building up a collection of farm animals which will return good profits from food utilized. They will prove far more profitable than scrub stock, they will return better and surer profits for the average farmer than pedigreed stock kept for the sake of pedigree alone, and will form a legacy worth handing on to the next generation of farmers. Natural breeding forsakes the old idea that the same family lines must be closely followed and stuck to and seeks everywhere for ideal breeding animals of ideal type to continue the work of procreation in a given herd. By natural breeding the good qualities of the animals is maintained and the weakening effects of in-and-in breeding and even closely followed line-breeding avoided. Natural breeding is usually used as a term to describe such breeding of pure bred animals only, but as truly applies in our opinion to sensible methods of building up herds of farm animals of grand excellence for all practical purposes. Another fine point possessed by these naturally bred, high-grade animals is that they furnish at all times the very finest foundation stock on the female side for crossing to bulls of other breeds for the production of cross-bred feeders; this work to be done of course by others than the breeders of high-grade females.

A prominent dairyman of Illinois says that it is a mistake to describe any one kind of a silo and say that is the one that all men should build. The material that should go into a silo in Alaska is not the same that would be used in Illinois. Silos are actually being built in Alaska, and logs are being used in their construction. The logs are hollowed some on the under side, so that the groove in one will fit into the convex side of another. In Kansas he would use a pit if nothing else were available.

Cows that freshen in the spring must be put on dry food during the winter, and the change usually produces a marked decrease in the milk flow, or even causes the animal to go dry entirely. The cow must be fed a reasonable allowance during the winter to keep her in reasonable condition, and she often gives absolutely no returns for this food. The young calf in early winter is also compelled to begin dry feeds immediately after weaning.

A genius is a man who can make other men believe he knows more than they do.

From many children and little bread, good Lord deliver us.

AS IT GOES.

The greatest monarch of the wood
Some day has fallen low,
And spread its dust upon the ground
Whence newer monarchs grow.

The sweetest song that e'er was sung
No one remembers now—
All withered like the laurels which Adorned its writer's brow.

The grandest mortal of the earth
Shall lie as low as these,
Forgotten as the rain drop in
The vastness of the seas;

For this is earth. Till heaven's reached,
Forgotten and unknown,
Man dies—remembered but the length
Of his own dying groan.

AUNT JURITHA'S GIFT.

By Sarah Bell Hackley.

We were all eager to see the present Aunt Juritha (pronounced with a long i) would give to our bonny bride—not that we expected a princely gift, for aunt, father's oldest sister, was not immensely wealthy—but she had what most people were pleased to call peculiarly sensible notions; so when the day before the wedding her black servant drove up to the back door and with the aid of our man set in the shadow of the crimson rambler that glorified our back porch an enormous pine box addressed in aunt's prim, regular writing to "Miss Juritha Jasper Castleton," we could hardly wait to open it.

Closely packed with excelsior were a number of thick brown paper-covered parcels, a few of which were very large. On top of all lay a letter.

"Dear Niece and Namesake Juritha," it read, "in making my selection of a present I have taken into consideration two facts. First, that your husband-to-be, though 'a rising lawyer in a stirring country town,' has not yet risen high enough to enable his wife to keep a servant; second, that you have been employed as teacher in a high school since your graduation three years ago, a condition not conducive to the acquisition of much kitchen knowledge.

"Your kitchen will be your workshop for a time at least, and my present shall be something to make work easier in that shop. My first intention was to buy you a kitchen stove with the twenty-five dollars I felt I could put into a gift, but after mature reflection, I concluded that your husband would purchase what you deem the essentials, and it would be better out of my age and experience to select and supply you with some things that a young housekeeper might not think of classing among the absolute necessaries, or might through inexperience forget to purchase until the money saved for household furnishings was gone.

"I trust, niece, that you will be sensible enough to feel no mortification in placing my present beside your more æsthetic gifts, since it is my wish that it be displayed.

"Affectionately, your aunt,
"Juritha Jasper Castleton."

Wonderingly we unwrapped the parcels and read the words of advice or explanation written on the cards tied with narrow white satin ribbons to each article. A plain little octagon walnut-cased clock with a hook for hanging on the wall, bore a card which said, "Punctuality is the politeness of kings, and of cooks. This timekeper, niece, will help you to get the rising young lawyer's meals on time, and thereby aid materially in keeping peace in the family."

A hand-woven bushel basket was labeled, "For chips and kindling," and two smaller baskets, "Useful receptacles in the kitchen." A card tied to a hearth broom and a curved-back stove brush read, "When ashes settle on the baking-top of your stove and biscuits refuse to brown, use the broom; when rust crawls over its sides, use polish and the brush."

A slate with a pencil tied to it had written on its face, "Hang this on the kitchen wall, my dear, and when a needed purchase occurs to you, write it down and copy when you start to market. It will save forgetting and incidentally help keep the family life smooth."

The words on the placard on the mighty and sharp shears were, "You will find numberless uses for these in the kitchen, niece. Use them instead of a knife in dressing a fowl, for they will cut bones like a knife will butter, and you will escape cut fingers."

"Keep the salt dry," spoke from the hard wood salt-box, and "Keep your sugar from ants" from the polished sugar cabinet.

A pasteboard box held a polished hard-wood comb case, two wire combs and a walnut-framed mirror, with wire ready for hanging, and the card tucked in the mirror frame said, "My dear, when the door bell rings and finds you in the kitchen, these articles will be useful, in that they will tell you whether there is flour on your cheeks, and enable you to straighten your hair before facing your guest."

There were two lamps and a lantern in the great box. One of the lamps was a flat-bottomed glass lamp with the bowl inclosed in tin and with a tin handle and reflector. The other lamp was of the light-spreading kind that grocers hang from their ceilings, and the card attached to its tin shade said, "There cannot be too much light in the kitchen; suspend this so that its rays will fall most directly on your stove."

In a satin-lined box of their own lay a Christy set—a bread-knife, a cake-knife, a parer. "These are things I have found it impossible to keep house without," ran the aunt's comment, "and, niece, in addition to using the large knife for hot or cold bread, you may slice a ham or a beef roast, even though warm, with it with expedition, or you may carve a fowl more advantageously with it than with a carving-knife."

A sharp twenty-inch butcher's saw and a small butcher's cleaver were tied together and on the beribboned card this message was traced, "When I was young, the only butcher's cleaver I knew was that mentioned in 'Dixie' that I used to sing—

"'Ol' missus marry Will D. Weaber;
His face was sharp like a butcher's cleaber,
But dat did not seem to greab 'er.'

But now I am old I realize its worth in the kitchen. When there are ham bones and spare ribs to get in two in some way you will realize the worth of the saw."

A tidy little household scale with a tin scoop and a brass dial that would weigh an ounce of soda and twenty pounds of sugar equally well, and a wooden peck measure, a pint and a quart measure of tin, were placarded thus, "These, niece, will save you guesswork in cooking and preserving and will defend you from the 'false balance that is an abomination.'"

"That you may be relieved of the inconvenience of washing your one cook spoon every time you mix another food, I send you six, and that you may keep them in place I send a half-dozen iron hooks for your kitchen wall," was aunt's message with the large long-handled iron spoons.

"A husband's love may ward it off for a while, but, my dear Juritha, you'll come, to driving nails and tacks and turning screws sooner or later, and here are your tools," was the prophetic writing on the hatchet and screw-driver.

The card on the heavy cotton umbrella said, "Niece, keep your gold-handled umbrella upstairs with your best dress, but keep this in plain view in the kitchen—it will gladden your heart on a rainy day."

The oaken stool twenty-four inches high, like those used in dry goods stores, had written on it, "Rest will help to keep the roses in your cheeks, dear niece. Never stand at any work when you can sit as well. Whether paring apples, preparing vegetables or mixing cake at the kitchen table, be seated on this stool."

Down in the bottom of the great box were an ice-cream freezer of the latest and most approved pattern, a tinned ice shredder, a butter-mold, a glass dairy thermometer, a kitchen sandstone for sharpening knives, a pot chain, dishcloth, a can-opener, a steak-pounder, a mouse trap, a wire soap bracket and a tiny wire soap shaker for saving bits of soap.

Last of all there was a thick book, a manuscript cook book, full of all manner of recipes and sage advice in the realm of housekeeping and cookery.

The dear old woman must have spent days in making it, and she had written on the flyleaf, "Herein are written the tested recipes of a lifetime. Follow them in detail as I have written them, Juritha, and through the stomach bring delight to the heart of the husband."

Within the leaves of a copy of a household magazine was a gilt-edged card which said, "I have found a good table magazine a household necessity. You will receive this one one year as part of my gift."

Rita (we softened our girl's somewhat harsh-sounding name thus) was as happy as one of the birds in the rosevine over aunt's gift, and gave it the place of honor—an entire corner—in the room in which the presents were displayed. Of all her beautiful gifts, none attracted so much attention as aunt's homely one, which proved as interesting to the guests as it afterward proved useful to the bride.—Farmers' Home Journal.

WANTED THE CANDY ALSO.

Dead Johnny's Sister After All His Christmas Presents.

Missionaries to far off lands, and especially those who have labored among people whose principal article of diet is rice, are apt to refer to their lukewarm converts as "rice Christians," because the converts so termed care much more for the material than the spiritual food that the missionaries dispense. Something of the same spirit animates Christians, young and old, in this corner of the world, particularly at holiday time, and among the younger element when Christmas trees and gifts are in order. The story told recently by a Sunday school teacher is an illustration. "A couple of weeks before Christmas one of the small boys of this teacher's class contracted pneumonia and died. He was much beloved, and his death was felt by his classmates and the workers in the school. His name was on the list for a handsome gift at Christmas, and the superintendent of the school decided that it would be a graceful thing, and the boy's family would doubtless appreciate the act, if the gift set apart for the boy were sent to his home, to be given to a younger brother or disposed of as his parents thought fit. When the gift distribution was in progress, a sister of the little fellow, also an attendant at the school, was asked to take the gift home. She received it in silence, and stood around with an expectant air. At last the teacher remarked: "What is it you are waiting for, Lucy? You have received your gifts and Johnny's also." "Yes'm, I know, but doesn't Johnny get a box of candy, too?" Johnny's sister got the candy. —Brooklyn Eagle.

Gambling with Death.

"I see," remarked Statisticus, "that there are 6,000 varieties of mushrooms, of which only 300 are edible." "Which means," replied Sporticus, "that every time you eat a mushroom you go up against a twenty-to-one shot."—Judge.

PARIS STREET HAWKERS.

The "Camelot" of the French Metropolis an Ingenious Creature.

The Paris "camelot," or street hawker, is the most ingenious creature for turning an honest—or even a dishonest—penny, says the London Graphic. His chief is a man named Hayard, who is known as the "Empereur des Camelots," and who keeps a shop in the Rue de Croissant, a side street of the Rue Montmantre, the Fleet street of Paris. Hayard will for a few hundred francs produce to order an outburst of popular enthusiasm for any cause—Royalist, Monarchist or Republican, anti-Semitic, Dreyfusard or anti-Dreyfusard; it is a matter of indifference to him and his men. "Vive" this or "A bas" that is shouted with vigor, provided the cash is forthcoming. Two francs a head a day is the usual price, but if the cause for which they have to shout is one that can bring the manifestants into collision with the police, the price varies between two and five francs, medical aid and legal assistance being also guaranteed. It is at such times as a royal visit that Hayard reaps a golden harvest. The morning after the announcement of the arrival of Nicholas II. he had half a dozen presses going printing off patriotic verses set to popular tunes, which the "camelots" sell by thousands in every part of the city. Mme. Hayard, aided by a rickety piano, teaches them the melody in batches of twenty or thirty in the courtyard behind the shop. Then there are medals and badges, buttons and rosettes of Franco-Russian colors and bearing the portraits of the royal guests. These sell like "hot cakes" at handsome profits. All these dreams of wealth have melted into thin air under the announcement that the czar and czarina are not coming to Paris. The expenditure on the Chateau of Compiegne is reckoned by hundreds of thousands of francs. Over a million francs have already been spent, and the expenditure still continues by hundreds of thousands at a time. The whole chateau has been overhauled from cellar to garret; priceless furniture, rare tapestries and valuable pictures are arriving daily and hourly. It is proposed that after the departure of the czar the chateau should be left as it will be during his majesty's visit, but this, I am afraid, is impossible.—New York Press.

CONCEALED WEAPONS.

Effort to Check Gun Carrying in the South.

There is a growth of feeling in many regions of the south large enough almost to be called a sentiment, against the habit of carrying concealed weapons. To it has rightly been attributed the large number of homicides that marks the civilization of the south. In South Carolina last winter a law was passed prohibiting the carrying of concealed weapons and prohibiting the sale of weapons under a size that cannot be conveniently concealed in the clothing. Effort is to be made to enforce this law. In Memphis a judge of the criminal court has announced his purpose of sending those convicted of carrying concealed weapons to the workhouse for sixty days in addition to imposing a fine of $50. The judge already has set out in his good work by passing this sentence on a negro. It were more encouraging had a white man been the offender, but the judge declared that he would treat white and black alike, and that there should be no discrimination on account of social position, color or anything else. The newspapers are giving support to the judge's action. It may be in time that public sentiment will become so enlightened as to relegate this barbaric practice to oblivion. It is something that is needed in northern communities as well as southern. In our own town murder after murder has occurred and in each case the man who committed the murder had "his revolver."—Indianapolis News.

The Old Horse's Last Trip.

A pathetic incident comes from Ipswich: One day last week an old horse, which had formerly been used by an expressman in the town, but lately has been enjoying life out on a farm two miles from the village, wandered out into the broad highway. He started toward town, and finally reached the railway station. There he walked up to his old place beside the platform and backed into position as if he had an express wagon behind him, and waited, as he used to do in his younger days. The train arrived, passengers disembarked and express matter was taken off. In a few minutes the old horse started off slowly for the village, where he backed himself to the door of the express office, as had been his former custom for many years. After waiting a reasonable time he started up the road toward his new home on the farm. That was the last seen of the faithful worker until he was found dead beside the road some time later in the day.—Boston Herald.

There is nothing more dangerous to our industrial system than that the individual worker should conceive of his work as the means of earning money which he really enjoys—should feel that his true life only begins when he quits his office or workshop. Surely we must all recognize that our life is mainly our work, and that what we are must be shown in what we do.—Bishop Creighton.

BEAUTIES OF LYNGEN.

English Tourist Graphically Describes the Fjord.

Lyngen on Lyngen fjord is not often visited by tourists. They go to the North Cape and Tromsoe, but the majority miss this picturesque spot. A writer in the London Globe writes thus eloquently of the place:

"This was an incredible spot. The approach to it was almost unearthly. Up a long fjord from five to ten miles broad, the western end, nearer shore, of which was just a towering agglomeration of black and white. It was a hot, cloudless day, and the fjord and sky were like sapphire. But these gaunt, pinnacled peaks abated none of their grim majesty, even under the wooing conditions of the heavens. The fiercest of dark precipice, thousands of feet sheer to the water, snow-cones, coal-black teeth and club-heads of rock soaring from the snow, and sweeping white scores right from mountain-top to mountain-foot! It made me shiver under the hot sun to look at them. And yet they had a matchless beauty all their own to temper the horror of them. This was the intermittent necklace of their glaciers, which gemmed them pale blue and green wherever they dimpled boldly toward the east.

"Let no voyager into arctic seas in pursuit of the sublime pass by Lyngen fjord in neglect. It is the very epitome of arctic magnificence. Its mountains have terrible names, where they are named at all, but there are many which a sure-footed and long-winded adventurer from Lyngen town may climb and christen at his leisure, if he dare.

"Lyngen is called a town because it has more than six houses in it, including a three-storried hotel and a white church with a black spire. A single farm in these parts constitutes a village on the map. And Lyngen is worthy of all the dignity that may thus be given to it, for nowhere in the neighborhood of latitude 70 degrees will you find such rural beauty as here in the roomy, green hollows of the glacier-decked mountains. The birch woods come down to the meadows and rise a thousand feet or more on the hillsides. Snow-fed streams precolate through them and bell-kine tingle their accompaniment to the music of the water.

"After a long day's rustication on this heavenly spot we returned to the ship, which was our fairy carpet, with nosegays and reindeer pelts for our booty. The witchery of the sail up the fjord in broad, hot daylight then had the nose of its splendor put completely out of joint by the witchery of the return journey. The black and white giants of the shore eyed us solemnly from beneath a canopy of clean crimson and gold which outlined their smallest upstanding splinter. And the cold was keen, while the swollen sun sank to trifle with the horizon for an hour or two."

HAS A BIG TASK.

Prof. Broegger Will Attempt to Correct Misconceptions in America.

When Prof. W. C. Broegger of Christiana visited the United States last summer, his greatest surprise was over his own great ignorance of the actual conditions. Knowing that his countrymen are no better informed than himself, he has undertaken to prepare a series of articles for the newspapers, in which he will seek to correct a mass of misinformation. Most of his impressions were gathered from the Norwegian papers, but as the news related almost exclusively to murders, lynching and all manner of crimes, strikes, railway collisions, divorces and corruption, he naturally obtained very distorted views regarding the United States.

Truly enough, the chase for the almighty dollar is one of the striking features of American life, he says, but it is not the only one. As a school man, the institutions of learning attracted his attention, nd he marveled greatly over the vast number of institutions and their fine equipment. The vast sums given by people of wealth for the endowment of schools are enough to make one dizzy, he says. The world has never had a counterpart to the liberality of the rich men of America in founding and endowing schools, libraries, museums, etc.

BJORNSON ATTACKED.

Dead Statesman's Relatives Resent an Alleged Insult.

Bjornson's drama, "Paul Lange og Tora Parsberg," has forced him into a heated controversy with the relatives and friends of the late Johan Sverdrup, whose memory is claimed to have been insulted in a certain passage. There is an insinuation in the play that Sverdrup, as minister of state, sent to Richter, then stationed at Stockholm as Norwegian minister of state, a different communication from the one adopted by the ministry. The government desired Richter to remain in Stockholm, but Sverdrup privately urged him to seek the appointment as consul-general at London, and this without informing his colleagues.

Sverdrup's relatives have risen to his defense, claiming that he was incapable of such duplicity, and they call on a number of foreign ministers and councillors to controvert the libel on the departed statesman.

Bjornson, nothing daunted by the force arrayed against him, repeats the charge in unequivocal terms, and declares that his information came direct from Richter.

MAY TAX EMIGRANTS.

Norway Proposes They Shall Pay for Military Exemption.

Norway proposes to adopt a law taxing emigrants, but only males over eighteen years. Under the proposed military law exemption from military service may be secured by the payment of certain fixed charges, the money to be devoted to the defense fund. When a male citizen leaves Norway the country is deprived of his military service, and the argument is that he should pay for his exemption, just the same as anyone else.

Citizens are subject to military service for twelve years, but may escape on the payment of 65 kroner, payable monthly, but in case of those leaving the country, the full amount for twelve years will be demanded in advance. It is contended that this is but a trifle, and should be willingly paid, in view of the expense entailed by the state in supporting schools, churches and other institutions for the benefit of the people, and some compensation is due the state, for the sum of 65 kroner is a very small one in proportion to the advantages derived.

Drain Norway's Swamps.

Hr. Kleist-Gedde, a leading manufacturer of Norway, has made a special study of Norwegian swamps, and is satisfied that there is wealth in them. When properly drained, he says, it will be possible to raise grains to the value of between 70,000,000 and 80,000,000 kroner, and that peat for fuel is to be found in practically inexhaustible quantities. The swamps, according to his figures, could be made to yield 105,000,000 kroner annually. When it is considered that Norway is compelled to import both grain and fuel, his agitation is likely to bear fruit. He recommends that 5,000,000 kroner be expended annually for a few years in preparing what is now waste and useless land for cultivation.

The Consular Question.

Negotiations regarding the establishment of a separate consular service for Norway have been going on between Minister of State Blehr, for Norway, and Minister of Foreign Affairs Lagerheim, with the sanction of the king. The negotiations, which were wholly confidential, have been suspended, but it is not understood that they have been broken off, and they will doubtless be resumed ere long.

Norway's Greatest Lawyer.

The late Bernhard Getz was unquestionably Norway's leading jurist. He was the father of the jury system in that country, and was instrumental in putting it into effect. As a mere boy, he was remarkable for his great knowledge, and, when but twenty-five, was appointed a professor in the law school Getz was but fifty-one years old at the time of his death.

POWDERED MILK.

Swedish Scientist Invents an Apparatus of Singular Power.

Dr. M. Ekenburg, a Swedish scientist, has invented a scientific apparatus for converting cows' milk into dry powder, which, when dissolved in water, reproduces all the qualities of fresh milk. The powder looks like flour, and possesses the aroma and other qualities of milk in a concentrated form. By dissolving one ounce of the powder in nine ounces of water a liquid is produced equal in every respect to new milk.

Minister Wu's Impressions of American Women.

His Excellency, Wu-ting-fang, the Chinese Minister to this country, has written for the Ladies' Home Journal an article embodying his impressions and his opinion of American women. This remarkable diplomat, who has made himself so popular alike with the government and the people, is famed for his frankness. He always says just what he thinks, and he usually says it in a way not hard to understand. He is a keen observer, and his travels and experiences in the United States have given him good opportunities for studying the American woman.

BURGLARS IN OSCEOLA.

They Break Into Several Places and Make Themselves at Home.

Osceola, Wis., Dec. 10. — Saturday night a burglar or burglars entered the blacksmith shop of M. M. Nason, equipped themselves with the necessary tools to break open the Bank of England, starting first at the drug store owned by C. W. Staples, gaining entrance by a rear window. The plunder taken here consisted of money, cigars, all of his jewelry and notions, to the value of about $50 or $75. Here the burglar seated himself by the stove, ate fruit and smoked cigars to his heart's content. The safe being unlocked nothing was disturbed, but both money drawers were broken open and the cash taken. E. D. Ames' butcher shop was entered and several dollars and some meat was taken. At M. J. O'Reilly's lumber office an attempt was made to gain an entrance to the office from the rear, and about fifty matches, partly burned, were lighted in order to gain an entrance. All the locks of his lumber sheds were broken, but nothing of value was taken that can be ascertained. The work was undoubtedly that of some one residing not far from Osceola, as the job all around showed evidence of an amateur.

VAN SANT TO KEEP UP FIGHT.

Minnesota Railroad Commission Will Take No Steps to Fight the Proposed Railway Merger.

St. Paul, Dec. 10.—The members of the State Railroad commission, who had announced their intention of going to Washington to confer with the interstate commerce commission on the best means for preventing the Hill-Harriman railway merger, abandoned the project Saturday and will take no action. The commissioners called on Gov. Van Sant. Both sides are reticent about the talk, but it is said the commissioners attempted to drive the governor from his position, and he gave them to understand he intended to proceed on the lines originally outlined by himself. The governor's legal advisers have declared the laws of Minnesota ample to protect the state, and if they are found faulty the executive will call the legislature to enact laws that will hold. Gov. Van Sant received a letter Saturday from Gov. Rogers of Washington, in which the latter says he has already taken steps to ascertain if the laws of his state are strong enough to prevent the merger, but he adds that he has his doubts.

DAVIS FOUND GUILTY.

Murdered William Youngren in a House of Ill-fame.

St. Peter, Minn., Dec. 10. — Fred R. Davis, who shot and killed William Youngren in a house of ill fame in this city on the night of Oct. 20, was found guilty of manslaughter in the first degree. The jury was out about five hours. The court sentenced him to the St. Cloud reformatory, where he will be taken this week. Catherine E. Fleischauer, the woman who ran the house, was also arrested and entered a plea of guilty as charged in the indictment. She had previously served a term in state's prison for a similar offense and Judge Webber did not show her any mercy. He sentenced her to a term of five years and six months in the prison at hard labor.

PANIC AMONG PATIENTS.

Dangerous and Exciting Fire in a Sanitarium.

Milwaukee, Dec. 10—A dangerous and exciting fire which came near resulting in loss of life, occurred yesterday at St. Mary's private sanitarium, 318 Berry street. For a time there was a panic among the patients. Although no lives were lost great difficulty was experienced in getting the twenty-seven inmates of the sanitarium out in time. Twenty-four of the patients were carried from the building by the firemen and members of the fire insurance patrol, ten of them being so decrepit with age as to be entirely helpless. The fire started in a barn in the rear from an overturned lamp. The property loss was small.

BOLD BAD MEN OF WEST.

Two Are Convicted, One of Whom Made a Strong Stand Before Arrested.

Aberdeen, S. D., Dec. 10.—In circuit court Mr. Halpin of Groton, charged with stealing wheat, was found guilty as charged. He will now be tried on the charge of horse stealing. In the Christiansen case the jury brought in a verdict of guilty. Christiansen stole a horse from Silas Korte, but was overhauled at Norton, where he stood off the sheriff with a big revolver and retreated to a strawstack, where he made a stand. Several men, armed with rifles and shotguns, got the drop on him, and he was forced to surrender.

Hunted With Buffalo Bill.

Deadwood, S. D., Dec. 10. — The big animal hunt of Buffalo Bill and party of a month's duration has been concluded. M. R. Russell, a personal friend of Col. Cody, who was a member of the party, has returned home. The party hunted in the Big Horn mountains and bagged four elk, six deer, an antelope, a lynx and a bear. Col. Cody will remain a short time longer in the little town of Cody, Wyo., in which he takes a great deal of pride, and later on in the winter he expects to make a visit to the Black Hills.

Cannot Close Pontoon.

Prairie du Chien, Wis., Dec. 10.—The pontoon bridge of the Milwaukee road is open and cannot be closed on account of floating ice. Train service between this city and McGregor has been abandoned and the mails are carried across the river in skiffs. Much trouble is anticipated at this point and it is expected that the bridge cannot be closed until the river freezes. The heavy chain cable was severed yesterday in trying to close the pontoon.

Crushed to Death.

Custer, S. D., Dec. 10.—Charles Seeger, an old timer in the Black Hills, was crushed to death under a falling tree. Mr. Seeger was a wealthy cattleman. He was at one time a sailor under the German flag. He leaves a family.

Open Plant Within a Week.

Two Rivers, Wis., Dec. 10—The combined system of electric lights and water works will be in operation within one week. The citizens have long clamored for these public conveniences. The cost of the plant is $65,000.

FOOLS FEUDISTS

FRIENDS OF BERRY HOWARD MAKE A BOLD ATTEMPT AT RESCUE.

DRAW GUNS ON THE ENGINEER

HE REFUSES TO BACK THE TRAIN AND OUTWITS THEM BY STARTING UP.

SHERIFF HOLDS PRISONER SAFE

TAKEN TO FRANKFORT TO ANSWER FOR COMPLICITY IN GOEBEL MURDER.

Corbin, Ky., Dec. 10.—Friends of Berry Howard, the noted mountain feud leader, made an attempt to rescue Howard Saturday night as he was being taken to Frankfort to answer an indictment charging him with complicity in the murder of William Goebel, and for which he had been arrested Saturday afternoon by Sheriff Broughton and his deputy, who got the drop on Howard and his body guard, who had been lured to Pineville.

As soon as Howard had been arrested his friends, who had protected him for nearly two years, swore that he should never be taken to Frankfort, and a guard of twenty-five armed men was maintained over the prisoner while here, and ten men accompanied Sheriff Broughton and the prisoner to Frankfort.

Engineer Parleys.

When the train reached Pineville, Sheriff Broughton and his posse boarded the train with the prisoner and were given one of the coaches, which was locked at both ends. At the same time three men, friends of Howard, boarded the engine. They covered Engineer John Landgan with pistols, and commanded him to back the train to Middlesboro, the intention being to rescue Howard where his friends are greatest and where the mountains afforded quick escape. Engineer Landgan, with a pistol pressed against his heart, maintained his composure. He declared it was impossible for him to back the train as a freight train was closely following and a collision with great loss of life would inevitably result. "Drat the freight train," said one of the men. "Back the train to Middlesboro." Engineer Landgan parleyed with the men. He told them he did not and would only back the train if given a signal to do so by the conductor. Thereupon two of the men got off the engine to compel Conductor Doody to order the train backed. Engineer Landgan told the man who remained and still covered him that it would take all three men to compel the conductor to back the train, as he and the brakeman were both armed. The last man left the engine and started for the rear of the train.

Engineer Landgan was looking for his chance, and the moment the third man had swung clear of the engine and started for the rear of the train he opened the throttle wide, and started his heavy train as rapidly as possible and without waiting for the conductor's signal to go ahead. Meantime a highly exciting scene was taking place on the station platform. As Sheriff Broughton and his to step aboard with the prisoner he waved back the crowd and declared he would take his prisoner to Frankfort if he lived. His bold defiance of the desperate men enabled him to get Howard aboard the train, and then the crowd surrounded Doody and commanded him to back the train to Middlesboro. He answered that he could not, on account of a freight thain closely following. The mountaineers again told him as they told the engineer: "D—— the passengers; back her up."

"No!" thundered Doody. "You may kill me if you wish, but I shall never back this train." And he swung his lantern clear of the train as a signal to go ahead. The train began to move, and revolvers were drawn, but the mob had been cowed and not a shot was fired.

BERRY HOWARD CAPTURED.

Charged With Complicity in the Murder of Goebel.

Frankfort, Ky., Dec. 10. — Sheriff Broughton of Bell county, accompanied by three deputies, arrived here yesterday, having in charge Berry Howard of Bell county, who was indicted for complicity in the murder of William Goebel, and who has been a fugitive for more than a year. He turned his prisoner over to Jailer Lawrence of this county and Howard was assigned to quarters in the jail with Caleb Powers and James Howard, a relative, charged with the same crime. Howard protests his innocence and says that he became a fugitive in the mountain section only because he did not want to lie in jail here. He will ask for an immediate hearing and if this is denied, that he be released on bond.

Brookside, Ala., Dec. 10—The Rev. J. W. Bradford, Methodist minister at this place was shot by R. D. Coffman, justice of the peace, yesterday afternoon and died two hours later. There were no witnesses to the tragedy. The Rev. Mr. Bradford has been returned here as the Methodist minister for another year. While at Sunday school yesterday morning Mr. Bradford called attention to this fact and remarked that he hoped all the relations between himself and his congregation would be pleasant, adding, it is alleged, that their relations would be pleasant if they could stop such men as Coffman from lying about him and the church. Coffman was once a member of Rev. Bradford's church, but had been expelled on some charge. Coffman surrendered.

AN APPALLING WRECK.

Train Jumps the Track on a High Embankment.

Macon, Ga., Dec. 10. — The Central Railroad of Georgia passenger train from Savannah, after crossing the river near Macon about 4 o'clock yesterday morning with about 100 passengers, jumped a switch on a high embankment. The engine and tender parted from the train. An appalling wreck ensued. The baggage and express cars were thrown over into a culvert and burned. The second class coach was thrown on its side and burned. The first class coach fell over the embankment. The Atlantic sleeper, filled with passengers, caught fire and was destroyed. Two sleepers were saved. The members of the Walter Mains circus were aboard. The only person killed was Julia Boynton, colored, of Columbia, Ga. Twenty persons were injured.

TAKES UP ANARCHY

SENATE LISTENS TO A CAREFULLY-PREPARED SPEECH BY M'COMAS.

CONGRESS HAS FULL POWER

CAN PRESCRIBE PUNISHMENT FOR THE MURDER OF A PRESIDENT.

SENATOR HOAR HAS A GOOD PLAN

WOULD PLACE ANARCHISTS ON A DESOLATE ISLAND AND LEAVE THEM.

Washington, Dec. 6. — Senator McComas of Maryland made an extended and carefully prepared speech in the senate yesterday with anarchy as his theme, and was followed by some brief remarks by Mr. Hoar of Massachusetts on the difficulties in the way of dealing with anarchist assassins. Mr. McComas' remarks showed careful examination of the legal authorities. He maintained that congress had full power under the constitution to enact a law punishing with death any person killing a president or assaulting the president with intent to kill, or aiding, inciting or procuring such an act. He favored rigid provisions in the immigration laws for the deportation of alien anarchists. Much of the speech was devoted to an explanation of the dangerous doctrines of anarchy, and the extent to which these doctrines had been propagated within recent years. Senator Hoar's remarks were interesting, coming from the venerable chairman of the judiciary committee, which will have much to do with the framing of any legislation on this subject. He said that the difficulty was that assassins of kings and rulers always gloried in their crimes and were in no wise deterred by the fear of punishment. For this reason he thought it was almost useless to multiply punishments. The most effective remedy he suggested would be to have the civilized nations of the world agree upon some desolate spot on the earth's surface, to which all anarchists who uphold assassination or the overthrow of government should be transported. In such a community the anarchist could carry out his theories of living without a government and the world would be rid of his presence.

The senate passed a bill extending the life of the industrial commission until Feb. 15, next, to complete the work it now has in hand. The committee which will consider an appropriate tribute to the late president McKinley was announced. The senate adjourned until next Monday.

CHEERS AND TEARS.

They Mingle as an Army Transport Sails Out of New York Harbor.

New York, Dec. 7.—The army transport Crook, with 341 men of the Eleventh cavalry, 385 of the Twenty-seventh infantry, 40 of the hospital corps and 71 general cabin passengers aboard, pulled down the bay last night and to-day will set her course across the Atlantic on the long run to Manila by way of Suez. There were tears and cheers from a big crowd of relatives and friends of the soldiers as the transport cleared the dock. The transport will make brief stops at Gibraltar, Malta, Port Said, Aden, Colombo and Singapore.

OFFICIALS HANG

MEN CONVICTED OF HAVING BURIED ALIVE SEVEN FILIPINOS.

PRIEST'S SENTENCE COMMUTED

HE HEARD CONFESSIONS OF MEN WHEN AT POINT OF DEATH.

REGARDED AS WORST OF ALL

MANY SEE HANGING, WHICH WILL NO DOUBT HAVE SALUTARY EFFECT.

Manila, Dec. 7. — The military authorities yesterday hanged the presidente, the chief of police and the police sergeant of Taytay, who were convicted of murdering seven natives by stabbing them and burying them alive while the town was under American occupation. The crime was committed at the instance of the insurrection leaders. A priest named Leposoy, who was also convicted and sentenced to death, and who was regarded as the worst of all because he heard the confessions of the murdered men when they were at the point of death, had his sentence commuted to twenty years imprisonment because of his calling. The execution of the others took place in the presence of thousands of natives, including fifteen presidentes. The carrying out of the sentence must have the most wholesome effect.

Gen. Chaffee informed the correspondent that he did not write the letter addressed to Maj. Heath, dated San Fernando, which has been published in the United States. He indignantly repudiates it. He says he does not know Maj. Heath and does not entertain the views expressed in the letter, especiall as regards Gov. Taft.

SCHLEY VERDICT.

Findings of the Court Said to Be in Hands of Secretary Long.

Washington, Dec. 7. — The senate court of inquiry has finally made up its verdict and it will be publicly announced on Wednesday next, Dec. 11. The meetings of the court have ended and it has finally dissolved. It is understood that the findings are already in the hands of the navy department. No word has leaked out as to the nature of the findings, but the friends of Admiral Schley are now more confident than ever that he will be vindicated.

SCHELY GUILTY ON FIVE COUNTS.

Report That the Court Will Find Against the Rear Admiral.

New York, Dec. 7.—A special to the Press from Washington says:

"Rear Admiral Schley has been found at fault on five counts by the court of inquiry. This comes from a person who is in a position to learn the opinion of the three admirals on the different specifications of the precept.

"It is understood that the court finds against Schley:

"First—For the delay of the flying squadron off Cienfuegos.

"Second—For misrepresentation of the reasons for returning to Key West for coal.

"Third—For disobedience of orders in making the retrograde movement.

"Fourth—For failure to destroy the Colon.

"Fifth—For conduct unbecoming an officer and gentleman in the Schley-Hodgson controversy."

It is impossible for the Associated Press to confirm the report of the Press' statements in regard to the finding of the Schley court at this writing.

WORK IN THE SENATE.

Introduction of Bills and Resolutions Takes Up the Time.

Washington, Dec. 5.—Practically the entire time of the senate yesterday was devoted to the introduction of bills and resolutions. Two of these measures, relating to the suppression of anarchy and the dealing with anarchists, were allowed to lie on the table so that their authors, Mr. McComas of Maryland and Mr. Vest of Missouri, may bring them to the early attention of the senate. The Isthmian canal report was transmitted to the senate by the president and several bills providing for the construction of the waterway, one of them by Mr. Morgan of Alabama, who has led the movement for the canal in the past, were presented.

ALL ARE AIMED AT ANARCHY.

Several Bills Are Introduced in the Senate.

Washington, Dec. 6.—That the sentiment of congress favors the extermination of the anarchists was shown yesterday when bills, petitions and memorials without number were poured into the senate. The number of petitions demanding the passage of a law aimed at anarchists showed how strong is public sentiment on this question, and the opinion is held in both houses that there should be no delay in responding to this request from all parts of the country. Already a number of bills dealing with this question have been presented in the house, and the fact that President Roosevelt gave it first place in his message is pointed to as additional evidence, if any were needed, for immediate action.

DIAZ DECIDES TO SURRENDER.

With His Men He Will Quit Colombian Fight.

Panama, Dec. 6.—The peace commission, composed of a representative of prominent Liberals of Panama, a representative of the Colombian government and Gen. De la Rosa, secretary of Gen. Domingo Diaz, which started for the interior to obtain an interview with Generals Diaz and Lugo and induce them to give up the struggle and return to Panama, have returned to the city. The commissioners saw Gen. Diaz, who agrees to lay down his arms and come to Panama under the same conditions which were agreed upon at the time of the surrender of Colon. Diaz is expected to arrive at the village of Havana to-day with such followers as care to surrender.

Two Self-Confessed Perjurers Testify in Court.

Chicago, Dec. 6.—Two self-confessed perjurers, who admitted accepting bribes while acting as jurors; a third person who confessed to a part in the conspiracy to keep James J. Lynch from trial and the former bailiff himself were the witnesses in the trial of Alex Sullivan in Judge Smith's court yesterday. Thomas Smallman and F. S. O'Brien told under oath of committing perjury and accepting bribes from Lynch while on juries. These men were sprung as a surprise on the defense. Smallman said he received $50 for his services, while O'Brien swore that Lynch paid him $100. Both witnesses said that Sullivan was the trial lawyer in the cases.

CHINESE EXCLUSION.

Senator Lodge Would Remove the Limit of the Present Act.

Washington, Dec. 6.—Senator Lodge yesterday reported a bill providing for the removal of the ten years' limitation on the Chinese exclusion act, thus leaving the provisions of the Geary act in force. That act, which was approved May 19, 1892, excluded the Chinese indefinitely, but the Scott act of Nov. 3, 1893, limited the exclusion to ten years. In case there is no legislation in the meantime, the ten years limit would expire next May.

MILITIA IS SENT

ALABAMA TOWN PLACED UNDER MARTIAL LAW TO PREVENT LYNCHING.

MOB MAKES VIOLENT THREATS

NEGROES IMPLICATED IN A MURDER ARE IN GREAT DANGER.

GOVERNOR RESPONDS QUICKLY

THE SHERIFF WILL PROTECT HIS PRISONERS AT ALL HAZARDS.

Montgomery, Ala., Dec. 8. — Sheriff Bradshaw of Covington county yesterday afternoon wired Gov. Jelks that he had positive information that a mob from Opp would attack the jail at Andalusia for the purpose of lynching the twenty-five negroes implicated in the killing of the town marshal and a merchant at Opp Wednesday.

The sheriff asked that soldiers be sent to Andalusia without delay. The governor immediately ordered the company at Greenville to proceed by train to Andalusia and arranged with the railroad company for a special train. Capt. Gamble of the Greenville company replied in twenty minutes that his company would leave for Andalusia at 6 o'clock last night. The distance from Greenville to Andalusia is about sixty miles, and the military should have reached there by 7 o'clock. Should the mob reach Andulusia before the arrival of the troops a Wholesale Lynching May Result.

A special to the Advertiser from Andalusia says:

The governor sent troops last night to aid Sheriff Bradshaw in protecting the negro rioters in jail here, and the town is under martial law. The sheriff is fearing an attack at any moment by a mob from Opp, and is prepared to protect his prisoners at all hazards.

Three negroes, names unknown, were caught and killed by a posse of citizens near Opp yesterday for alleged implication in the riot and the whole country is up in arms against the negroes.

Up to a late hour last night the mob had not made its appearance. The troops are on guard and knowledge of this fact may prevent an attack.

News has just been received here that yesterday a negro committed suicide near Opp. He was being pursued by a posse with bloodhounds, and seeing that escape was impossible, he shot himself.

GHASTLY SCENE AT A HANGING.

Body Shows Life in the Coffin and Is Carried Back to the Scaffold.

Little Rock, Ark., Dec. 8.—Bud Wilson, a convict who killed R. H. Naylor, a guard at the Yell county convict camp last September, was hanged yesterday at Danville. The trap was sprung at 9:45 o'clock, and at 10:05 the body was lowered into a coffin. Before the lid was placed upon the coffin the body began moving about. Wilson opened his eyes and his whole frame shook with tremors. He was taken from the coffin by the deputies and carried up the steps to the scaffold for the purpose of hanging him again. When the platform was reached the body became rigid, remaining so for a moment, and then became limp. Wilson was examined by the physicians, who finally pronounced him dead, death being caused by strangulation.

AN AWFUL PLUNGE

FREIGHT TRAIN HURLED INTO A FOAMING, ROARING TORRENT.

TRACK BURIED BY SUDDEN SLIDE

SWALLOWED UP IN A YAWNING CHASM THREE HUNDRED FEET BELOW.

ENGINEER AND FIREMAN KILLED

OTHER MEMBERS OF THE CREW SAVED BY BREAKING OF TRAIN.

Vancouver, B. C., Dec. 8. — Three hundred and sixty feet down into the foaming torrent that forces its way through the sharp-cut canyon of the Fraser, near the town of Lytton, was the awful plunge taken yesterday morning by a Canadian Pacific westbound freight train.

The track had been buried by a sudden slide, and in the darkest hour that precedes the dawn, the train had headed straight into the yawning chasm, where a safe track had been not many minutes before. Happily, though remarkably, the train was broken in its plunge, the latter portion remaining on the rails, pinned by still falling debris, pinching the mid-section in a narrow cut, and thus the conductor and brakeman saved their lives. Engineer Randall and Fireman Pottruff falling with their locomotive into the gulf that swallowed up the train. Both were married men and had their homes at North Bend, whence came the first news of the fatality. The official statement, issued at noon by the railway officials, stated that the ill-fated train was an extra freight in charge of Conductor Harris. It struck the rock slide at 5:15 a. m., at quite the wildest part of the whole mountain section section, where the trains crawl, fly-like, along the side of frowning precipitous cliffs, at whose feet the Tawney river ebbs its way through solid masses of forbidding rocks. Just below Lytton, where the catastrophe occurred, the canyon widens slightly, to admit the Fraser's main tributary coming from the north between great mountain ranges, the place being locally known as

Met Instant Death,

The "Devil's Playground."

Here it was the locomotive, hitting the mass of rock, shot over into the chasm, carrying with it the five foremost cars. Thousands of tons of steel and heavy timber disappeared in but a twinkling and in an instant later were the tops of grinding rock and whirling waters.

The brakeman had walked back to the caboose from the engine but ten minutes previous, and, with the conductor, was providentially protected by the still tumbling rock nipping the train mid-section. The regular freight had passed the spot less than two hours before, while the section patrol had been over and found all "O. K." within the hour previous.

KILL ANOTHER.

Night Marshal of Chelsea Slain by Bank Robbers.

Marshalltown, Iowa, Dec. 8. — Night Marshal J. B. Smith, at Chelsea, was shot in the head by three robbers early yesterday morning and died two hours later. The robbers were discovered by the officer while attempting to break into the bank, and in an exchange of shots the latter was killed. The robbers made their escape west on a handcar. The robbers seized and bound Bert Compt, who they supposed was the marshal, and before reaching the bank the robbers met Smith and killed him. Three suspects have been arrested at Keystone. It is supposed Smith attempted to arrest the men.

He was insane and imagined that a mob was trying to lynch him. He almost severed the jugular vein before he was discovered. Minx is a tailor, and came here from Parker, S. D.

HILL STAYS.

Says He Will Neither Resign Nor Give Up St. Paul Residence.

New York, Dec. 8.—The Commercial-Advertiser prints the following statement made by James J. Hill, president of the Great Northern railway: "I have no intention of resigning the presidency of the railway. Furthermore, I am not going to give up my home or residence in St. Paul."

Railroad Graders Find a Mine.

Lead, S. D., Dec. 8. — The Elkhorn Railway company's graders on the new road from Deadwood to this city have encountered a large vein of ore in one of the cuts which will go in values about $30 a ton. It was a blind vein with no surface indications, and it will probably make a paying mine. The ore is being used for the railroad grade.

Destroyed by Fire.

Danville, Va., Dec. 8.—Fire here early yesterday destroyed the plant of John E. Hughes & Co., and Brown's storage warehouse, with contents. Both houses were filled with leaf tobacco. The loss will exceed $130,000.

Old-Time Hunter Kills Himself.

Ida Grove, Iowa, Dec. 8.—R. O. Richardson, an old resident of Ida county, committed suicide here. He was known as "Dad Richardson," and was a relic of the old-time hunter and trapper. He leaves a wife and two sons.

Woman Killed by an Engine.

Dubuque, Iowa, Dec. 8.—While walking along the Chicago Great Western railroad tracks in the northern part of the city Mrs. John Krayer, an aged lady, was run down by an engine and died a few hours later.

CHARGED WITH RUSTLING.

Arrest of Jim Sontag, Whose Partner Is in the Penitentiary.

Huron, S. D., Dec. 8.—Sheriff George Kerr accomplished the arrest of Jim Sontag here yesterday. Sontag is alleged to be a cattle rustler and partner of Moody, now in the penitentiary for cattle stealing. He is wanted by the authorities of Sanborn county, who have been advised of his capture. Sontag and Moody are ex-convicts. His wanderings have been known to Sheriff Kerr for several weeks, and as he was drifting toward the home of his parents in this city, the sheriff patiently awaited his arrival.

OIL OF INFERIOR GRADE.

Complaints in South Dakota Said to Be General.

Pierre, S. D., Dec. 8.—The people are receiving a very poor grade of kerosene this winter and the complaint is general. This has called out sentiment for the introduction of an oil inspection bill in the next legislative session, through the provisions of the initiative. This will be done to prevent the usual fate of bills introduced to regulate oil grades, which are stringent enough as introduced in every session, but which are riddled before they get through.

NORTH DAKOTA SNOW.

An Old-Fashioned Affair Being Enjoyed in That State.

Fargo, N. D., Dec. 8.—North Dakota is enjoying a regular old-fashioned snowstorm. It has been in progress several hours and lies from twelve to fourteen inches deep on the level. If the temperature falls and the wind gets in its work the conditions are most favorable for a raging war of the elements. The north coast limited, due here at 4:30, is still at Glyndon on account of a derailed freight train. No fatalities are reported.

POISON AT WEDDING.

Sixty-Five Persons Victims of Doped Coffee.

Prairie du Sac, Wis., Dec. 8.—Sixty-five persons were poisoned at a wedding feast at the home of John Mulky, at West Point, near this place. It is claimed that there was poison in the coffee. Physicians were summoned from Lodi, and after working over the people for a long time hope was given that all would recover. Some of the coffee has been sent to a chemist to be examined.

BURLINGTON'S BIG TRESTLE.

Five Hundred Thousand Feet of Fir in Structure.

Hastings, Minn., Dec. 8.—One of the most substantial trestles ever built in the state is that built by the Burlington road near Inver Grove station. It contains 500,000 feet of Washington fir, costing some $20,000. Connections are made with the Belt Line bridge and switching facilities completed for transfer to South St. Paul.

Held for Selling to Indians.

Sioux Falls, S. D., Dec. 8.—Two Flandreau men named James Murphy and Matthew Martin, have been held by United States Commissioner Conway for appearance before the next federal grand jury to answer to the charge of selling liquor to Indians. In default of bonds Martin has been lodged in the county jail.

Paid for the Death of Husband.

Winona, Minn., Dec. 8.—The widow of Frank Meredith, who was killed a few weeks ago while braking on a Chicago & Northwestern train in the yards at Milwaukee, has accepted a settlement with the road for the death of her husband. The company pays all funeral expenses and gives her a check for $2,500.

Shares in Prosperity.

Centerville, S. D., Dec. 8.—This place is making many improvements. A system of drainage has been put in consisting of twelve-inch mains, extending to the river. Contracts have been let to extend the water mains to the residence portion of the town. Several modern residences are being built.

Embezzler Sentenced.

Montevideo, Minn., Dec. 8.—At the close of the fall term of the district court Thursday night John Wynant was sentenced by Judge Qualle to fourteen months at Stillwater for embezzling money from the Singer company.

Miller Will Come Back.

Crookston, Minn., Dec. 8.—H. L. Miller, recently arrested at Jennings, Mont., and wanted in this city on a charge of obtaining money under false pretenses, will return without extradition and the sheriff has gone for him.

Lost Her Barn by Fire.

Minto, N. D., Dec. 8. — Mrs. Forbes' barn was destroyed by fire, together with a quantity of feed belonging to A. Miller and a hearse belonging to James Bulger and M. Grescovial. The total loss is about $800.

Gain in School Children.

Fargo, N. D., Dec. 8.—The school census is being taken, and the record so far indicates an increase over last year. Several children have been found who are not in the schools and the attention of the officials will be called to the matter.

Rickerby's Folly

By TOM GALLON

CHAPTER IV. (Continued.)

"What! You've seen it, 'ave you?" she whispered. "They only comes by night, don't they? Poor lad it's odd for 'im to come back to the old place like that, ain't it? Lucky I ain't afeared of 'im. Walks there every blessed night, 'e does, an'—"

She stood alone in the garden; Nugent Leathwood had broken away from her and had gone racing through the garden, stumbling against trees blindly as he ran toward the house where the cheerful lights gleamed from the windows. The old woman looked up at the deserted part of Rickerby's Folly and laughed softly to herself.

Presently in the quiet street the rumble of wheels was heard, and a cab stopped at the outer gate. Then Cornelius, with much servility, assisted a young girl to alight, and gave instructions in regard to the bringing in of boxes. It was something, in that grim place, to hear the quick, excited chatter of a girlish voice; but it was uncanny and gruesome, knowing all that they knew, to hear her frequent questions concerning Gilbert Rickerby. Where was he? Why had he not been to meet her? How soon was he coming?

Nugent Leathwood, who had regained something of his composure, met her at the door, and smilingly and frankly welcomed her home. "Come in! come in!" he cried, as he took her hands. "We have such a lot to say to each other—and you must feel tired and hungry after your long journey. Come in!"

She stood in a lower room of the house and looked about her. The scrap of fire which had been kindled in the wide, old-fashioned grate, was expiring: the only light in the room came from two candles, set on the mantel shelf: the only man to welcome her was this smiling creature, who she inwardly distrusted. The place—the hour—the silence—all struck into her heart with a chill. She had been kept under grim restraint for so long, and had looked forward so joyfully to this home-coming—this meeting with her lover; and now a horrible dread seemed to be creeping over her.

"Where is Gilbert?" she asked. "You said he would be here to meet me. Where is he?"

"Patience—patience; you are in such a desperate hurry to see this lover of yours," replied Leathwood, waving a hand towards a chair. "Sit down and have something to eat. Time enough to talk of lovers—say, to-morrow."

She looked around the room in perplexity. Cornelius had vanished—probably to see about the preparation of a meal. She was left there alone with Nugent Leathwood: and the silence about them seemed to beat in upon her heart and to stifle her. Then she heard Nugent speaking.

"I told you, little Olive Mallory, when I wrote to you," he began, speaking slowly and very distinctly: "I told you that you were to come here to meet Gilbert Rickerby. Before we discuss Gilbert Rickerby I want to take you back a little to remind you of some things which have happened within the past year or two."

"I am listening," she said, in a sort of breathless whisper, and without taking her eyes an instant from his face.

"Four years ago, when you were a mere girl, you had some romantic dreams about this Gilbert Rickerby, you thought there was no man in the world like him; you were certain that the two of you were bound together till the end of time. I suppose, in that, you were like every other girl that was ever barn into the world."

"I loved him with all my heart and soul," she said, steadily. "I love him now. My life has been a hard one, and I was as much a woman then as I shall ever be. Four years has made no difference in that!"

"We shall see—we shall see," he said, lightly. "Well, you parted from this lover—were forced to part with him. Gilbert Rickerby went his way into the world, as other men have done before, and as other men will do again. It had all been very amusing, I suppose—those secret meetings, stolen kisses and whispered protestations of love. But you take it all too seriously, my dear."

"It is everything—it is my life to me," she said, earnestly. "Mr. Leathwood, why do you waste time like this? I came here to meet Gilbert, who has returned to me after our long separation. Where is he? I want to see him at once?"

Nugent Leathwood paced about the floor for a few moments, with his hands clasped behind him. Stopping suddenly, he looked up and said: "Suppose I told you that you would never see him again?"

She made a surprised movement towards him, and then checked herself, with her hands clasped on her breast. "I—I don't understand," she said. "You are trying to frighten me."

"Indeed, I am not," he replied. "I am telling you the simple truth. Gilbert Rickerby is dead!"

She cried out suddenly, and covered her face with her hands. He moved nearer to her, and spoke almost in her ear.

"You think I have cheated you—lied to you. I have done nothing of the kind. I brought you here to meet Gilbert Rickerby; and, on the very night he was to have arrived, he was killed in the street. An accident—merely an accident that might happen to any man."

"Why did you not tell me—why did you not write to me?" she cried, without uncovering her face. "Why did you bring me here, with my heart full of joy, at the prospect of meeting the man I love—the man I have waited for so patiently?"

His tone changed in a moment: standing close beside her, he spoke, in a voice which caused her to drop her hands from her face and recoil from him. "Because I wanted to see you—because I wanted to look again into those eyes which had bewitched me. O don't run away; there can be no more running away, so far as you are concerned. Listen to me: Two years ago, when this same Gilbert Rickerby, whom I have never seen, wrote to me, telling me that he was coming home to meet his promised wife, a desire came upon me to see the girl who could remain in a man's memory so strongly. So I went down to the place where you were at school; you remember that, don't you? I see you do. Well, I saw you: and I began to think that Gilbert Rickerby was not such a fool as I had imagined him to be; I felt that you were worth waiting for—worth striving after. In a word, I loved you; from that hour I had no peace, for thoughts of you. Day and night I was haunted by the memory of your eyes; day and night I dreamed of you—longed for you. Then, in one mad moment, I did a thing I have never mentioned until now."

She looked up at him, with eyes of fear and aversion; yet seemed to listen, too, to what he had to say.

"I said to myself:' This man is thousands of miles away; I am on the spot. What if he heard that the girl he loved and trusted was false to him? What if he heard that she had repented of her rash, girlish promise, and had given her heart to another man? Would he come home to her then?' So I wrote him: I told him that you had confessed your love for me, that I meant to marry you. I told him that it was right that he should set you free."

"Oh—you coward!" she whispered, shrinking away from him. "So that was why his letters to me ceased; that was why he never came home two years ago, as he had promised?"

"Yes—that was the reason. Then, quite suddenly, he wrote me that he was coming: and I knew that my plan would be spoiled. But Providence has always been on the side of the bold; at the last moment, when he was rushing to meet me, he was killed. So that now, you see, my sweet girl, you are alone in the world, except for me. Dismiss from your mind the thoughts of the lover, who could so easily believe anything against you; reward the man who has striven so hard to gain you."

So confident was the man of success that he slipped an arm about her; but she flung him off, fiercely, and ran to the other side of the room.

"Keep away!" she cried. "If you dare to come near me I will rouse the house. You have brought me here under false pretenses. I am going away this very night—this very moment!"

With a muttered exclamation, he darted after her, but stopped on the instant, listening. There had come a loud ringing at the outer gate. Taking advantage of his hesitation, the girl pulled open a door close beside her and ran along a dark passage which opened from it. At the same moment Cornelius came hurrying into the room.

"'Ere, never mind the gel," he whispered, hoarsely. "We've got summink else to think about, besides gels. There's a lot of people at the gate askin' for Gilbert Rickerby!"

CHAPTER V.

Rogues and Vagabonds.

"My dear, our last chance lies with Gilbert Rickerby. Should he fail, then—welcome, sweet oblivion!"

The speaker raised one hand, with a dramatic gesture, towards the sky, as though he fondly hoped that the oblivion he courted would descend upon him without further delay; from the cheerful smile upon his face, he evidently anticipated that it would make its appearance in an alluring shape. His companion, a little, fair, faded woman, with an untidy mop of yellowish hair, which she had a way of skittishly raking into her eyes, shook the mop now and laughed. Evidently, she was used to him, and did not take him quite so seriously as he took himself.

"Aye—laugh on; I need mirth at such an hour as this!" cried the man. He was a tall, florid individual, with what hair he had remaining somewhat longer than is the fashion, and with a great, heavy, clean-shaven face. His clothing was threadbare, and his boots bore signs of much wayfaring on dusty roads; yet he wore his dilapidated hat with an air, and stuck his arms akimbo, as he sat on a bank by the roadside. The woman who sat beside him was somewhat younger; and her face, despite its careworn expression, was something of a merry one, and had a good-humored twinkle in the blue eyes. The only article of baggage appeared to be a small portmanteau, which lay on the ground at the man's feet. It was late in the afternoon, at a time of the year when the sun sets early; and it was already growing dark.

"Last of my race!" muttered the man, with another tragic gesture. "And so ends the race. In the morning, my love, we will probably be discovered, like the innocent children in the woods, side by side—smiling, even in death—and with the little birds, bright songsters of the vale, endeavoring to hide the tragedy by covering us with leaves."

"You'll want a bit of covering, Anthony," said the lady, glancing at the man's somewhat bulky form.

"Peace, giddy heart!" exclaimed the man. "And yet I would not have you be still; in such a moment as this, when a numbness already begins to steal upon me, I would hear the jest in mine ears to the last; I would—"

"Oh, do be quiet, Anthony; if you could only have found it in your heart to take to low comedy instead of trying Hamlet and them other kings, we shouldn't be reducted to this. There's no mistake about it, Anthony; you're a deal funnier than you think."

"Peace, woman—you rave; you are already unstrung by long privation. Let us regard the situation with philosophy, since you are determined not to let me die with that dignity which belongs to my craft. I would have liked well to die like this; to have seen the next morning in the papers—I mean for you to have read, with tears—how Anthony Taggett, who once played Hamlet before the mayor of Bristol—"

"Only by accident, Anthony—only by accident; he had been dining, and wandered into the wrong show—said he thought you were a circus."

"No matter; he had to hear it. Yet, to what am I reduced? We have come to the end of our resources. Our manager—perfidious varlet!—has bolted with such moneys as were in our coffers; we have tramped a great part of the way from Bristol, and are not yet near to London. Yet, cheer up, Medora; others whose names are blazoned on the pages of history have come into London in such fashion. At the present moment, however"—his voice assumed a less-hopeful tone—"we are remarkably hungry, and we are practically penniless. Night is upon us, and the silvery moon—"

"Oh, never mind the silvery moon, Anthony!" broke in Mrs. Taggett, impatiently: "what we want to see is a silvery coin or two. We can't sleep in the road, Mr. Taggett. What are we to do about this Mr. Gilbert Rickerby?"

"My dear, you surely remember that some five or six years ago a Mr. Gilbert Rickerby joined the company in which I then played heavy parts. Young fellow, with a bright, clear eye; quite a gentleman."

"Bless the boy; I remember him," replied Mrs. Taggett. "Told you he had run away from home, didn't he?"

"Even so. I learned from him that he was—or should have been—a youth of fortune; that he had quarreled with his sire and had been thrown upon the world. I remember, when he parted from us to go abroad, he said to me: 'If ever you should be down on your luck, old Taggett'—a familiar way he had with me, my love—'inquire for me at Rickerby's Folly, St. John's Wood, London. Anyone will show you the place.' And so I thought, Medora, that I would journey thither and see if I could find him. If he is rich, he might even be disposed to produce the money and put me in a theater. Why not?"

"But he's seen you act, hasn't he?" asked Mrs. Taggett, slily.

"My love, you have an unfortunate habit of saying the wrong thing at the wrong moment—of saying it, too, in an enigmatical fashion, which annoys me. He has seen me act, as you know: what has that to do with the matter?"

"Oh, nothing," replied Mrs. Taggett, innocently. The only thing is, if we are to get to St. John's Wood to-night, somtone will have to carry us; for my part, I can't walk another step."

It was at this moment, when blank despair was beginning to fall upon the elastic spirits of Mrs. Taggett, that a diversion was caused by the arrival of a third wayfarer, who limped along painfully toyards them, and whose face was set in the same direction as that towards which their own thoughts and hopes were turned—London. The newcomer—a woman—looked at them a moment as she passed, and half-stopped, as though about to speak; but thought better of it, and went on her way. They watched her as she slowly dragged along; she looked as weary and helpless as themselves.

After going some twenty or thirty yards down the road, the stranger stopped and glanced back, hesitated a moment or two and then slowly retraced her steps. Mr. Taggett glanced critically, at the woman, who was young and unmistakably handsome; Mrs. Taggett drew herself up and adjusted her cloak with an air of gentility.

"A woman—young—and unprotected," murmured Mr. Taggett, with a glance at the approaching stranger.

"You've already got one woman—young and unprotected—to look after, Mr. Taggett!" retorted his wife, sharply.

"True, my love—true; I do not forget my responsibilities," replied Mr. Taggett. "But it is evident that this lady would have speech with us."

"Well—if you're going to have speech with every female tramp we meet on the road, Anthony, I think things have come to a pretty pass," said Mrs. Taggett. "Well, madam—what do you want?"

The last remark was addressed to the woman, who had stopped hesitatingly before them. Her clothes were worn and shabby, as were their own; yet she carried herself with a certain pride, as though she beat down whatever shame she felt in her position fiercely and resolutely. She was tall and fair, with a singularly strong, defiant look about her.

"You needn't think I've come back to beg of you," she said, harshly. "I wouldn't beg of anyone. Only some dread, unaccountable fear has come upon me, and I don't care to face that dark road alone. I swore, when I set out, that I'd walk the whole way, and that nothing should turn me back; now"—she threw out her hands quickly and laughed—"my resolution has broken down in a moment. Are you bound for London?"

"Hark—hark—the dogs do bark; the beggars have come to town!" chanted Anthony Taggett, waving his hand in time to the words. "There is a curious lilt about those lines which has always appealed to me; I never thought they would be so appropriate as on the present occasion. Madam"—he turned to the stranger—"we are in sorry case; but if an arm, which has, ere now, wielded a broadsword in mimic combat, is of service to you, it is here. There is a strange Bohemian strain in me which teaches me to be ready for all chances and changes of fickle Fortune. You are one of the chances and changes. Pray, sit down." He stood up and bared his head, with an air as though he were inviting the woman to the most luxurious resting places in the world.

She dropped down on the bank by the roadside and covered her face with her hands, and sat motionless. After a long pause she raised her head and glanced round at them wearily.

"How are you going to get to London?" she asked. "You look as worn out, the pair of you, as I do."

"That is the very point we were discussing," responded Anthony Taggett, cheerfully. "In a crisis of this kind, it behooves a man to be resourceful and alert, to realize fully all that is expected of him—to—"

Mrs. Taggett laid her hand quickly on his arm. "Don't talk, Anthony," she said; "I hear the sound of wheels. Anything on wheels is good enough for Medora Taggett to-night, and it should be good enough for you, Understand, Taggett, you must be firm; if violence is necessary, you must be violent; but, if this vehicle—whatever it is—we are going on it, or in it, I don't mind which."

Mr. Taggett got up and stood expectant; the sound of wheels came nearer. Peering into the gathering darkness, they saw a huge vehicle lumbering along towards them, drawn by three horses; the driver tramped along beside the leading horse sturdily, probably to warm himself, for the night was chilly. Seeing the surprising form of Anthony Taggett in the very center of the road, standing, with arms outstretched, as though he would have valiantly stopped the whole ponderous thing, the man checked his horses, in sheer amazement. The vehicle was a huge pantechnicon, evidently fully loaded.

Mr. Taggett saw his advantage, and embraced it; advancing quickly, he dropped a hand upon the shoulder of the driver and shook him to and fro, heartily, in that fashion so much favored of melodramatic actors when they greet a friend unexpectedly; in fact, Mr. Taggett carried the thing out so well, that he even held the man away at arm's-length and smiled upon him; and then drew him nearer to whisper in his ear

"My friend—we have tarried long for thee. Properly, it should have been a wagoner, with loaded wain, who would have halted his smoking team before us; but this will serve. In these modern days a man should not be too particular about his choice of vehicle." Then, dropping his flamboyant speech, hurriedly, he whispered, in a more natural tone: "My good man, you see before you an unfortunate creature, down on his luck. Moreover, there are two ladies here who are utterly worn out. If you could, by any chance, manage to give us a lift—"

"Why didn't yer say so afore?" asked the good-natured fellow. "You goes on a-talkin' all sorts of stuff I don't unnerstan'—leavin' me to guess 'arf of it. If you don't mind sittin' up on the tail-board be'ind, you're welcome enough to that." He indicated, as he spoke, a broad shelf which stood out behind the closed dors of the van, and which were within a couple of feet of the ground. More than that, he assisted the two women to climb up to it, disposing some sacks for their greater comfort; and, having seen Mr. Taggett comfortably seated, also, started his team again.

The spirits of Anthony Taggett rose considerably as the vehicle jogged steadily on towards London. Mrs. Taggett, too, had regained something of her usual cheerfulness; only the strange woman sat quite still, with her elbows on her knees and her chin propped up in her hands. Perhaps Anthony Taggett, after a time, imagined her to be asleep; perhaps he felt that any subject he might chance to discuss with his wife could have no possible interest for a stranger. At all events, he began, in his usual rather loud tones, to talk about the place to which they were journeying and the man they hoped to see.

"My dear," he said, grandiloquently, "I already foresee the day when I shall tell this in a capital joke, while the ruby wine goes round; shall enlarge upon it—"

"I wouldn't enlarge upon it any more than you can help, just now, Anthony," broke in Mrs. Taggett, shivering. "It ain't a subject anyone can quite see the humor of, at the moment."

"My dear, I can see not only the humor of it; I can see a great situation, in that drama which is already formed in my mind. I shall cut out the lift accident (you will recollect, my love, that the hero comes down from the flies, in a lift, and confronts the villain in the nick of time, aided by the low-com, disguised as the lift-boy)—I shall bring him on in a pantechnicon, with real horses. Yes, my love—this is, most decidedly, a situation we can use."

"I suppose you didn't ask the man what part of London he was going to, did you?" asked Mrs. Taggett, after a pause. "It might be awkward to find St. John's Wood at this time of night."

"No, my dear; I did not ask the man. You see it is quite impossible for us to reimburse the man in any way for his trouble, save with thanks. I was loth to suggest that he should actually drive up to the door of Rickerby's Folly and ring the bell."

"Don't be sarcastic, Anthony; it don't become you," retorted Mrs. Taggett. "All I wanted to say was—"

"Did I hear you say you were going to—to Rickerby's Folly?" It was the strange woman who had spoken; and Mr. Taggett, turning quickly, found that he was looking straight into her eager eyes, which were bent fiercely upon him.

"I—I—certainly did mention, in conversation with this lady—that I was going to a house of that name," began Anthony Taggett, hesitatingly.

"Do you know a man called Gilbert Rickerby?" She asked. She seemed to breathe more freely as she spoke.

The guileless Mr. Taggett threw back his head, spread out his hands, and appealed, with a smile, to his wife. "My dear, this lady actually asks me if I know Gilbert Rickerby? My dear madam," he turned to the stranger, "I may say that you might as well ask me if I know Mrs. Taggett. Gilbert Rickerby had the good fortune to come under my training some years ago; whatever distinction he may achieve in the world hereafter, he will always be able to lay his hand upon his heart and say: 'You observe that I walk better than my fellows; that I talk in a manner not commonly heard among men; if you would know the reason why, turn to Anthony Taggett.' Know him, indeed; know that bright youth, whom to see was to admire—to talk with, a liberal education, cheap at any price! In the hour of adversity, my first words to Mrs. Taggett were, 'Let us seek our friend, Gilbert Rickerby—the man of the open hand—the honest heart—'"

"The open hand—the honest heart! That for his open hand and honest heart!" The stranger snapped her fingers before the astonished Mr. Taggett, and laughed bitterly. "Do you want a name for everything low, and mean, and lying, under heaven? Do you want a word that shall express how low a thing a man may be? Do you want a name for liar, and coward, and brute? I'll give it to you, in two words—Gilbert Rickerby!"

"You've made a mistake, my dear," said Mrs. Taggett, shaking her untidy head of hair vigorously, and leaning around Mr. Taggett to look at the stranger. "I don't know who you may be; but you've certainly got the wrong cue, as we say in our business. Gilbert Rickerby ain't the man to do any woman a wrong; I'll wager he's always been ready for his call, wherever he might be, and has spoken his lines straight. So don't you say anything against him, young woman—at least, not in present company."

"Mrs. Taggett puts the matter in professional phraseology, I admit," said Mr. Taggett; "but she is right. However, all we have to concern ourselves with, at the moment, is the fact—that we, who have met so strangely, are all journeying to the same place. Another situation, my love, for the drama; it will not be believed—but in my speech to the house, I will relate this, and so confound them. My love—this drama is getting on!"

"And so are we!" exclaimed Mrs. Taggett, giving herself a shake and sitting upright. "Here are the streets of London, and I think it would be well if you would jump down, Anthony, and run round and ask the driver how near he goes to St. John's Wood. I wouldn't ask him to go out of his way, if I were you."

"My dear, I won't," replied Mr. Taggett, as he scrambled down form the seat into the road. "The time will come when I shall reward this young man—when his name will be in the papers."

"Don't lead him to hope too much, Anthony," Mrs. Taggett called after her husband, as he disappeared around the side of the vehicle. In a few moments he came back and announced that the nearest point the man would pass would be the Marble Arch; then he would stop there and set them down.

"From there I fear that we shall have to walk," said Mr. Taggett, as he climbed back into his seat. "However, we have very much to be grateful for: my only hope now is to find Gilbert Rickerby established in his father's house and willing to afford us that temporary assistance which we so greatly need."

"That is my hope, too," said the stranger, in a low voice. "I have come many miles to find him; I shall have something interesting to tell him—this beautiful friend of yours—when we meet."

THE AMERICAN FARMER.

A Reader, an Observer, Politician, Power, Notwithstanding Edwin Markham to the Contrary.

"When farming was conducted on a small scale, limited to the mere efficiency of the farmer and his sons, its interests were narrow and its circumstances mean. Its rewards were so meager that the 'hired man' was often better off at the year's end than the man who owned the land, took the chances and worried away his digestion over the mortgage. The generous moods of nature were examples too expensive to be imitated, and close-fisted parsimony was exalted as the chief of the virtues.

"To-day this is changed over a large area of the country. On the great bonanza farms of the West a man with 10,000 acres under his care and hundreds of men in his employ is a figure of importance. His intimate concern with the world's affairs makes him a reader, an observer, often a politician and a power. Even 10,000 acres is too small for him to confine himself to. His great business demands that he travel. He must go to Duluth, to Minneapolis, to Chicago, to Buffalo and to New York. A small mistake, a failure to sell at the right time, or to discard an old machine and adopt a new one, may cost him thousands. He is working his brain as hard as he can, and calling upon his faculties for all they will do. He is bringing himself and his business more into touch with the modern spirit, and through combination with his neighbors is making agriculture more and more a power in the land."—Ainslee's Magazine.

NOT SO BAD TO TAKE.

New Cure for All Diseases Given Out—Sticks of Peppermint Candy.

New and startling remedies for the ills that flesh is heir to are constantly being placed before the public; but the most unique and original theory as to doses was recently put forward by a handsome, gray-haired gentleman after what is generally called "a quiet little game of whist." Rheumatism, and one cure and another, were under discussion by the little cluster of four men, when the gray-haired man spoke:

"You'll all laugh at me, of course," he said, "but I can cure myself of anything with just plain peppermint stick candy."

A shout arose; everybody laughed.

"I said you'd laugh," he continued, "but it's true—as true as gospel. Every time I feel a little under the weather—aches in my bones or a cold coming on, I just eat, before going to bed, four or five sticks of good, pure peppermint candy. I buy it at an old-fashioned confectioner's—one I've known for years, and in the morning I get up feeling all right."

Everybody laughed again.

"Go on laughing," the stick-candy prescriber exclaimed. "I'm talking about something I've proved. The peppermint stick-candy cure is all right. If you don't believe me, try it. It costs little and is pleasant to take."—Detroit Free Press.

A Royal Beef Eater.

Being very fat, the king of Portugal is forbidden by his physician to eat much meat. He calmly disobeys the orders, however, and is especially fond of beef, of which he eats great quantities.

When he visited England, a few years ago, he was stopping at Lord Salisbury's country seat, where, also, King Edward was a guest. One day at dinner King Carlos was asked what impressed him most during his stay in England.

He replied, thoughtfully: "Well, I think English roast beef is very delightful."

"Oh," laughed King Edward, "surely something else has impressed you as well."

"Ah," was the reply, "of course, the English boiled belied beef, also, is delightful."—M. A. P.

And an American Woman, Too.

"This thing of Bulgarian brigands holding a woman for ransom is preposterous!" exclaimed Mr. Meekton's wife.

"That's my idea, precisely," answered Mr. Meekton. "The idea of a young woman allowing herself to be frightened by a lot of common brigands!"—Washington Star.

THREE CHICAGO DOCTORS

monthly periods for it meant a couple of days in bed in awful agony. I finally made up my mind that the good doctors were guessing; and hearing from different friends such good reports of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, I tried that. I bless the day I did, for it was the dawning of a new life for me. I used five bottles before I was cured, but when they were taken I was a well woman once more. Your Compound is certainly wonderful. France Faces Revolution

At Monteceau, a mining town in the center of France, 8,000 miners were divided into two camps—those who wanted to work, and those who wanted to prevent them, writes a Paris correspondent. For some time their only weapons had been sticks and stones. Then a Paris paper of the Red Socialist propaganda offered a novel premium to its readers and distributers; for every fifteen copies of the paper bought, plus eight francs cash, it offered a remodeled Gras or Chassepot rifle. The striking miners of Monteceau saw in these rifles a new means to persuade their weaker brethren. They began to send for them in quantity. The working miners instead of being intimidated by these preparations, began ordering rifles for themselves from the same accommodating Socialistic paper.

There was any quantity of these rifles in Paris, old Gras and Chassepot models, condemned by the war department and sold at auction for a few francs each to speculators. These latter had remodeled them, suppressing the rifle-thread and modifying the cartridge; but this did not prevent their being able to send a bullet through a thick plank at 150 yards. The Socialist committee of Saint-Etienne—another mining center—began buying them at wholesale from the speculators. The Socialist newspaper continued to do a roaring trade, not only with the strikers of Monteceau but with their correspondents in the center, the north and the south of France. At Saint-Etienne, a one-time Protestant pastor, became a fervent anarchistic agitator, got possession of some thousands of them. These, with fine anarchist impartiality, he sold or gave away to the non-striking miners of Monteceau. Another lot he disposed of at Commentry, Carmaux and Decazeville. Before the government had taken any notice of this extraordinary traffic, 7,000 rifles had been admittedly hidden away by the men of Monteceau alone; while the clandestine arsenals of Saint-Etienne and Carmaux are rumored to contain as many more. The true figures, however, cannot be known until the dawning of the dark day when the weapons shall be used. There are agitators who boast that the miners of the north are also fully armed. One thing is certain; the supply of Gras and Chassepot rifles has been practically inexhaustible, the government having in the past three years auctioned off 100,000 of these obsolete models dating from the Franco-Prussian war.

While all this was going on, while the magistrates (juges d'instruction) of Paris were refusing to prosecute the venders on the ground that the remodeled rifles were not technically "arms of war," and while the prefect of the Saone-and-Loire was tranquilly neglecting to take notice of the arming, nine men had met together in the private room of a wine shop of Saint-Etienne. They were Bexant and Evrard, delegates from the north and the Pas-de-Calais; Joucaviel and Chabrolin, from Carmaux and d'Alais, to represent the south; Merzet and Girardet, sent by the federation of the Loire; Buvat and the Citizen Buissonnier, standing for the center, and Citizen Cotte, general secretary. These nine men as delegates to the National Federation of Miners, claim to speak for 160,000 fellow workingmen and voters. Besides clearing off their regular three months' accumulation of routine business, they had to demand three great things of the government and fix a date for that most redoubtable of all labor demonstrations, a general strike—the long-threatened strike of the Federation.

The three demands made on the government will show how far organized labor has gone in France—(1) the establishment (by government) of a minimum salary; (2) old-age pensions of two francs per day after twenty-five years of work, without regard to age, and (3), an eight hour working day. The old-age pensions are notoriously undergoing a course of "study" in the proper governmental circles. A beginning was made in the law of May 29, 1894, and the best opinion is that the miners will have to await, with the other brethren, the general granting of this boon until it is discovered where the money is to come from. With regard to the eight-hour working day there is no consensus of opinion among the miners themselves, 100,000 out of 160,000 of them having refused, when solicited, to vote upon it. If the minimum day's pay could be secured the eight-hour working day would come in handy, but as there is no real hope that the government could succeed in dictating fixed expenses to mine owners, even should it be willing to undertake the novel task, the eight-hour working day remains one of the enigmas of the industry. Besides this, great masses of miners, especially in the more prosperous localities, prefer not to be bound down to rigid hours. They vote with the federation, or abstain from voting, but their interest urges them the other way. Such was the case of the miners of Monteceau before the strike of 1899, and such is the case of the non-strikers, called "The Yellows," of today.

The government has at last taken a firm hand and whenever the Reds store an abundance of rifles a raid by gendarmes (French military police) is sure to follow. Several seizures have already been reported. In some cases individuals bearing arms are being notified to deliver them to the government officers under penalty of death. The individuals are generally complying with the order but it requires force in cases where the revolutionists maintain arsenals.

A Banking Experience in Virginia After the War.

Gov. J. Hoge Tyler of Virginia is responsible for this interesting banking story: "Soon after the war, when banking rates, or discount rates, were high, an old fellow in one of the southwest counties of Virginia, a farmer, went to the bank to secure a loan of $1,000 for five years. Of course this made the 'man behind the grating' open his eyes and look at him with wonder and astonishment, and the farmer was told that they could not make provision for such a loan as that unless they had the most satisfactory collateral that could be obtained. The old fellow asked, 'Collot what?' 'Collateral,' the banker answered. 'Well, what is that?' the farmer asked. 'The banker went on to describe the stocks and bonds and securities that are meant by the term collateral. The old farmer said: 'Well, if I had those things I wouldn't want any money. They are better than money,' he said. 'Well,' said the banker, 'you can't get the money unless you succeed in getting some of those collaterals, and then we might discount your note.' Well, the farmer succeeded in getting some collateral and in getting some personal indorsements, and also in getting his own name upon the paper and his wife's as well, and obtained mortgages on everything he had. He came and dumped his collateral down on the banker's desk. They were satisfactory, and the cashier made out his note for him for $1,000, and told him to sign it, which the farmer did. After signing the note he passed it over. Then the cashier counted him out $287.52. The old farmer ejaculated, 'Come on.' 'No, sir,' said the cashier, 'that is all you can get on a note of $1,000 for five years at our present rate of discount.' 'Dis what?' asked the farmer. 'Discount,' said the cashier; 'that is all you can get.' 'What do you mean?' said the farmer. 'Why,' said the cashier, 'we take off the discount for the first four months and the next four months, and so on, and then, at the end of five years your note will only make $287.52.' 'I am glad that I did not ask you to lend me that money for ten years,' ejaculated the farmer, 'or you would have had me in debt and I would have to pay you something for asking you to lend it to me.'"

Sudden Inspiration.

"We have with us this evening," the master of ceremonies said, "a gentleman from the Sandwich Islands, who kindly consented to sing a song——"

"It's name!" demanded several rude boys in the rear seats. The chairman was non-plussed, but only for a moment. "The gentleman from Hawaii who has so kindly consented to assist us this evening," he went on, with a contemptuous glance at the rear seats, "will sing a selection entitled 'How I Love My Honolulu!'" The gentleman from Hawaii then proceeded to sing something in Kanaka, and nobody was the wiser.—Chicago Tribune.

The genuine Hostetter's Stomach Bitters must have their Private Die Stamp over the neck of the bottle. For fifty years it has been the recognized remedy for stomach, liver and kidney complaints. It will cure dyspepsia, indigestion, constipation and biliousness, also prevent malaria, fever and ague.

The Palace of the Poor.

In London the Adelphia Arches were famed for a most wonderful collection of human waifs and strays, and Paris, it appears, has something analogous at Bagnolet, where there is a marvelous shelter called by a French journalist "The Subterranean Palace of the Poor." It has been produced by extensive excavations under a hill whose soil yields material for making plaster. Large fires are kept going to burn this natural production and produce the plaster. Around these glowing fires congregate homeless men, women and children, undisturbed, if they behave, by the Paris police.

For years the undermining of this hill of cozy comfort has been going on, and pillars have been left standing at regular intervals, to prevent the top falling in, which, in the glowing firelight resemble, to some extent, the fairy halls of the Arabian Nights.

The scene is wierd in the extreme, as the firelight plays upon groups of ragged wretches who bask in the generous warmth, until another winter morning dawns and excavation work commences when they must go out into the chilly air and scramble for any stray crumbs which may fall from the rich man's table in wealthy Paris.—Paris Messenger.

Physicians Much Interested.

Northport, Mich., Dec. 9.—The medical men are just now eagerly discussing a most remarkable cure of a severe case of Kidney Disease in this county. Mr. Byron O. Leslie of Northport has for years been a victim of kidney derangements, with all the consequent pain and annoyance. He was gradually growing worse, and as the disease advanced he became very despondent, often wondering if he would have to endure this suffering all his lifetime.

But at last he found a remedy that cured him in Dodd's Kidney Pills. He was much pleased, but did not say much about it, lest the good effect he experienced would not last. Now, however, after nine months of continued good health he has concluded that he is permanently cured, and his announcement of this has caused a profound sensation among the physicians and the people who knew of his apparently hopeless condition.

IT'S UP TO US.

The River and Harbor bill is to be one of the first matters taken up by congress, and it is the duty of the people living along the Red Lake River to see that the stream is not overlooked by the lawmakers. The Engineer Corps has for years had a scheme for a lock and dam at the outlet of the Red lake, to convert that great body of water into a reservoir for the equalization of the flow in the river. This matter has been recommended repeatedly by the chief of engineers, but has always been passed up by congress with merely a small appropriation for preliminary surveys. These surveys have been made, and the feasability of the scheme demonstrated by the engineers, and it is now for the people of this section to urge the completion of the plan. A dam at the outlet would not only help the navigation of the stream, but would in great part prevent the great annual freshet which frequently causes great damage in the Red River Valley. Grand Forks, Crookston, Red Lake Falls and St. Hilaire are directly interested with us in this matter and all the residents of the valley north of Grand Forks in scarcely less degree. The Red Lake river is the principal feeder of the Red river and if it could be curbed at the freshet season the vast damage by floods in the valley would be in great part stopped. An organized effort will be made by the citizens of Thief River Falls, and the assistance of other towns in the valley will be asked. It is to be hoped that all will turn in and push the good work along.

Senator Grindeland, of Warren last week announced that he was in the race for the Republican nomination in the Ninth district, and did not propose to withdraw. This will be pleasant news to Mr. Grindeland's many friends in this section, and if he is successful a good man will be nominated.

Rules Governing Tardiness and Absence.

1. In case of tardiness and absence the pupil shall not be admitted to classes until he has presented an excuse stating reason for such tardiness or absence.

2. The only excuses which will be accepted for tardiness or absence are sickness of the pupil, sickness in the family, or unavoidable necessity, and of the sufficiency of the last cause the teacher shall be the judge. Absence for religious instruction or on days held by the church as sacred, may be excused by the teacher on written or personal application of the pupil's parents or guardians. Two cases of tardiness unexplained shall count as one absence.

3. Excuses for any other cause than sickness or unavoidable necessity will be granted only on written or personal application of the parent or guardian to the teacher before such absence occurs.

4. Any pupils absent without excuse as provided in rules 1, 2 and 3, shall be marked zero in all recitations occuring during such absence, and any pupil absent three times without excuse in any four consecutive weeks shall be dropped from the roll by his teacher, who shall notify said pupil's parents or guardian and the superintendent. A pupil thus suspended may be reinstated by the superintendent on receipt of a satisfactory explanation or a guarantee from the parent or guardian that the said pupil will be punctual in the future. A pupil suspended a second time for unexcused absences can be reinstated only by an order from the board.

5. Any pupil absent from examination of any special exercise cannot be admitted to regular classes until such exercise is made up in a manner satisfactory to the teacher.

PROBABLY DEAD

One of the Heirs to an Estate of $15,000

The following, taken from the Pioneer Press is of local interest, inasmuch as Michael McMahon was known here:

The relatives of Patrick McMahon, late of Egganstown are searching for their brother, Michael McMahon, who disappeared six years ago. An estate of $15,000 is to be divided, and the distribution cannot be made until something definite is learned of the missing brother.

The missing man was born on the Rosemount farm. Eight years ago, when he was twenty-two, he decided to go West, and bade goodbye to his parents and six brothers and sisters. He went no farther than Dakota, and for nearly two years he wrote home regularly.

The last heard from him was when he went to Thief River Falls, Minn., to work in the woods. He left the crew with which he was working one night, and has never since been heard from.

He was supposed to have fallen into a lake and drowned, but a body recovered six months later could not be identified by members of his family.

The people residing here had always thought that McMahon was dead, although his body has never been found. He was last seen by William Crawford of this city. Crawford states that he was with him at Shotley Brook, and directed him to the camp where the government estimators were then located, a distance of about twelve miles across the ice, to the mouth of Tamarac river. He started on the journey in the evening and that is the last that was heard of him. A brother came up the next summer and searched the county but no trace of the body was found. The theory advanced at the time was that he either fell into the lake or was killed by wolves, which were said to be very numerous in that section that winter.

Do you want to sell your farm? List it with me and I will sell it. K. J. Weeks.

FRIDAY NIGHT

A Meeting of Commercial Club and Citizens.

There will be a meeting of the Commercial Club Friday night in the council chambers of the city hall. All members of the club, as well as business men are requested to be present. This will be the first meeting of the club since last winter and it is to be hoped that a large attendance will be had. There are several important subjects of interest to everyone in Thief River Falls to be discussed, and everyone is invited to attend and express his views. It makes no difference whether you are a member of the club or not, so long as you are interested in the future welfare of Thief River Falls.

NEW LAND CO.

Elliott Land Company to Locate Here.

C. C. Elliott, of the Elliott Land Co., Ogden, Iowa, has decided to open up a land office in Thief River Falls. George Stubbs will be the local manager.

Mr. Elliott is a hustler and will be sure to do a large business. It is expected that he will arrive here today from Iowa with a large number of German farmers who will look over the land around here.

Goes to Beltrami.

Rev. Sterling has accepted a call extended by the Methodists of Beltrami, a progressive little village in Polk county on the Great Northern railroad south of Crookston. The church cannot afford to pay a very large salary, but the business men of Beltrami are desirous of having a newspaper published there and have guaranteed to give Rev. Sterling a liberal support if he will establish one there. This he has decided to do and when he is not rushed attending to the spiritual wants of the people he will be engaged in publishing the Beltrami Golden Rule, which is the name selected for his new publication.

WANTS A DIVORCE

Mrs. Cloutier Does Not Love Her Husband.

Caroline Cloutier has asked for a divorce from her husband, who conducts a small store on La Bree avenue in this city.

Mrs. Cloutier has had troubles of her own until you cannot rest, having been married four times. She lived on a farm north of Crookston with her first husband and found, after several years, that he had a wife living from whom he had never been divorced. He died, however, before seperation was brought about. She then married No. 2, but was speedily divorced from him. Cupid served her a queer trick next time and she succumbed to the smiles of an Indian named of Deszelart. Mr. and Mrs. Deszelart were very happy until the bride discovered that her husband had another wife in Canada.

She sued for a divorce and the day it was granted met and loved the present incumbent of the chair at the head of her table. She alleges that the present spouse is abusive, calls her names which would not look well in print, plays handball with the dishes, and is very jealous. She will therefore sue the court that absolute divorce be granted her. Cloutier is said to be quite rich having several farms and a valuable piece of property in Thief River Falls.

"There is no excuse for any man to live in a town if he does not like it. If you have no word of commendation to say of your town, its institutions or its people, emigrate. You won't stop the town clock by going away, the church bells will have the same musical ring, the little dogs will play as briskly, the fish in the creek will bite just as well, and the pure air, bright sunshine and sparkling water will have the same health giving properties. Speak a good word for your neighbor if you can; if you can't don't everlastingly enlarge on his faults. If you have become so thoroughly sour and disgruntled, move away; go some where where things suit you.—Exchange.

A FUR COAT

Presented to Rev. Dade by Members of His Congregation.

Rev. Dade was very pleasantly surprised last Friday evening by a large number of the members of his congregation, who called to present him with a handsome fur coat. About twenty-five were present and the evening was spent in social intercourse, and all report an enjoyable time. Rev. Dade is held in high esteem by the members of his congregation and they took this means of expressing their sentiments.

Getting a Start.

A sure way open to any young man of pluck, skill and energy, to gain a start in the ownership of a farm or business enterprise is thus presented by the St Paul Farmer; J. S. Trigg, the well known and popular Iowa paragrapher, says; "There is one avenue always open to an industrious and economical young man, whereby he may get a start in life, and that is to hire out as a farm hand. You ask, how can a fellow ever get a start in this way? Well, let's see. A good farm hand can today command $275 per annum, his board and washing. He can save of this amount $225 each year, if he will. Five years so spent will give him capital enough so that he would be safe in buying a piece of land and starting in business on his own hook. While he is doing this, however he wants to let liverymen, nice girls and dude clothes strictly alone and put in his spare time reading and fitting himself to fill a large place." Of course Mr. Trigg means a competent farm hand, and not the kind described by Henry Prudence in Farm Students' Review—a fellow who was always contemplating the performance of big things in his mind, and while thinking it over, neglected and overlooked the necessary things expected of him, and when he was directed to a certain task he lacked the patience or inclination to master the details, the little things that lay at the foundation of success on the farm or anywhere else.—Chicago Daily Produce.

CRONKHITE DEAD.

Represented Marshall County in the Senate.

John Q. Cronkhite, ex-senator from Marshall county and well known in this section, died last Monday at Olin, Iowa. Death was caused by a stroke of paralysis. He was 48 years of age at the time of his death and has always been prominent in public affairs in Northern Minnesota.

NEW YEARS EVE.

Gray Gets $3,000.

The supreme court last week affirmed the decision rendered by a jury in Judge Watts' court in the case of Albert Gray vs. the Red Lake Falls Lumber company where in the plaintiff was given damages in the sum of $3,000 for injuries received while in the company's employ. Gray was an expert "top loader" in skidding logs and through the bungling of inexperienced help suffered a broken leg.

The following notice was recently received by a Devils Lake, N. D., physician in answer to a missent dun: "Dear Sir: This note was put in my box by mistake. I hant the man, hees dead and ain't any relative of mine anyway. How does your conshens let you dun the dead? Why don't you lead a better criston life and try and meet the man in heaven which is worth more than forty dollars to any doctor."

The government has begun an action against the Crookston Lumber company to recover $4,056.36 for timber alleged to have been cut on government land, the complaint alleging that the company secured it, well knowing it had been cut illegally. The case comes on for trial in the spring.

SCHLEY IS GUILTY

MAJORITY OF THE COURT CONDEMNS HIM ON ELEVEN POINTS.

VINDICATED BY ADMIRAL DEWEY

SAYS SCHLEY WAS IN ABSOLUTE COMMAND AT BATTLE OF SANTIAGO.

CREDIT FOR VICTORY IS HIS MAJORITY SAYS HIS CONDUCT WAS VACILLATING AND DILATARY.

Washington, Dec. 15.—The most prolonged, interesting and important naval tribunal ever held in this country came to a close yesterday, having in open and secret session lasted three months short of one week, when Secretary Long was handed the findings of the court of inquiry which inquired into the conduct of Rear Admiral Schley during the Santiago campaign. For seven weeks the court heard testimony, and for fully a month it deliberated upon that mass of evidence, finally reaching the conclusions announced yesterday. The result was a complete surprise, and it is probable that no prophesy has approached the truth. Instead of one report there were two.

Admirals Benham and Ramsey concur in the first, which is signed by Admiral Dewey also as a matter of form. Admiral Dewey makes a separate report, although he agrees with the findings of facts subscribed to by the others. The majority report on eleven points, while Admiral Dewey sustains him in most particulars. The majority opinion finds, in brief, that Admiral Schley should have proceeded with the utmost dispatch to Cienfuegos and maintained a close blockade; that he should have endeavored to obtain information of the Spanish squadron there; that he should have proceeded to Santiago with dispatch; that he should not have made the retrograde movement; that he should have obeyed the department's orders; that he should have endeavored to capture the Spanish vessels in Santiago; that he did not do his utmost to destroy the Colon; that he caused the squadron to lose distance in the loop of the Brooklyn; that he thereby caused the Texas to back; that he did injustice to Hodgson; that his conduct in the campaign was characterized by vacillation, dilatoriness and lack of enterprise; that his official reports on the coal supply were misleading and inaccurate; that his conduct during the battle was self-possessed and that he encouraged in his own person his subordinate officers and men.

Vindicated by Dewey.

Admiral Dewey, in his report, says that the passage to Cienfuegos was made with all dispatch; that in view of his coal supply the blockade of Cienfuegos was effective; that he allowed the Adula to enter Cienfuegos to get information; that his passage to Santiago was with as much dispatch as possible, keeping the squadron together; that the blockade of Santiago was effective, and, finally, that he was the senior officer off Santiago, in absolute command, and entitled to the credit due for the glorious victory which resulted in the total destruction of the Spanish ships.

It is said at the navy department that there will be no further proceedings in this celebrated case, on the department's initiative. Secretary Long and Judge Advocate Lemly positively decline to discuss the findings in any phase. The secretary received the reports at 5 o'clock last evening and he has not yet acted on them. It is probable that he will simply with the word "Approved" to the whole record. The court itself recommends no further proceedings owing to the lapse of time.

A representative of the Associated Press conveyed the first information of the findings of the court to Admiral Schley. He was seated in the public reception room of an hotel chatting with friends and several newspaper men, and evinced no sign of nervousness over the outcome. When the conclusions of Admiral Dewey were read to him Admiral Schley showed his pleasure, and it was evident from his manner that he regarded the statement from Admiral Dewey as a vindication of his cause. He declined to make any statement concerning the court's findings, and, excusing himself from the little company which had gathered about him, went to his apartments where Mrs. Schley had been anxiously awaiting to hear the court's decision. Later the official copy was brought to the hotel by a messenger from the navy department.

RAYNER KEENLY DISAPPOINTED.

Will Advise Schley to Fight It to a Finish.

Baltimore, Dec. 15. — Isidor Rayner showed keen disappointment when the findings of the court of inquiry were communicated to him last night. He announced that he would go to Washington as soon as his engagements will permit, probably Monday or Tuesday, and he will counsel Admiral Schley to fight the case to a finish by every appeal that is possible. In an interview he said:

"I would prefer not to say anything in connection with the opinion. I think the country will almost unanimously accept Admiral Dewey's judgement. The testimony was so overwhelming upon almost every one of the specifications in favor of Admiral Schley that I must confess I am utterly at a loss to understand upon what facts or upon the evidence of what witness the other two members of the court reached their conclusions. I am absolutely satisfied that the opinion of the two judges is at total variance with the opinion of the country and that this will not by any means terminate the controversy. I shall advise the admiral to fight it to a finish, to open it by every appeal that is possible, congressional or otherwise, and I believe that the sentiment of the whole country will uphold him in his resolve not to let the judgment stand."

HOW SCHLEY TAKES IT.

So Long as Honor Is Vindicated He Is Pleased.

Washington, Dec. 15. — Beyond the comment that his honor had been vindicated and he was satisfied with the decision of the court, Admiral Schley refused to talk when told of the finding of the court of inquiry by a reporter. Although he did not venture any remarks his face showed some disappointment as a majority of the findings of the court were read to him. His face brightened up and a smile of satisfaction was evident when the members of the court commended his courage and general conduct during the battle. He displayed even greater satisfaction when the additional report of Admiral Dewey, commending his entire course, was read.

SCHLEY POLITELY DECLINES.

Flattering Offers to Take the Lecture Platform Turned Down.

Washington, Dec. 15. — Admiral Schley's mail has been steadily growing lately, since it became known that the report of the court of inquiry was approaching completion. He has received a number of offers to go on the lecture platform. One proposition was a fixed price of $500 a night for lectures to last forty nights. Admiral Schley politely declined all offers.

CONGRESS.

House Agrees to Vote on Philippine Bill Wednesday.

Washington, Dec. 14.—The house, after less than an hour's session, adjourned until Tuesday. The bill to temporarily provide revenue for the Philippine islands was reported by Mr. Payne and by unanimous consent an order for the consideration of this bill on Tuesday and Wednesday next was adopted, general debate to close at 4 o'clock Wednesday when the bill will be placed upon its passage. The official announcement of the death of the late Representative Brosius of Pennsylvania, which occurred last summer, was made by Mr. Cassell, his successor.

HAY TO BE ORATOR.

Will Be Invited to Deliver Eulogy on McKinley.

Washington, Dec. 15.—The joint committee of the two houses of congress appointed to make the necessary arrangements for a memorial service in honor of the late President McKinley, held a meeting yesterday and decided to invite Secretary of State John Hay to be the orator whenever the proposed services shall be held. Senator Fairbanks then moved that a committee be appointed to call upon Secretary Hay Monday at 10 o'clock and invite him to make the address. The motion prevailed and the committee was named, as follows: Senators Foraker, Fairbanks, Jones (Ark.) and Keam, and Representatives Grosvenor, Cousins, William Alden Smith, Fleming and Shaforth. The time for the proposed service will be fixed later.

MRS. BONINE NOT GUILTY.

Prosecution Fails to Make Out a Case Against Her.

Washington, Dec. 15.—The jury in the case of Mrs. Lola Ida Henry Bonine, charged with the murder of James Seymour Ayres, Jr., in the Kenmore hotel in this city on the night of May 13, last evening returned a verdict of not guilty and the defendant was set at liberty. Such conclusion of the trial was generally expected, the popular impression here being that from the evidence submitted the prosecution had failed to prove its case against Mrs. Bonine. The jury was out less than five hours, returning a few minutes after 4 o'clock in the afternoon and reporting their verdict shortly before 9 o'clock last evening.

BANK LOOTED.

Concern in Kentucky Is Robbed of Thirty-Five Thousand Dollars.

Louisville, Dec. 16. — J. L. Franks, president of the Treadwater Mining company, which operates at Sturgis, Ky., has received word that the Bank of Sturgis was robbed of $35,000 between midnight and dawn. Nothing was known about the robbery until the bank was opened for business in the morning. At the time of the theft the bank held the money which was to have been used in paying off the employes of the Treadwater Mining company.

PEACE MAY BE PRESERVED.

Great Britain Willing to Mediate Between Argentina and Chile.

London, Dec. 15.—The Daily Mail has received dispatches from Valparaiso and Buenos Ayres expressing the belief that peace will be preserved and stating that Great Britain has notified both the Argentine and the Chilean governments of her willingness to mediate if requested to do so.

Terrorised by Whitecaps.

New Albany, Dec. 15. — The white caps in Crawford county, near English, are terrorizing the citizens. William Cunningham, a former justice of the peace, Jesse Tyre and Miss Alice Haycock, all of Sterling township, have been taken from their beds by a mob of masked men and whipped on their backs with hickory switches. The better citizens of the community are indignant.

Blind Pig Men Fined.

Hudson, Wis., Dec. 15. — Herman Wetterling and Frank Comrade, two of the five Hammond men who were arrested there recently by the temperance league on the charge of running blind pigs, yesterday pleaded guilty before Judge Arnquist. They were each fined $50 and costs. The other three will have their hearing Monday before Judge Disney.

SENT TO PRISON

PORTO RICO LABOR LEADERS FOUND GUILTY OF CONSPIRACY.

TRIED UNDER SPANISH LAW

LABOR FEDERATION HELD TO BE AN ILLEGAL ORGANIZATION.

TO RAISE THE PRICES OF LABOR

IS A CONSPIRACY AND A VIOLATION OF THE SPANISH STATUTES.

San Juan, Porto Rico, Dec. 13.—In the district court yesterday Santiago Iglesias and seven other labor agitators were found guilty under the Spanish law of being the founders of the local labor federation, which the court holds is an illegal organization in that it conspired to raise the price of labor, which is a violation of the Spanish statutes, which are still in force here.

Iglesias was sentenced to three years, four months and eight days in the penitentiary, and each of the seven other defendants to four months and twenty-one days in jail. The court also ordered that the local federation, which is now under the auspices of the American Federation of Labor, be dissolved, and Gov. Hunt was notified that the society no longer exists. Judge Savage, who is an American, dissented from the decision holding the federation illegal, but agreed that Iglesias to raise the price of labor. He, however, did not concur in the sentences imposed. An appeal will be taken to the supreme court of Porto Rico, but the plans of the federation have been at least temporarily frustrated. As a result of the decision a labor mass meeting which was to have been [illegible] here has been called off.

The particular overt act of conspiracy charged against Iglesias was that last year, when the change was made from Spanish to American currency, he declared that wages must be paid in dollars instead of pesos on the same day that the change was made. Merchants and employers generally demand dollars from their customers, and Iglesias therefore claimed that he had not attempted to raise the price of labor, but had only sought to maintain the ratio between American and Spanish money.

Mr. Gompers Surprised.

Scranton, Pa., Dec. 12.—When the above was shown to Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, he expressed great surprise. In answer as to what the federation would do in the matter, he said: "If Mr. Iglesias' conviction is on the charge that he has been guilty of conspiracy to increase the wages of Porto Rican workmen we shall leave no effort untried to secure his honorable release and also the necessary change in the laws of the island to conform to the American standard. It is an honorable ambition to secure better returns in the shape of wages for labor. The Porto Rican law is evidently a relic of Spanish brutal code and regime and the American people will not tolerate so gross a violation of guaranteed rights."

IT MUST GO THROUGH.

German Government Determined to Pass the Tariff Bill.

Berlin, Dec. 13.—In the reichstag yesterday the imperial secretary of state for the interior, Count von Posadowsky-Wehner, made a general reply to the critics of the tariff bill. He reiterated the government's determination to carry the matter through, and said that besides other advantages it had the social-political object of procuring work and good wages for the toilers. After the tariff bill had been referred to a committee of twenty-eight members the reichstag adjourned until Jan. 8.

STAMP DEALER HELD.

Examined Before Court Commissioner in New York.

New York, Dec. 13.—Charles Stokes, the stamp dealer who was arrested on Monday on a charge of being concerned in the Chicago postoffice robbery of last October, was up for examination yesterday before United States Commissioner Shields. Only one witness was called and the prisoner was remanded to Ludlow street jail. The witness was Sheriff Dycker of Sullivan county. His testimony tended to connect the prisoner with three men who were convicted of robbing a postoffice at Roscoe, N. Y., some time ago. It will probably be excluded.

ABSENCE COSTS MONEY.

Crookston Aldermen Must Attend Meetings or Pay.

Crookston, Dec. 13. — A resolution was adopted by the city council instructing the clerk to enter a fine of $1 for every unexcused absence of an alderman, as provided in the city ordinances. The resolution is said to be directed against Ald. Arnold of the Fifth ward who has been very frequently absent from the meetings of the council.

MANY KILLED IN BATTLE.

Gen. Alban Hears of Big Fight at Rio San Juan.

Colon, Dec. 13.—Gen. Alban has received reports from Buena Ventura of a big fight at Rio San Juan on Monday. A revolutionist expedition of 1,500 men, sent overland from Tumaco, was surprised at the river by government troops. A large number were killed and wounded on both sides.

An Aged Bridegroom.

Monticello, Minn., Dec. 13.—W. W. Marvin, aged eighty-one years, a resident of this place, and one of the wealthiest men in the county, was married in Minneapolis to Miss Stevens, twenty-nine years. The marriage caused a sensation here when it became known. Miss Stevens has been Mr. Marvin's nurse for about a year. She returned to Minneapolis two or three months ago, and the engagement soon followed. Mr. Marvin provided generously for his two children, and, it is said, settled a handsome portion upon his young and beautiful bride.

Freak Ordinance Proposed.

Fargo, N. D., Dec. 13. — Since the adoption of an anti-expectorating ordinance a fight is being waged against women who wear long skirts, and a petition may be sent to the council asking for an ordinance. It is contended that long, trailing skirts are uncanitary and disgusting.

A CHRISTMAS WAIT.

By Emma Alice Browne.

Break in the dreary East, and bring the Light!
Rise, holy Christmas morning! Break and bring
The blossom of our hope—the stainless King—
For weary is the night!
Strange darkness wraps the haggard mountain rim;
And worn with failure, spent with grief and loss,
From the pathetic shadow of His Cross
We yearn and cry to Him.

Sad pilgrims, burdened with unshriven sin,
Oppressed, and cowering 'neath the chastening rod,
We humbly seek the path His feet have trod,
And strive to enter in.

His anger is so slow—His love so great—
Tho' we have wandered in forbidden ways,
Spurned and denied Him, all our fruitless days,
He calls us long and late.

We are so poor! Of all the squandered years
We bring no tithes of oil, or corn, or wine,
Nor any offering to His spotless shrine,
Save penitential tears.

We are so friendless, in our abject need
We can but cry to Him in bitter stress;
Yet He will not despise our nakedness,
Nor break the bruised reed.

Hard was the lot for His contentment spread;
Rough was His garb, and rude His lenten fare;
In all the earth He had not anywhere
To lay his weary head!

His patience is so long, His wrath so slow,
Tho' mocked and scoffed, insulted and denied,
Beaten with many stripes, and crucified,
He will not bid us go.

By all the anguish of His laden breast—
The bloody sweat—the sleepless agony—
The pangs and penance of Gethsemane—
He giveth the weary rest.

Break in the dreary East, oh, morning! Rise,
With healing in thy holy wings, and bring Fruition of our hope—the promised King,
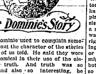
And blameless Sacrifice!

A sudden pulse of waking life we hear
Throb in the hush of hollow glade and dell;
The hills take up their olden canticle:
"Behold! The Dawn is near!"

And far against the soft auroral glow,
Peak over peak the kindling summits burn;
The vales, rejoicing, seem to lift and yearn
Thro' curling mists below.

And far along the radiant heights of morn
A sudden burst of choral triumph swells,
The sweet Te Deum of an hundred bells—
And lo! "Messiah's born!"

And all the burden of our grief and sin
Is lifted from our souls forevermore,
As humbly knocking at the Master's door
He bids us enter in.



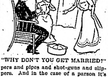
The Dominie's Story

The Dominie used to complain sometimes about the character of the stories the rest of us told. He said they were too economical in their use of the element of truth. And truth was so cheap, and also so interesting, he would say. We were always ready to admit that it was interesting, but were not so free to acknowledge its cheapness. Like other exotics it seemed to us expensive. Fiction, being so much more easily produced, appeared to be the true mental provender in the Corn Cob Club, a social institution where we decided questions of great pith and moment by the aid of the civilizing and ennobling influence of tobacco incinerated in cob-pipes. The Dominie had quit smoking when he entered the ministry, but he always said the cobs smelt good, so we had hopes of his reclamation; besides, the air was usually so thick that he absorbed enough to bring him up, in a large measure, to the high philosophic plane occupied by the rest of us.

It happened on Christmas Eve that somebody told a story appropriate enough to the season so far as the subject went, but palpably impossible considered as a happening. At least the Dominie said it was, and threatened to tell a Christmas story himself; and being counseled by the Professor, who was classical in his language, to "blaze away," the good man complied as follows:

There used to be a young man named Stanwix who was rector of a church at a little town in New Jersey called Appleburg. Very amiable young man, not long in the ministry, and unmarried. Nice-looking chap, too, and a bright fellow, but he had his trials at Appleburg. Mainly it was the women—they thought he ought to marry, and of course they were right. But thinking so wasn't enough for those dear Appleburg ladies; with the true feminine desire to help they resolved to see that he did marry. But here again they showed a universal feminine trait by refusing to combine and work together. They all labored hard enough, but independently, and each with a view to inducing the minister to marry a different woman.

It had been going on thus for some months when Christmas approached. Now of course there isn't much you can give any man for Christmas—slippers and pipes and shot-guns and slippers. And in the case of a parson it's still worse—you've got to drop off the pipes and shotguns, leaving only slippers—and slippers. Of course there are book-marks and easy chairs, but the first are trivial and the latter expensive; besides, if he is unmarried and you are of the opposite sex, and in the same state, you will see that you ought to give him something made with your own fair hands, and you can't make an easy chair. So slippers it had to be for the Rev. M. Stanwix, especially after his landlady had been sounded on the subject and reported that the poor man didn't have a slipper to his name.



"WHY DON'T YOU GET MARRIED?"

Well, the result was, of course, that the whole hundred and thirty-six marriageable ladies at Appleburg went to work on slippers; and a few of the flock who already had husbands also began slippers, out of the goodness of their hearts, probably, or maybe thinking that they might be widows some day and might as well have a pair to their credit. The slaughter of plush and embroidery materials was something cyclonic, and the local shoemaker had to sit up nights pegging on soles. Even unfortunate little Jane Wilkinson went at a pair hammer and tongs, though everybody said she hadn't a ghost of a show. In the first place Jane was too young—her older sister Katharine was conceded to have a right to enter for the contest, but it was universally held that Jane had no right to compete at all. Besides being too young—she was really nineteen or twenty—she was also plain. She might have a certain girlish prettiness, but not the beauty which the wife of so handsome a shepherd as the Rev. Mr. Stanwix should have. Furthermore, Jane was in no other way adapted for the position—she had been a good deal of a tomboy, and was yet, for that matter; she was frivolous and careless, and was always putting her foot in it. The first time the pastor had called at the Wilkinson house, and while Katharine was entertaining him in the parlor in the most approved and circumspect manner, Jane had blundered in, and inside of five minutes asked him why he didn't get married—all the girls said he ought to. Jane had explained to everybody that she meant it as a joke, but it had generally been pronounced ill-timed and in bad taste.

But poor Jane kept working away on her slippers regardless of the talk. Everybody said that Jane's slippers wouldn't fit, or that they would both be for one foot, or that she would get the heels sewed on the toe end, or something. Jane finally put on the finishing touches and then packed them in a pasteboard box and tied it with pink ribbon.

Then she got her other Christmas presents ready. She had a lot of handkerchiefs for an aunt, and a shopping bag for a married sister, and a little knit shawl for her grandmother, and a pair of skates for a boy cousin, and various other things for divers other persons, including a fine meerschaum pipe and a pound of his favorite smoking tobacco for her brother who was at college, and who wouldn't be home till New Year's. Each thing she carefully put up in a box or bundle and laid it away.

The day before Christmas was a never-to-be-forgotten time for the Rev. Mr. Stanwix. Slippers just came down on him like an Egyptian plague.

Along about four o'clock Stanwix got crowded out of his room—slippers piled half way to the ceiling—and had to put a chair out in the hall and sit there with an atlas of the world in his lap writing his Christmas sermon on it. Mighty tough sermon it was, too, and got tougher as the slippers continued to arrive. Fact is, he was getting pretty mad; and every new pair sent his temperature up five degrees. Consequently, at ten o'clock he was just boiling. Of course he couldn't swear, but the way he tramped up and down that hall and ground his teeth really amounted to the same thing. The arriving slippers now began to fall off. For ten minutes nothing came, and he was just starting down to ask the landlady if she couldn't put a cot in the hall so he could go to bed, when in came another box. It was from Jane—just her luck, of course, to be late and strike him when he was all worked up to the bursting point. But let us draw a veil over the scene right here and leave the poor man alone as he opens Jane's box.

It was not more than half-past nine the next morning when the Rev. Mr. Stanwix mounted the Wilkinson steps and tugged at the door bell. He asked for Jane. It seemed rather queer, but they ushered him into the parlor and sent Jane in. Well, to make a long story short, it wasn't ten minutes until he had the thing all fixed up. He had his chair drawn close up beside her end of the sofa.

"Jane," he was saying, "I've loved you ever since the first day I saw you, but I never knew it until I opened your box."

"Then you liked them, did you? I'm so glad," murmured Jane.

"I should say I did! Why, it's one of the finest meerschaums I ever saw, and that tobacco used to be my favorite brand at college. But, Jane, how did you know I used to smoke, and was dying to begin again?"

Jane had stopped breathing at the word meerschaum. Now she caught her breath, and for once in her life rose to the occasion and didn't put her foot in it. She simply looked up at him and smiled demurely.

"MOVED INTO THE HALL."

"Oh, I guessed it," she said.

"It was the best guess you ever made. I should have died last night amidst that awful landslide of slippers if I hadn't smoked about half of that tobacco. I mean to keep on smoking now—that is, if you don't object, dear?"

Jane scored again.

"I rather like the smell of good tobacco," she said.—Saturday Evening Post.

Only President Without an "A."

President Roosevelt is the first occupant of the White House in whose name the letter "a" does not appear. Not only has that letter appeared in the names of all previous Presidents, but also in the names of nearly every one of the 61 Americans who have received votes for President in the electoral college down to William J. Bryan. There are only eight exceptions to this rule.

Christmas 1901

Peace on Earth Good will to Men

Light the fires of Christmas tide;
Kindle them well with oil and pine;
Build them big, and deep, and wide;
Let their light through the ages shine.

Shine on the path of the rugged past,
Where mankind has journeyed through;
Light up the path to a life more vast,
Shadowing up through the starry blue.

Cast on the logs; make the flames leap higher;
Pluck from the bough and mistletoe—
To the spirit of Christmas time aspire,
Peace, good will to friend and foe.

Peace on earth and friendship true,
Undimmed as the light of Bethlehem's star—
A grander and sublimer view
Comes with that light through the ages far.

A death in life, and life in death,
Do we behold, but know that life
Is uppermost in all things yet—
Ring, joyous bells, throughout the strife.

For now is born the Prince of Peace,
And he is "Love" among us now;
Ring out, glad bells, and never cease,
While there is life on earth below!

SANTA CLAUS, V. S.

THE big blond mechanic looked awkward and out of place in the crowd of women shoppers at the toy counter. He seemed painfully conscious of the sharp contrast between his old working clothes and the stylish dresses of the ladies who jostled him on either hand. One given to studying the faces of Christmas shoppers would easily have read the question which makes Christmas the most pathetic as well as the happiest holiday in the year—the question, "Can I do it with the little money I have?"

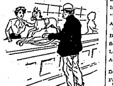
At length the man caught the eye of a sales girl, and leaning over the counter said in a low voice:

"Say, miss, I've got a little feller at home that's been talking for months about Santy Claus bringing him a horse. I'd like to get him one if I can afford it. How much is this?" and he pointed to an equine paragon in front of him.

"That is three dollars," said the sales girl. "Best grade we've carried. You see it's covered with real horse hide and has a real hair tail and mane."

The mechanic shook his head hopelessly.

"Yes," he said, "it's a fine horse, all right, but I can't pay that much. I thought p'r'aps I could get something for a dollar—a smaller one, mebbe."



"THAT'S EASY."

"I'm sorry," said the girl, sympathetically, "but we cleaned out every one of the cheaper kind this afternoon and this is the only one that's left of the three-dollar lot." Then suddenly her face lighted up. "Oh, say," she exclaimed, "wait a minute."

She dived under the table and came up with a counterpart of the horse they had been discussing; a counterpart, but with a broken leg and minus that very useful appurtenance, a tail. "There," she said, "I just happened to think of this! Somebody knocked it off the counter yesterday and broke the leg. The tail kept coming out anyway, and I guess it's lost now. You could have this for a dollar. Mebbe you could fix it all right."

The man examined the fracture seriously. "Why, that's easy," he said. "All it needs is to peel the hide up a little and splice the leg and then put on some of old Peter Cooper's salve. Make it as good as new."

"And perhaps you can get some horsehair and make a tail. They're just tied in a bunch and put in with a plug."

"Oh, I'll fix that all right, miss. I've got an old bristle shaving brush that I can use. It'll be real stylish one of them bobtailed coach horses, you know."

They both laughed.

"You're mighty good, miss, and I'm obliged to you."

"Oh, that's all right," said the girl. "I know how it is Christmas times myself," and she sighed as the customer turned happily away to play his part of Santa Claus, veterinary surgeon.

No Xmas Fun in Scotland.

In consequence of the Presbyterian form of church government, as constituted by John Knox and his coadjutors on the model of the ecclesiastical polity of Calvin, having taken such firm root in Scotland the festival of Christmas, with other commemorative celebrations retained from the Roman calendar by the Anglicans and Lutherans, is comparatively unknown in that country, at least in the lowlands. The tendency to mirth and jollity at the close of the year, which seems almost inherent in human nature, has in north Britain been for the most part transferred from Christmas and Christmas Eve to New Year's day and the preceding evening, known by the appellation of Hogmenay. In many parts of the highlands of Scotland, however, and also in the county of Forfar, and one or two other districts, the day for general merry-making is Christmas.

SONG OF CHRISTMAS

Twine the bittersweet and holly,
Arched above the hearthstone's glow,
Joy, not melancholy,
Came, indrifting with the snow;
In each face the frost's a-tingle,
And afar on flying wing
Comes the sleigh bell's rhythmic jingle,
Through December journeying.

Set the board and ask the blessing
For the bounty amply spread,
In the simplest words expressing
What a loving father said—
"Peace on earth"—for this is nearest
When the snows with us abide,
And the winter air is clearest
In the hush of Christmastide.

Bring the old musician's fiddle,
Relic of the bygone days,
Send the fairest down the middle
While the lilting music sways;
Light of foot and quick of laughter
Swing the dancers, toe and heel,
As they pass or follow after
In the quaint Virginia reel.

Deck the tree and light the candles,
Let the stockings all be hung,
For a saint with furry sandals
O'er the housetops high has swung;
And his reindeer steeds are prancing
Through the star-bespangled rime,
And the moonbeams pale are glancing
In the merry Christmastime.

FORTUNE IN THE MISTLETOE.

IN Georgia there is a farm devoted to mistletoe and holly growing. It is owned by the Cartledge family, consisting of mother and two daughters, but the daughters do the farming. It all began through the failure of the elder sister to make an immediate triumph in art, to study which she went to New York. She realized in the great city, as she never could have in her rural southern home, that talent for art is too general to leave much hope for special distinction, and wisely concluded to turn to something that would bring more speedy results. Being an observant young woman, Miss Cartledge noticed that holly and mistletoe brought extremely high prices and bethought her that on the 500 acres at home in Georgia both grew in wild abundance. She returned home and she and her sister began to prepare for making the neglected luxuriance of marketable value. In the months of January and February following they set out ten acres of young holly trees with their own hands. Their colored farm hands would not plant a holly tree for worlds, as they believe that if they did they would die as soon as the tree became tall enough to cast a shadow the measure of their graves. Last Christmas the sisters found the trees so grown that they required thinning out and the trees that were removed were sent north for Christmas trees and brought high prices, as they were symmetrical and covered with large, rich berries. They plant the mistletoe berries under the bark of old oak trees in a crack or hole, where they can get hold as they germinate.

Preacher as Prime Minister.

The prime minister of Holland, Dr. Abraham Kuyper, has broken the record by being the first doctor of divinity and preacher to hold that position.

CHRISTMAS DISHES

Roast Pig.—In the first place, never roast a pig over five weeks old, and three weeks is the better age. Do not trust to the butcher's cleaning, but go over every part of the body and give a thorough cleaning. Roll up the ears in greased cloths, to prevent their burning; stuff the pig with stale bread dressing seasoned with pepper, powdered sage and butter. In stuffing the pig leave room for the bread to swell, and sew up neatly. Skewer the fore legs forward; the hind legs backward. Rub all over with butter, dredge with flower that has been seasoned with salt and pepper. Place a piece of wood between the teeth and stand on the rack in a dripping pan. Roast in a moderate oven, basting every 15 minutes with melted butter, to which a little boiling water has been added. The time for roasting will vary from 2½ to 4 hours, according to the size of the pig. The ears should be unwrapped the last three-quarters of an hour. To serve, stand the pig in a large platter with a garland of cress or something green around the edge. Put a wreath of parsley around the neck and something in the mouth—a lemon, or apple, a bit of cauliflower or anything effective. The dishes complemental to roast pig are apple sauce, turnips and sweet potatoes.

Plum Pudding.—The best plum pudding being the worst indigestive consequences, I offer a modified recipe, which I can vouch for as "perfectly delicious." Three-fourth cupful of molasses, one cupful of brown sugar, one cupful of finely chopped suet, three cupfuls of bread crumbs, two cupfuls of flour, one cupful of sweet milk, one cupful of mixed raisins, citron and currants chopped, one teaspoonful of soda. Sift the sugar into the molasses and add the milk and suet. Mix the soda evenly through the flour and add the fruit to it, tossing it about to insure it being coated, then put into the wet mixture, adding last of all the bread crumbs. Boil or steam in molds for three hours. This pudding may be made a week before using, one being careful to reheat thoroughly the day it is used. Just before serving pour some brandy over the pudding and set it on the fire, so that it will be enveloped in a blue flame when placed on the table.

EIGHT LIVES LOST

TRAINS CRASH TOGETHER WHILE THEY ARE RUNNING AT FULL SPEED.

TRAINMEN FAIL TO OBEY ORDERS

UNFORTUNATES ARE ROASTED TO DEATH AND THEIR BODIES CONSUMED.

THE INJURED SUFFER FROM COLD

SIX BODIES RECOVERED, BUT WERE CHARRED BEYOND RECOGNITION.

Rockford, Ill., Dec. 17.—Failure on the part of a conductor to obey orders is supposed to have been the cause of a head-end collision on the Illinois Central between Irene and Perryville early yesterday morning. The two trains were the east-bound passenger train No. 4 and a through freight from Chicago going west. As a result eight people are dead or missing and eleven injured.

The trains met in a slight bend in the track, both running at full speed.

The smoking, express and baggage cars were piled on the locomotives, penning in the occupants of the smoker. Only three of the half-dozen persons in that car escaped. The others were penned in, and if not instantly killed were roasted to death and their bodies, along with those of the engine crews, were entirely consumed.

All the efforts of the survivors to reach the victims were unavailing. The Flames Drove Them Back at every point. The temperature was 20 degrees below zero and an icy wind was blowing across the prairie, the point where the wreck occurred being a shallow cut, affording no protection. The injured were without hats and wraps and suffered terribly. By the united efforts of the survivors the way car was pushed back from the wreckage to escape the flames and the wounded were placed on the bunks inside.

Two hours elapsed before any relief was at hand. Then an engine arrived from the east and pulled the way car to Irene, three miles distant.

All the injured are doing well except H. G. Wellman of Chicago, who is in a critical condition.

Six bodies were recovered from the debris, but were charred beyond recognition. Coroner F. M. Marsh will conduct the inquests to-day.

Disobeyed Orders.

Chicago, Dec. 16.—J. W. Higgins, general superintendent of transportation of the Illinois Central railway, places the blame for the disastrous wreck at Perryville, Ill., on the conductor and engineer of the freight train. They are said by Mr. Higgins to have disobeyed orders, which were to stop at Irene, several miles east of Perryville.

ANOTHER FATAL WRECK.

Eight Lives Lost and Fourteen Injured in Montana.

Kalispell, Mont., Dec. 17.—A wreck occurred on the Great Northern railway near Essex, in the Rocky mountains, at 2 o'clock yesterday morning. The engine, mail car and smoker remained on the track, but all the others were derailed. Some cars were overturned and all were more or less wrecked. The accident was due to rails spreading. Among the killed was Otto Erickson, en route from Sweden to California. Seven others were killed, but their names have not been learned. They were three old women, a young girl and three men. Two other old ladies are hurt internally and neither is expected to survive. Fourteen others were more or less seriously hurt. The train was going at the rate of twenty-five miles an hour when it broke in two, and the air brakes set immediately, preventing a more serious accident. The largest number of injured were in the day coach. All were asleep at the time of the accident. The day coach caught fire, but the flames were extinguished by the passengers.

WRECKED IN KILLING COLD.

Freight Trains' Crews Are Injured and Benumbed.

Jamestown, N. D., Dec. 17.—In a collision eight miles east of this city, Engineer John Boyle had his leg broken in two places; Engineer Sam Richards is thought to be internally injured, and several men of the crews were slightly injured and both engines were wrecked. The thermometer was 30 below at the time and it was with great difficulty that the injured men were kept from freezing.

BLIND PIG CRUSADE.

Grantsburg (Wis.) Voters Sign a Demand for Vigorous War.

Grantsburg, Wis., Dec. 17.—The village board of Grantsville has appropriated $150 to prosecute local blind pigs and a vigorous war is in progress. A demand signed by a host of voters in the village stirred the board to its action.

Farm Residence Burned.

Cumberland, Wis., Dec. 17.—Alfonse D'Egidio's farm residence, two miles south of this city, was destroyed by fire, entailing a loss of $1,000; insurance $250. The house was occupied by Mr. D'Egidio's son Michael, who was recently married and who lost all his new furniture in the blaze. The fire started from a defective stovepipe.

Aged Woman Burned to Death.

Ovid, Mich., Dec. 17.—The house of Thomas B. Southworth was destroyed by fire early yesterday and Mrs. Southworth was burned to death. She had risen to build the kitchen fire and, being seventy-five years old and nearly blind, it is supposed she set her clothes ablaze.

Appleton, Minn., Dec. 17.—A commercial club has been organized here with sixty of the business men as charter members. Its objects are to bring in improvements and attract trade to the village.

MORE INQUIRY NOT PROBABLE.

Congressional Action in Schley Case Not Favored.

Washington, Dec. 17.—Opinion in the senate is divided as to the probability of a congressional investigation of the Schley controversy, but is, upon the whole, against the probability of such a course. A majority of the Republican senators appear to be averse to the reopening of the question, and those of this view include friends of Admiral Schley. Senator Hoar expressed himself as content to abide by the opinion of Admiral Dewey, because of his superior facilities for reaching a correct conclusion, and Senator Mason took a similar position, adding that the opinion of the admiral of the navy would be accepted as the verdict of the country, regardless of what conclusion other members of the court might have reached. Senator Hale thought there would be and should be no further investigation. He is chairman of the committee on naval affairs, and he said he would use whatever influence he might possess against further inquiry, as detrimental to the best interests of the navy. Senator Cullom declared that further inquiry would be tomfoolery and that no more light on the subject could be secured.

Democratic senators generally seem disposed to wait upon the expression of opinion by the friends of Admiral Schley. Senator Martin said that while he did not feel called upon to present a declaration, he thought that congress should adopt a joint resolution stating its confidence in the admiral.

WILL FOLLOW RAYNER'S ADVICE.

Admiral Schley Notifies His Counsel That He Is Ready to Take Further Action.

Baltimore, Md., Dec. 17.—Rear Admiral W. S. Schley has notified Attorney General Isidor Rayner that he is ready to take any action with reference to his case that Mr. Rayner may advise. Mr. Rayner expects to meet the admiral in Washington to-day or Tuesday. When asked whether he favored a congressional investigation, Mr. Rayner said:

"I doubt whether a proceeding of this sort is the proper one. It generally assumes a political aspect. At this time I am of the opinion that the matter should be prosecuted in the courts. There are plenty of ways in which this can be done and this week we will begin to consult and determine upon our course of action."

Among the telegrams Mr. Rayner has received since the publication of the findings of the court of inquiry was one from a gentleman in another state, who asked that his identity be kept secret, with an offer of $10,000 for the necessary expenses attending the further prosecution of the case. The offer was declined.

FLOOD CAUSES WRECK.

Train Goes Through a Bridge and Three Lives Are Lost.

Williamsport, Pa., Dec. 17.—A freight train on the Philadelphia & Reading railway went through the bridge spanning Lycoming creek between this city and Newberry at 6 o'clock yesterday morning. Three lives were lost.

The train was known as Fast Freight No. 83, and was running three hours late owing to the disarrangement of schedule in consequence of the storm. The bridge spanning the creek was a two-span structure, the first span of which gave way beneath the train. The engine and nine cars were engulfed in the icy waters. The creek was greatly swollen as a result of the heavy rains, and it is presumed the middle pier had been weakened. No efforts could be made to reach the bodies on account of the height of the waters. All the streams in this section were greatly swollen.

ROYAL PAIR RECONCILED.

Arrive at The Hague Amid Loyal Demonstrations Which Seem Impartial.

The Hague, Dec. 17.—Queen Wilhelmina and Prince Henry, her husband, arrived here Saturday. Flags were displayed throughout the city and the railroad station was decorated.

The inhabitants made a great loyal demonstration, apparently impartially bestowed upon the queen and the prince consort; at least there was no open display of hostility against the prince.

The queen and Prince Henry drove through the crowded streets to the residence of the queen's mother, who welcomed them before the public, kissing Queen Wilhelmina warmly and shaking hands with Prince Henry.

Later the crowds around the palace sang the national anthem. The young queen responded by appearing on the balcony.

PREPARE FOR A CONFLICT.

Valparaiso, Dec. 17.—Extensive preparations for war are being made throughout Chile. Diplomatic correspondence with Chile continues and hope is expressed that the trouble will be amicably settled, but in the meantime Chile is preparing for eventualities.

Montana Is Snowbound.

Billings, Mont., Dec. 17.—Eastern Montana has been enveloped in one of the heaviest snowfalls ever known. The snow averages from two to six feet on the level and railroad travel will be interrupted for the next few days.

Killed in a Collision.

Freeport, Ill., Dec. 17.—A freight train, a light engine and a wrecking train came into collision on the Chicago Great Western road at Bolton, five miles from here. F. M. Riley of Dubuque, fireman of the wrecking train, was killed.

WOMAN LEADS A RIOT.

Poles Who Had Taken the Place of Striking Greeks and Armenians Are Roughly Handled.

Lynn, Mass., Dec. 17.—A riot between Greeks, Armenians and Poles near the Kelley morocco factory here was led by a woman. One man was struck with a knife on the head, making a cut in which ten stitches were taken. Another was hit with a brick in the eye and will lose his sight, while others were cut and hurt. The fight was caused, indirectly, by the strike at the factory, Poles having taken the places of Greeks and Armenians.

RUSH THE CANAL

WORK OF CONSTRUCTING THE BIG DITCH WILL BEGIN NEXT SUMMER.

CONGRESS IS SURELY IN EARNEST

PREDICTIONS BASED UPON THE SENTIMENT DISPLAYED IN CONGRESS.

TREATY CERTAIN TO BE RATIFIED

SENATE AGREES TO VOTE ON RATIFICATION NEXT MONDAY.

Washington, Dec. 13.—Congress is in earnest regarding the isthmian canal project, and it is confidently predicted that the work of constructing the big ditch will be inaugurated next summer.

Yesterday the senate displayed its feeling in the matter by unanimously agreeing to take a vote before adjournment next Monday on the new Hay-Pauncefote treaty.

That the instrument will be ratified and thus open the way for the construction of a canal across the isthmus is a foregone conclusion. There is some opposition to the new treaty, but it is thought that not a vote will be cast against it. This agreement was reached after four hours of debate, Sufficiently Interesting to insure the constant attendance of most of the senators. Senator Spooner, who was one of the principal speakers of the day, had just concluded when Senator Lodge made an effort to secure a vote. It developed there were other senators who desired to be heard. The result was that the date for the vote was postponed until Monday and for a meeting at 11 o'clock of that day, one hour in advance of the usual time. The understanding is that as soon as practicable after the senate convenes, Senator Lodge shall move an executive session and that the treaty shall have the entire attention of the senate until a final vote is reached before adjournment for that day. The principal speakers yesterday besides Senator Spooner were Senator Money and Senator Foraker. Mr. Money, while finding Much in the Treaty to criticise, said that as he found the fortunes of the proposed canal across the isthmus inextricably intertwined with the treaty he could not see his way clear to do anything that would prevent or even delay ratification. The particular features of the new treaty with which he found fault were those retaining the neutrality provision of the Clayton-Bulwer convention and specifying police control of the canal when built. He argued that the effect of those provisions inevitably must be to limit and prescribe the power of the United States to control its own property in case of war.

Senator Foraker followed Senator Money. He urged the speedy ratification of the treaty, and contended that it meets all the objections made in the senate to the previous treaty.

MEMORY OF MARTYR.

Collection of European Newspaper Clippings Bearing on the Recent Tragedy.

Chicago, Dec. 14.—Robert S. McCormick, United States minister to Austria, has presented the Chicago public library with a valuable collection of European newspaper clippings bearing on the assassination of President McKinley, together with the original copies of the hymns "Lead, Kindly Light" and "Nearer, My God, to Thee," used by the large choir which sang these songs at the memorial services in Christ Church, Vienna, Austria, Sept. 19. The newspaper clipping are from all the leading publications in Great Britain, France, Germany, Austria, Italy, Spain and Russia. They will be bound into a scrap book and presented to the library officials along with the engrossed copy of the program of the musical services and the sheets of music.

FATALITIES AT CLINTON.

Two Men Killed by Train—One Man Expires While Milking—Another Is Found Dead.

Clinton, Iowa, Dec. 14.—D. V. Hoover, a farmer residing across the river, and George Behr of Clinton were instantly killed by being run down by a Burlington train just across the river.

John W. McCann, a farmer living near Elvira, dropped dead while milking last night.

Thomas Alvin, aged eighty, many years a resident of Clinton, was found dead in bed yesterday morning.

CLERK USES SHOTGUN.

Negro Starts to Look for His Own Letters and Is Shot.

Raleigh, N. C., Dec. 14.—When Tom Tate, a negro, was told at the Hugo, N. C., postoffice that there was no mail for him, he said that Lawrence Hazelton, the clerk, was too lazy to look for it, and started behind the counter. Hazelton seized a shotgun and fired, the load striking the negro in the knee. His leg was later amputated but Tate died from the shock.

Small Thievery Frequent.

Coloma, Wis., Dec. 14.—The general store of F. J. Luce & Co. was entered by burglars through a back window. All that is missing is about 50 cents in pennies and a few Christmas goods. This is the fourth robbery here recently.

Farmer Becomes Insane.

Glidden, Wis., Dec. 14.—Peter Iverson, a farmer residing near this city in the town of Gordon, has become insane, and has been taken to the Northern hospital at Oshkosh. Iverson is a young man and only recently married.

Budd Hospital Commenced.

Two Harbors, Minn., Dec. 14.—A contract for the $25,000 Budd hospital here has been let to Frank Spurbeck of this town, and he is already at work. It will be one of the finest hospitals ever built in a town of 3,000 people.

PERISHED IN FLAMES.

Fire in Cochrane Burns Large Building.

Alma, Wis., Dec. 13.—The large two-story brick building owned by ex-Postmaster Peter Schnugg in Cochrane, eight miles from here, burned to the ground last night, and Miss Emilia Herman, aged twenty-five, perished in the flames. The origin of the fire is unknown. It started about 11 p. m. in the kitchen. The girl who met such an awful death has been demented for years. The building is a total loss, but covered by $1,000 insurance. Dr. W. Belitz had his office in the building and succeeded in saving the office fixtures and his loss will not be large. The building adjoining was somewhat damaged, and had it not been a quiet night the large department store of Bohror Bros., and the entire business portion of the village of Cochrane would have burned to the ground as there is no fire protection.

QUARANTINE CATTLE.

Wisconsin Live Stock Sanitary Board Makes Regulations.

Madison, Wis., Dec. 13.—The Wisconsin live stock sanitary board yesterday completed its regulations relating to the disposition of animals affected with bovine tuberculosis. The report says in part:

When it has been demonstrated by the state veterinarian or any of his assistants, acting under his direction, that any herd of cattle in this state has tuberculosis, the owner of such stock shall have the option of: First, quarantining such cattle under the direction of the state livestock sanitary board; second, the privilege of shipping such cattle to the secretary of the Chicago livestock exchange or some other abattoir designated for immediate slaughter under United States government inspection, or, third, in case neither of the above privileges are accepted, then the cattle are to be condemned and slaughtered.

ALL NIGHT ON THE PRAIRIE.

Aged Woman Dying From Exposure —She Had Lost Her Way.

Sioux Falls, Dec. 13.—Word reached this city that Mrs. John McKinnon, aged eighty years, was at the point of death at her home near Canastota, from exposure. Mrs. McKinnon Monday night left her home about 7 o'clock to go to the home of a neighbor, a mile away, to stay over night. It became dark and she lost her way and wandered around on the prairie all night. When daylight came in the morning she was found but a few rods from her destination. Her feet and hands were frozen, and on account of her old age it is feared that she will not survive the shock. Mrs. McKinnon is the mother of County Commissioner Thomas McKinnon of this city.

DIVIDED HIS MONEY.

Heirs of the Late Christian Jacobson Confronted With New Will.

Sioux City, Iowa, Dec. 13—Consternation among the heirs of the late Christian Jacobson of Smithland, this county, was caused late yesterday afternoon when a new will was filed in this city for probate. The first instrument bequeathed about $26,000 to a few relatives. The new will revokes all former wills and parcels out the property among ninety-five friends and neighbors all over the county and state, and mentions, besides, the Boys and Girls' Home and Sanitarium hospital in Sioux City as beneficiaries. The last will purports to have been written a few days before the death of Jacobson. A contest is almost certain.

Prodigal Son Returns.

La Crosse, Wis., Dec. 13.—After having been thought dead for fifteen years Richard Sequist returned home yesterday. When he was a lad fifteen years of age he ran away from home because his father threatened to punish him. Since then no trace of him could be found, and he was thought to be dead. He has traveled all over the world since his departure. A family reunion was held at the home of his parents in this city last night. His return was unexpected and unannounced.

Engineer Cooper Killed.

Huron, S. D., Dec. 13.—A telegram from Ellensburg, Wash., to George T. Grove of this city announces the death of Capt. Thomas R. Cooper, late of Huron. Mr. Cooper was a locomotive engineer and was killed in an accident. He left here last spring with his family, having been a trusted and faithful employe of the Northwestern railway for several years.

For Homeless Poor.

Aberdeen, S. D., Dec. 13.—The citizens of Aberdeen have contributed $246.47 as their Thanksgiving donation to the children's home at Sioux Falls. This is the way Aberdeen has handled this matter for several years. Sioux Falls and Canton have contributed $18.63 and $15.96, respectively, on Thanksgiving this year.

Body Found on River Bottom.

La Crosse, Wis., Dec. 13.—The body of Brakeman Albert Mink of Winona, missed from the top of a freight train Sunday morning, was found at the bottom of the Mississippi river yesterday. It is supposed he was struck by the bridge and knocked into the water. The body was not bruised much, except about the head.

Pierre Has Plenty of Gas.

Pierre, S. D., Dec. 13.—Natural gas in liberal quantities is again being supplied to the residents of Pierre by the big gas well. Pipe connections were made yesterday and gas turned on. The supply is greater than are the needs of the city, although gas is used quite extensively for power, lighting, cooking and heating.

Awarded Heavy Damages.

Fond du Lac, Wis., Dec. 13.—Henry Reuping, one of the victims of the Depere wreck on June 24, 1900, received a verdict at the hands of a jury for $12,000 against the Northwestern Railroad company.

Gray Wolves Active.

Pierre, S. D., Dec. 13.—Ranchers on upper Bad river are again having trouble with gray wolves. The cattle associations are offering $10 per head, in addition to the state bounty, for each grey wolf killed.

Library Board Broken.

Winona, Minn., Dec. 13.—The month of November was a recordbreaker at the Winona free public library, the number of books out being 10,181—almost a thousand more than ever before in any one month.

SALE OF BAD MEAT

SANITARY BOARD OF WISCONSIN ISSUES NEW REGULATIONS.

TUBERCULOUS CATTLE TO BE SOLD

WHEN THE DISEASE HAS BEEN CONFINED TO THE GLANDS ONLY.

RULES OTHERWISE STRINGENT

ISOLATION AND QUARANTINE OF AFFECTED CATTLE PROVIDED FOR.

Madison, Wis., Dec. 14. — The growing prevalence of bovine tuberculosis in the state has led the Wisconsin live stock sanitary board to adopt new and more rigorous regulations relating to the disposition of animals affected by the disease. One of the rules provides that when it has been demonstrated by the state veterinarian that any herd has tuberculosis, the owner shall have the option of quarantining such cattle under the direction of the board or the privilege of shipping such cattle to the secretary of the Chicago live stock exchange or some other abattoir designated by the board, for immediate slaughter under United States government inspection. In case neither of these privileges are accepted the cattle are to be condemned and slaughtered.

Regulations are also laid down relating to the isolation and quarantine of affected animals, these to include all reacting animals. Reacting animals must be completely isolated from the non-reacting and separated by tight partitions, if housed together. They must not be allowed to Drank From the Same Tank nor must pails and drinking utensils be used in common. They should also be pastured in separate enclosures and not in contiguous pastures without a double fence between. Local health officers are to see that these regulations are strictly enforced.

However, while these regulations are severe, greater elasticity is given in another direction. The rules laid down say that if such animals are especially valuable, they need not be immediately slaughtered, if they are placed under conditions that preclude the possibility of further spread. This can be readily done by isolating all those that react to the tuberculin test from the remaining healthy portion of the herd.

Such animals may be kept for breeding purposes, and almost without exception Healthy Calves Raised from the same, provided such calves are removed from infected quarters and fed upon milk known to be free from disease germs. Reacting bulls in the earlier stages of the disease may be used for service with comparative safety.

From this it frequently follows that it is much better to retain certain reacting animals for a period at least, as it has been conclusively demonstrated that a perfectly healthy herd can be built up on such a diseased foundation. This method is now extensively utilized in European countries where the percentage of reacting animals is often so large that to destroy the same would practically destroy the dairy business.

The most interesting part of the report containing the regulations is that which practically permits the sale of meat of affected animals. It says:

"In by far the larger proportion of cases that react to the tuberculin test, the animal is only affected to a slight degree. This is due to the fact that in the earlier phases of the disease the disease germ does not usually spread rapidly through the animal. Where confined to isolated glands in this way, the muscular portions of the body that are used as meat are perfectly wholesome and may be used with safety. It is only when the disease is more or less widely spread throughout the whole carcass that there is any likelihood of the flesh being Unsuitable for Human Use. The cooking of the meat would generally suffice to kill the organism, even if present. If the slaughter of reacting animals takes place under proper inspection, it is possible to reject all cases, the meat of which is not wholesome.

"This method of disposal has been followed for several years in foreign countries where the problem assumes considerable economic importance because of the marked prevalence of the disease. It has also been generally followed in this country, where federal inspection has been carried out. That it can be done with due Regard to Public Health has been recognized by sanitarians for years, if suitable supervision is made at time of slaughter. Inasmuch as the beef value of many animals would materially exceed the compensation which the state has heretofore granted to the owner (two-thirds of appraised value, which is made on a beef basis, it follows, that the owner who accepts the shipment option provided for above is able to eradicate the disease from his herd with less loss that he would if direct compensation was made by the state; and the state is further released from a burden that is already quite heavy and which is largely unnecessary, and therefore unjust to taxpayers.

SWEDES TO DISPOSE OF.

Swenson Wants to Locate 600 Families From Sweden in Wisconsin.

Milwaukee, Dec. 14.—"I am looking for a place to locate 600 Swedish families," said Gust Swenson of St. Paul, at the Pfister. "My partner, A. L. Gustavson, in Stockholm, is sending 300 families to this country to take up new land.

"It will take about 1,800 acres to accommodate them and if I can get the right kind of land at the right price I shall locate them in Northern Wisconsin. There's plenty of good land in Price, Taylor, Barron and Gates counties. Most of it is land from which the timber has been cut, leaving lots of stumps and in some cases an undergrowth that will have to be cleared away before it can be cultivated.

"If the price is too high I shall take these people over into Minnesota."

FIT TO MARRY.

Certificate of Physical and Mental Capacity to Be Required.

London, Dec. 14. — The Vienna correspondent of the Daily Chronicle telegraphs that the Bohemian society of physicians has procured the introduction of a bill in the reichsrath making a medical certificate of physical and mental capacity obligatory on candidates for matrimony.

Editor Bower of Deadwood.

Deadwood, S. D., Dec. 14.—F. W. Bower has purchased of A. W. Merrick the Black Hills Mining Review, published in this city. W. W. Kelley is associated as manager. It is the only mining journal published in South Dakota.

STARVED TO DEATH.

University Student Who Killed Himself Trying to Get an Education.

Tacoma, Wash., Dec. 14.—Henry Demond, a student at the state university, who died a short time ago under what appeared to be ordinary circumstances, is now known to have starved to death. Investigation has proved that Demond had a wife and child, whom he left destitute. He was anxious to secure a better education and entered the university, saying nothing to his companions about his poverty. His resources were not sufficient to support himself and family until he could graduate. The harder he studied the less he ate, and, without realizing his weakened condition, he kept on studying until he broke down and died.

HILL LEAVES THE N. P.

Great Northern President Resigns His Directorship.

New York, Dec. 14.—James J. Hill has resigned from the board of directors of the Northern Pacific company. This is said to be preliminary to other equally important changes in the directorate of not only the Northern Pacific, but of all the roads in the railroad trust. Harriman, of the Union Pacific, who is also a member of the Northern Pacific board, is said to be slated for retirement from the latter board soon. This is deemed necessary to put the trust in a position to fight the efforts of Gov. Van Sant to prevent the merger. The retirement of Hill from the Northern Pacific is a victory for Gov. Van Sant and Minnesota as it shows the trust recognizes the validity of the Minnesota law.

THREE ARE SENTENCED.

Colored Gun-Flourisher Pleads Guilty at Moorhead.

Moorhead, Minn., Dec. 14.—Prof. J. G. Boss, the colored barber who shot A. M. McMillan last summer, entered a plea of guilty yesterday and was sentenced to the penitentiary for two years. Charles Thompson plead guilty to the charge of burglary, and was also sent to Stillwater for two years. John Walters was convicted of assault in the second degree and was given a reformatory sentence. The business of the term will not be completed, and a recess will be taken until Jan. 7 to dispose of the civil cases.

WAS A BAD GUN FIGHT.

Bill Randolph Is Convicted of Manslaughter.

Duluth, Dec. 14.—The Jury in the case of the state against Bill Randolph of Koochiching for murder in the first degree, returned a verdict yesterday afternoon at Grand Rapids, Minn., for manslaughter in the first degree. Randolph was indicted for the killing of one-armed Frank Sullivan at Rainy Lake City, Feb. 7 last, in one of the most sensational gun fights that ever took place in the Northwest. Randolph was wounded in two places, but recovered.

SMALLPOX ALL GONE.

Indians of Odanah Released From Quarantine.

Ashland, Wis., Dec. 14.—The smallpox epidemic at Odanah has at last been stamped out. Dr. Davidson, United States Indian physician, returned last evening from the reservation where he tore the last card off the doors and released the occupants. It was two months after smallpox was discovered before the last case was released from quarantine. There have been 165 cases of the disease, and of these only three died.

Not So Funny for the Principals.

Fargo, N. D., Dec. 14.—An interesting case has been on trial in the district court. Dr. J. H. Rindlaub purchased a horse from Paul Humphrey of Grant county, Wis. The animal died soon after reaching here and the doctor secured a judgment for the purchase price, $175, from which an appeal was taken to the district court and a judgment of $133 entered, with costs, to Humphrey. Both men are wealthy and the scrap over the defunct steed has caused much amusement.

Successful Stock Feeding.

Langdon, Minn., Dec. 14.—Forest E. Woodward, one of the bonanza stock feeders of this locality, shipped six car loads (numbering 105 head) of fine beef steers to Chicago this week, the price received being $6.60 per 100 and the average weight about 1,400 pounds each. Mr. Woodward purchased these steers for fattening last spring and has realized a fine profit on his investment. He will now put in about 5,000 sheep for winter feeding.

Moody Graduate Rises.

Langdon, Minn., Dec. 14.—Nathaniel W. Leavitt, formerly of this place, is now located at Shenandoah, Iowa, where he has charge of the musical department of the Missionary Training home. Mr. Leavitt has recently completed a four years' course at the Moody Bible institute at Chicago. He is a grandson of Mr. and Mrs. D. A. Kemp of this place, and was born and reared here.

ROBED FOR GRAVE

MAN AND HIS BLIND WIFE DECIDE THAT THEY WILL DIE TOGETHER.

FOUND IN A LAST EMBRACE

SEALED DOORS AND WINDOWS AND THEN TURNED ON THE GAS.

SENSANIONAL DOUBLE SUICIDE

NOTES PINNED TO VARIOUS ARTICLES DENOTE THEIR GIFTS.

New York, Dec. 14.—Herman Doering, sixty-two years old, and his wife, fifty-three years old, yesterday were found dead in their apartments, 540 Blackwell street, in the Astoria section of Long Island City.

The crevaces of the doors and windows were found carefully sealed and gas was escaping from the only jet in the room. The couple lay on the bed robed for the grave and clasped in each other's arms. Doering was formerly a wholesale manufacturer of lanterns and street lamps in Warren street, Manhattan, but of recent years his business had fallen off. To add to his troubles he was sued for damages by a boy who was injured in his factory, and gradually his savings of years were spent.

Sixteen years ago his wife lost her way one night and fell into the river. The nervous shock to her system affected her eyesight and she became totally blind.

It appears that the couple had been planning to commit suicide for some time. Pinned on the various articles in the room were notes telling for whom each article was intended.

KILLS HIS OWN MOTHER.

Matricide Stricken With Remorse Then Takes His Own Life.

Upper Sandusky, Ohio, Dec. 14.—Mrs. Valentine Wisebaker was found lying in a pool of blood at her home yesterday and beside her was a bloody stove poker. Mrs. Wisebaker's skull was crushed and her body badly bruised. She was unconscious and cannot recover. Her son Jacob, who lives with his wife and family in another part of town was seen to leave the house at an early hour yesterday morning. A search for him resulted in his dead body being found in the hay mow at Long's livery stable with a bullet wound in his temple. A revolver which he had bought an hour before was also found. Mrs. Wisebaker received her pension money Wednesday and it is supposed the son's visit to the house was for the purpose of robbery. Being detected he assaulted his mother and remorse for his act prompted him to take his own life.

GREAT LOSS TO GOEBEL.

Loses All the Papers in the Case of His Murdered Brother.

Cincinnati, Dec. 14.—By the burning of the store of Lowry & Goebel yesterday Arthur Goebel lost the papers relating to the death of his brother, William Goebel, and the trials of ex-Secretary of State Caleb Powers, James Howard, Henry Youtsey and others who have been tried or indicted in Kentucky for the tragedy at Frankfort almost two years ago. These papers included affidavits, confessions and volumes of testimony. While Arthur Goebel suffered considerable loss in the burning of the store he grieved more over the loss of these papers than over the loss of his goods. Since the death of his brother Arthur Goebel has given most of his time to securing evidence for the attorneys in the prosecution of these cases.

ROOSEVELT CALLED DOWN.

German Paper Does Not Coincide With Monroe Doctrine Views.

Berlin, Dec. 14.—Some commotion has been caused in the press here by the publication of cablegrams from New York to the effect that Washington considers incorrect the German official view of that passage in President Roosevelt's message containing his definition of the Monroe doctrine, which is here construed as permitting of the collection of private claims against South American countries by force. In this connection the Tages Zeitung says: "If Germany found it necessary to occupy a Venezuelan port she would not ask Uncle Sam's permission to do so."

POICY SHOPS RAIDED.

Alfred Adams, Known as the "Policy King," Among the Prisoners.

New York, Dec. 14. — Frank Moss, president of the Society for the Prevention of Crime, and Capt. F. Norton Goddard, head of the anti-policy society, with agents and detectives, raided three alleged policy shops on the West side. They arrested eighteen persons and seized a quantity of paraphernalia and other material deemed very important. Alfred J. Adams, who is called the "Policy King," was arrested in connection with the raids. All of the prisoners were held for examination.

Compromised for $1,000.

Knitting Plant Destroyed.

Raleigh, N. C., Dec. 14.—The entire plant of the Riverview Knitting mills at Tarboro, N. C., were destroyed by fire yesterday. The loss is $50,000, with $35,000 insurance. One hundred operatives are thrown out of employment.

Biography of Schley.

Baltimore, Dec. 14.—The Herald says that Capt. James Parker, who was one of Admiral Schley's counsel before the court of inquiry, is engaged in the collection of material for a biography of Admiral Schley.

REPORT SCHLEY COURT.

Work Practically Completed and the Result Will Soon Be Known.

Washington, Dec. 14. — The Schley court of inquiry is nearing the end of its labors, and, while it is impossible to secure from the members or from the navy department a statement as to when the report will be submitted, it is believed that it cannot be delayed more than thirty-four hours. It was said at the department yesterday afternoon that at the close of office hours the report was not finished. It is the intention of Secretary Long to have typewritten copies of it prepared immediately for the press. Although clothed with reviewing authority, Secretary Long has said that he will not exercise it in this case. The report will be given to the public without the slightest change and without any indorsement in the nature of a review of the proceedings. The court was again in session yesterday, though Admiral Dewey, did not attend the afternoon meeting. Capt. Lemly, the judge advocate of the court, paid a visit to the court rooms and carried away some papers which, while connected with the case, were not the report of the court. He has not yet signed the report, as he expects to do.

NEXT G. A. R. ENCAMPMENT.

Executive Committee Selects Washington for the Next Meeting.

Chicago, Dec. 14. — Members of the executive committee of the national council of the Grand Army of the Republic at a meeting here last night decided to hold the next annual encampment of the organization at Washington. It has been decided that the encampment will be held in the fall, although the exact date will not be selected until to-day. Atlantic City, N. J., and Denver wanted the meeting, but after the claims of the three delegations had been heard the national capital was selected unanimously. Among the things mentioned in favor of that city was that the monument in memory of Gen. William T. Sherman which is being erected there will be ready for dedication during the time of the encampment.

IRELAND FOR ROME.

May Be Made a Cardinal but Not Kept in America.

New York, Dec. 14.—A cablegram to the Tribune from Rome says: "To maintain the decision of the pope not to create any new cardinals in America while Cardinal Gibbons lives, and satisfying at the same time the urgent solicitations which some have even attributed to President Roosevelt, it has been suggested to create Archbishop Ireland a cardinal to reside in Rome, and to make Archbishop Corrigan a cardinal, reserved "in pectore," for announcement after the death of Cardinal Gibbons. It is reported that Dr. Farley, auxiliary bishop of New York, is now here pushing this plan.

FIVE DAYS WITHOUT FOOD.

Shipwrecked Japanese Fishermen Suffer Tortures.

Vancouver, B. C., Dec. 14.—Two Japanese fishermen were wrecked near Porter island and forced to remain for five days without food, fire or shelter. One of them, Etsujiro Sunada, was brought to Port Essington with his foot frozen. His legs were amputated. From his story it appears that he and a companion were out fishing and were caught in a gale. In the heavy seas their boat was overturned. They managed to swim to Porter island, but found themselves on a rocky point without means of lighting a fire. Their sufferings were intense.

ANTI-ANARCHY.

Special Subcommittee to Consider the Many Bills Presented.

Washington, Dec. 14.—The judiciary committee of the house of representatives in its initial meeting authorized Chairman Ray to appoint a special subcommittee to consider the many bills offered to punish attacks on the president and vice president, and to deal with anarchists and anarchy. The special subcommittee, when announced, will make a special examination of the powers of congress to deal with this subject and will recommend adequate punishment and restrictions.

RIOTS IN CADIZ.

Revolutionary Disturbances Keep the Police Busy.

Cadiz, Dec. 14.—This city was in a state of partial revolution practically all night long. Riotous mobs, led by striking bakers armed with knives and bludgeons, pillaged stores, attacked peaceable people in the streets, injured a number of persons, threw the whole town into a state of panic and made the night hideous with shouts of "Long live the social revolution," and "Down with the bourgeoise." The police were powerless to quell the disturbance.

Escaped Convict Caught.

Sioux Falls, S. D., Dec. 14.—An important catch has been made by Chief of Police Martin of this city. He recognized a man on the street as an ex-convict from the Sioux Falls penitentiary, who, a short time ago, escaped from the penitentiary at Leavenworth, Kan. The fugitive has been placed in jail and the Kansas officials notified.

Fighting for a Church.

London, Dec. 14.—Reports from Jerusalem say that the feud between Greeks and Latins over the custody of the Church of the Holy Sepulcher is far from settled. Since the fight on Sunday, Nov. 3, in which five men were wounded, several encounters have taken place.

Resources of a Million.

Waterloo, Iowa, Dec. 14.—The First National Bank has been made a United States depository and $50,000 of United States treasury funds has been placed in the vault. Its resources now reach the $1,000,000 mark.

WAR IS IMMINENT

CHILE AND ARGENTINA READY TO FLY AT EACH OTHER'S THROATS.

RELATIONS VERY MUCH STRAINED

EFFORTS TO AVERT A CLASH HAVE NOT YET BEEN ABANDONED.

BOTH SIDES GETTING READY

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT READY TO USE HIS INFLUENCE FOR PEACE.

Washington, Dec. 14. — Official dispatches received here yesterday indicate that the differences between Chile and the Argentine republic have reached a crisis.

Efforts to avert war have not been abandoned, and the information conveyed to the state department shows that a continuance of peace is not impossible. But the state of feeling is such between these two progressive South American republics that the slightest incident may bring about hostilities.

William P. Lord, United States minister to Argentina, and Henry L. Wilson, United States minister to Chile, communicated by telegraph to the state department yesterday. The texts of their communications are not obtainable, but the two diplomatic reports agreed substantially in the opinion that the relations of Argentina and Chile were strained to the utmost. Both, however, were of the opinion that War Might Be Avoided. The legations of the two South American nations received information also of the critical condition of affairs, and the first secretary of the Argentina mission went to the state department to talk over the situation with Secretary Hay, with particular reference, it is supposed, to the willingness of the United States to attempt to bring about an adjustment of the causes of dispute. This government will not offer its services as mediator until requested by both Southern neighbors. It has, however, conveyed an intimation to each that President Roosevelt to bring about a better understanding stands ready to exert his good offices between them.

Preparing for War.

Buenos Ayres, Dec. 13.—The relations between Chile and the Argentine republic are strained. Chile has not yet replied to the demand for the construction of strategic roads in the litigated territory. The Chilean answer to this demand will be given to-day. The Argentina government believes that the Chilean answer will be satisfactory. But a part of the press doubts this. In the meantime both countries are taking protective measures, although Argentina has not yet mobilized the militia. In case Chile's reply is not favorable, Argentina will withdraw her minister from Santiago and the antecedents and history of the misunderstanding will be forwarded to Great Britain for arbitration. Chile is busily engaged in buying warships, aiming to surpass the power of Argentina's fleet.

Alliance With Colombia.

Colon, Dec. 13.—It is reliably reported here that Chile and Colombia have signed a traty of alliance.

ATROCITIES BY BOERS.

Wounded Prisoners Are Submitted to Inhuman Treatment.

London, Dec. 14.—The war office issued a statement last night dealing with the Boer treatment of Col. Benson's wounded at Blakenlaagte, which a result of a special investigation of the matter instituted by Lord Kitchener. The statement sets forth that eighteen officers and men of Col. Benson's command were kindly and even carefully treated by the Boers, while the other seventy-five men who were examined testified that they witnessed and suffered atrocities worse than those which followed the Vlakfontein disaster. These latter said that unarmed and wounded men lying around the guns were killed at close range and that the survivors of the engagement suffered torture, being robbed and stripped of their clothing in spite of their wounds and broken limbs. Lord Kitchener says that evidently the Boer leaders are no longer able to repress murder and outrage on the part of their subordinates.

TURNCOATS DOOMED.

Botha Orders the Death of Boers Who Scout for Enemy.

London, Dec. 14.—The correspondent of the Daily Mail at Brussels says in a dispatch that by a proclamation dated Nov. 15, Gen. Botha ordered the execution of all burghers enrolled with the British forces as scouts who might fall into the hands of the Boers. The correspondent adds that fifteen such burghers have already been shot.

Close Call for Shamrock.

New York, Dec. 14.—Sir Thomas Lipton's cup challenger, Shamrock II., narrowly escaped being destroyed by fire last night. Only the strenuous efforts of the firemen saved her. As it was she was badly scorched on one side. The fire burned the boiler shop of the J. M. Robbins company at Erie basin, Brooklyn, where the Shamrock was laid up for the winter. The extent of the loss is estimated at $100,000.

Engulfed in Malt Bin.

Chicago, Dec. 14.—Joseph Schwartz, an employe of the McAvoy Brewing company, was found in the center of a great malt bin, where he had been buried alive. He was a young German who came here to learn brewing.

Stabbed and Stoned to Death.

Santa Fe, N. Mex., Dec. 14.—Lorenso Vargis, a Pueblo Indian, was stabbed and stoned to death by Mexicans of Penasco on account of a dispute over land and water rights. It is feared more bloodshed will follow.

INSURGENTS ARE ROUTED.

Gen. Bell Conducting an Active Campaign in Batangas Province.

Manila, Dec. 17.—Gen. J. Franklin Bell has been exceedingly active in Batangas province, where he intends by every means available to stamp out the insurrection. There are daily conflicts between the insurgents and the men of Gen. Bell's command, in which the former are almost invariably routed. Lieut. Hennessy of the Eighth infantry, together with one American scout and six Filipinos, captured an insurgent major with 43 men, 22 rifles and 880 rounds of ammunition, without the loss of a man. The number of captured documents and papers now in the hands of Gen. Bell implicate prominent natives in Batangas province. Gen. Bell has notified the natives in Batangas province that he intends, Dec. 18, to concentrate them in the vicinity of towns. He will remove their live stock and baggage. After that date everything outside the limits will be confiscated.

The Sixth cavalry is tireless in its operations against the insurgents and has received the highest praise from the military authorities.

VERY FOND OF GEN. CHAFFEE.

Insurgent General Torres, Whose Sentence of Death Was Set Aside.

Manila, Dec. 17.—The insurgent Gen. Torres, who was found guilty by a military commission of ordering the assassination of American prisoners and sentenced to be hanged, but whose sentence was disapproved by Gen. Chaffee, broke down when he was released. He said it was just that his life be spared, because he was innocent of the crime imputed to him. He has expressed his highest regard and warmest feelings for Gen. Chaffee, and his appreciation that the supreme military power in the Philippines is in the hands of such a man. Torres says he is submissive to the existing conditions.

RECORDS BROKEN AT CHICAGO.

Coldest Weather for December in Thirty Years.

Chicago, Dec. 17.—Yesterdaw was the coldest day Chicago has experienced in the month of December since the weather bureau was established here thirty years ago. For three hours yesterday morning the mercury stood at 12 degrees below zero. Later, however, the skies cleared, and the wind, which had been blowing from the northwest, died down, causing a gradual rise of temperature, and last night the thermometer at the local weather bureau registered but 3 degrees below zero.

While there was considerable suffering among the poor, many of whom were unprepared for the sudden change, no deaths were reported that could be attributed to the cold.

BURNED TO DEATH.

Dodge Center Doctor's Nightgown Causes His Demise.

Dodge Center, Minn., Dec. 17.—Early Saturday morning Dr. J. A. Garver of this city went to the fireplace in his house to replenish the fire. He was attired in his night clothes, and in brushing against the fire the skirt of the gown ignited and quickly blazed up. Before aid could reach him he was terribly burned, and later died in great pain.

Dr. Graves and his wife have been residents of this county for forty years or more. His widow is in an enfeebled condition, and the fatal accident which befell her husband has proved a great shock to her.

HELD UP AND SHOT.

Saloon Man Reached for His Gun but Robber Had the Drop.

Omaha, Dec. 17.—Three masked robbers entered the saloon of Henry Hakenholz at Twenty-seventh and X streets in South Omaha and demanded that the proprietor hold up his hands. Hakenholz reached for his revolver, when one of the robbers shot him through the lungs, from the effect of which he will probably die. The men then rifled the cash register and fled. Hakenholz was removed to his home. No arrests have been made.

TWO MEN ARE KILLED.

Engine in an Elevator at Hargrave, Man., Explodes.

Hargrave, Man., Dec. 17.—Fire broke out in the elevator engine house owned by E. A. Holmes. The fire was caused by the gasoline engine exploding. Five men were in the engineroom when the explosion took place. The dead are: Stewart Wright of Kola district, R. D. Sykes, a farmer eight miles north of here. The three who escaped were badly burned. The most serious was E. A. Holmes. The engine house was destroyed and the engine was ruined.

TOWN ALMOST WIPED OUT.

Fifty-six Houses, Stores and Other Buildings Destroyed.

Parkersburg, W. Va., Dec. 17.—The fire which started Saturday night at Salem, seventy miles east of here on the Baltimore & Ohio railroad, destroyed practically the entire business portion of the city. In all fifty-six houses, stores and other buildings were destroyed. The loss is estimated at over $200,000, with little insurance. The fire originated in a newspaper office, but the cause is unknown.

Smallpox Closes School.

Stevens Point, Wis., Dec. 17.—Owing to the prevalence of smallpox in the Fourth ward it has been deemed advisable to close both the public and parochial schools in that ward until after the disease has again been placed under control. There are now about twenty cases in the city. Most of them are in a very mild form. Of the hundred or more cases treated here within the past year there have been no fatalities.

Two Killed by a Freight Car.

Toledo, Dec. 17.—Charles A. Wilson and August Basch were killed yesterday in the Lake Shore yards at Air Line Junction by being run down by a freight car. They were part of a gang of men who were engaged in repairing a section of track.

Billings, Mont., Dec. 17.—J. A. Phillips, a well known sheepman, left here Friday for Flat Willow, forty-five miles from here, accompanied by two herders, and a report reached here yesterday that all three were frozen to death en route.

EAST IS FLOODED

WORST FLOOD IN MANY YEARS PREVAILS THROUGHOUT THE EAST.

MILLIONS OF DOLLARS DAMAGE

HEAVY RAIN AND MELTING SNOW CAUSE MANY SWOLLEN STREAMS.

RAILROAD TRAFFIC IS SUSPENDED

HAVOC IN THE COAL REGIONS WILL COST MILLIONS OF DOLLARS.

New York, Dec. 17.—The entire eastern section of the country is under water and one of the worst floods in years prevails.

The floods extend from Pennsylvania and Western New York south into the Virginia and Maryland, and to the eastward through Delaware, Maryland, New Jersey and the lower part of New England.

Damage to the extent of millions of dollars has been done, but thus far few lives have been lost.

Warm weather and rain, followed by high winds, resulted in fearful damage. On Saturday the snows in the northern sections of New York thawed rapidly, causing the rivers and creeks to rise and the valleys were inundated. Heavy rain followed during the night, accompanied by winds of great velocity. Trains were blocked for many hours, landslides were frequent, and in the lowlands and valleys hundreds of dwellings were flooded, while the damage to farm lands and buildings is very great.

In and around New York city the wind reached a velocity of forty-eight miles an hour, but beyond minor incidents no great damage is reported so far to property on land or shipping.

Many Towns Inundated.

Many towns in the interior of the state are inundated. At Ithaca the damage is estimated at $200,000. The flood was the most disastrous experienced since 1857. The nearby creeks became raging torrents by midnight. A dwelling house was swept away and no trace of it can be found. The power and lighting plant was washed out and two trolley cars swallowed up in the flood. All street car traffic is suspended and the city is in darkness.

Syracuse, Waverly, Binghamton, Oneida, Troy, Auburn, Rome and other towns report great damage. Traffic of all kinds is practically suspended.

Considerable damage has been done throughout Northern New York by the extremely high wind, which prevailed for twenty-four hours, reaching the velocity of a tornado. The warm weather Saturday sent the snow out of the Adirondacks like magic and many houses on lower levels are flooded.

In New England the floods are not as great as they are in New York, but much damage has been done.

Pennsylvania Is Flooded.

Reports from Pittsburg, Allentown, Susquehanna, Easton and other points in Pennsylvania report one of the most destructive floods for nearly forty years.

Traction company power houses are flooded, no trolley cars have been run at many points since 10 o'clock yesterday morning, and many towns are in darkness.

Trestles on a number of roads have been washed away and railroad traffic is suspended.

The storm was accompanied by a high wind which at many points wrecked buildings. Many towns report losses of from $50,000 to $200,000.

Pittsburg's three rivers at 9 o'clock last night passed the danger line and are still rising, with reports from the headwaters of the Monongahela and Allegheny rivers stating that both streams were still rising. The weather bureau reports that the cold wave will prevent the streams from reaching thirty feet, but that considerable damage will result from the unexpected rise and inability of shippers and rivermen to the craft securely before the crest of the rise arrived. In the Allegheny river at 9 o'clock the water indicator showed 25 feet 7 inches and The River Rising. In the Monongahela the reading on the gauge was 26 7 inches, while at Davis Island dam 21 feet 16 inches and rising 7 inches an hour was reported. At Brownsville 28 feet and rising is reported, while at all points up the Allegheny the stream is rising.

The havoc in the coal regions is enormous and the loss to railroad and mining companies will amount to millions of dollars. In the Schuylkill valley forty-eight mines were flooded, and in the Lehigh and Lackawanna regions the destruction is equally great. Hundreds of mules were drowned in the collieries and it will be weeks before many of the mines can resume operations.

In some sections the water reached the second stories of dwellings, and the town of Westmore, near Wilkesbarre, is submerged. Many residents have left their homes in boats. Similar conditions exist along the Juniata river, farmers being compelled by the steadily rising water to abandon their homes.

The flood was rendered more disastrous by the melting of the snow on the mountain sides. The storm broke with great severity Saturday after the rain had been falling incessantly for several days.

Quakers to Buy an Island.

Marinette, Wis., Dec. 17.—A party of Quaker doctors plan to start a colony and hospital at Chambers' island in Green bay, and paid the island a visit with officials of the Port Washington Chair company, which owns the property, as their escort. The party was headed by George Seabolt of Philadelphia, and many well-known Pennsylvanians are said to be interested in the project. The island at present is used almost exclusively as the home of fishermen, being too small for much in the way of farming, but it is believed that it would make an excellent health resort.

Rickerby's Folly

By TOM GALLON

CHAPTER V. (Continued.)

At the Marble Arch the man stopped and civilly parted from them, pointed out their way and jogged on again, as good-humoredly as ever. It was now very late, and there was no prospect, for the Taggetts, at least, but to walk to their destination. The woman who accompanied them made no suggestion as to taking any conveyance, and was probably as penniless as they were. Mr. Taggett made a feeble attempt as they went along, to beguile the walk with suggestions of the uproarious laughter with which the events of the day would be greeted in select circles in years to come; but Mrs. Taggett did not seem to see the point of the joke at that particular time, and the stranger strode along beside them without paying the slightest attention to anything that was said.

Thus is was that, worn-out, bedraggled and faint with hunger, the three came, at last, to the gate in the wall which led to Rickerby's Folly, and it was the loud and persistent ringing of the bell by Anthony Taggett which produced such a startling effect on Cornelius and his master.

After some slight delay the gate was opened, and the old man stood looking at them, with the lantern held above his head, the better to scan their faces. After a little parleying, the gate was shut, after they had been admitted into the ruined garden; and they stood there close together, speaking in whispers, and wondering what was to happen next. Cornelius, in the meantime, had gone into the house, as has already been related; after a little hurried discussion, Nugent gave orders that the people were to be admitted. The better to receive them, he sat down at a table, apparently busy with correspondence, and composed himself as much as possible.

The first to enter the room was Anthony Taggett, followed by his wife. Nugent Leathwood, who had made up his mind what part to play, sprang up at once and went towards them, with a cordial smile and with his hands outstretched.

"I beg that you will not offer any apologies," he began, hurriedly. "Any friend of poor Gilbert Rickerby must, of necessity, be a friend of mine. I understand that you have come a long way to see him?"

Mr. Taggett nodded; he was somewhat surprised by the warmth of this welcome from a stranger, and was about to gasp out a question, when Nugent began again, hurriedly:

"Your errand, in so far as it relates to Gilbert Rickerby, is a fruitless one. Gilbert Rickerby is dead. Do not speak of it, I beg; I will tell you all on another occasion. For the present, as I have said, you are my friends, because you were his; for to-night, at least, we will find accommodation for you here."

Mr. Taggett was about to make some attempt to give expression to his surprise and sorrow, when he observed an extraordinary change come over the face of Nugent Leathwood; he saw, too, that that gentleman was looking straight past the man whose hand he held, towards the door by which they had entered. Turning his own head quickly he saw, standing near the door, the woman who had accompanied them on their journey; she stood quite still, frowning heavily.

"What are you talking about?" she said, harshly. "What nonsense is this, about Gilbert Rickerby being dead? Why—you told me that you were Gilbert Rickerby when we——"

"Yes—yes, Ursula—I know—I know," exclaimed Nugent, hurriedly. "I told you that, to—to try you—to test your—your love——Well, what the dickens do you want?"

Old Cornelius had crept to his elbow and stood there, striving excitedly to attract his attention. In a hoarse whisper, distinctly heard by the three who stood watching them, the old man tremblingly blurted out his news:

"The gell—Rickerby's gel!—I can't find 'er anywheres!"

CHAPTER VI.

Mr. Reeks Answers an Advertisement.

Mr. George Reeks—commission agent and general dealer in the small and crafty and shady ways of life—was in difficulties. Not that this was anything out of the common, so far as Mr. Reeks was concerned: perhaps it would have been somewhat disconcerting to that gentleman if he had found himself, by some extraordinary trick of fortune, in easy circumstances. Only, on this occasion, things were rather more desperate than usual; and Mr. Reeks, used as he was to wriggling, had merely succeeded in wriggling himself into a corner from which there seemed to be no prospect of ever getting out again.

Mr. George Reeks was a little man who might, under happier conditions, have been cheerful, but who was under the hand of an adverse Fate, merely worried-looking and inclined to melancholy. In person he was small and of a ruddy complexion, his hair for the most part had long since slipped away from a rather large head, leaving only some bushy tufts round about the region of his ears and the back of his neck. At a time when life wore a rosier hue he had married a lady of commanding presence, and, to do him justice, had never quite lost sight of a romantic idea that she was a dream of beauty, and that she had condescended greatly in listening to his addresses. The lady, for her part, did him the honor to be extremely jealous of him, and labored under a constant fear that he was a species of elderly Lothario, to whom a pair of bright eyes meant madness and the flutter of a petticoat despair and disaster.

Mr. George Reeks lived at No. 2, Little Pond street, Camden Town—a modest house, the upper part of which was let out in lodgings, at such time as any lodgers could be found to occupy them. A week before disaster had fully swept down upon him Mr. Reeks had felt that the world was smiling; he had let the whole of the upper part of the house at an astonishing rental, to a man who, in an apparent fit of madness, desired to live there with his servant.

Now, the name of that man was Gilbert Rickerby, and he had taken the rooms, on coming first to London, on the recommendation of his servant, James Holden, who knew the neighborhood well. Mr. Gilbert Rickerby, for his own part, merely desired to hide from his fellows for a while, and was glad enough to find a retreat in this quiet house in a little back street. He was able to pay well, and he was accepted as a tenant without question.

Three days after his appearance, however, he had gone out one night with his servant, and had never returned. The rooms, being entered by Mr. Reeks, had disclosed the astounding fact that his own and his servant's luggage was open, in the most careless fashion, and the contents spread about the rooms—evidence that he had intended to return. But the days went on, and there was no sign of him; and the dreams of Mr. Reeks of being able to obtain a steady and easy income for an indefinite period from his new lodger, began to fade. In deed, at that time Mr. Reeks was in that condition when he had absolutely nothing else to depend upon.

Quite late one night, when Mr. Reeks sat with Mrs. Reeks in their sitting room, Mrs. Reeks made a discovery. It is usually the woman who makes the discovery in these cases, and Mrs. Reeks was not behind her sex in such matters. They had been talking of the mystery of the absent lodger and his servant, and Mr. Reeks had disconsolately shaken his head and expressed the opinion, more than once, that luck was against him.

"It's what I have told you so often, George Reeks; you ought never to have received the man here without a reference. On the face of it, it is distinctly absurd to imagine that a man who can not give a respectable reference, should be supposed to act as decent people do. People with references are not in the habit of going out for walks and never coming back any more."

"But, my dear, you forget, that this man paid down a week's money in advance, and at the best terms we could offer. There was no hesitation on his part, and I—"

"Hesitation! I should think not, indeed!" cried Mrs. Reeks, sitting up more stiffly in her chair. "Depend upon it, George Reeks, that man had some dreadful design in his mind when he determined to get into this house. Have you looked through his personal belongings?"

"My dear, I wouldn't think of such a thing!" exclaimed Mr. Reeks, in horror. "After all, we may be merely worrying ourselves about nothing; the gentleman may turn up to-morrow, having merely been on a little—a little journey."

"In the words of the vulgar, George Reeks, 'Pigs may fly.' Take my word for it; you will never see your precious lodger again, or his servant, either. The best thing you can do, at the moment, is to eat your supper, and be thankful that you have anything to eat at all. It won't be for long, at the rate things are going."

The "supper" referred to was something very hot, and very economical, which had been brought in from an adjacent cook-shop by the small servant maid who presided—under the direction of Mrs. Reeks—over the domestic part of the establishment. For a few moments, at least, Mr. Reeks forgot his troubles, as he gazed upon the savory things before him; even Mrs. Reeks consented to smile, and heaved a sigh of satisfaction. But not for long; the demon of unrest was to enter even into that humble meal.

For the greater convenience of those who purchase, and with an eye to economy on the part of those who sell, such frugal suppers, they are usually wrapped in paper, and Mr. Reeks, in dividing out the contents of the paper into equal portions, commenced to read, and came across the advertisement offering a reward of £100. She stopped, stared, gasped, and at last, forgetful of everything else, swept the savory morsels on to a plate, caught up the paper and read aloud the advertisement which Mr. Nugent Leathwood had inserted, imploring Gilbert Rickerby to keep his appointment, and let his loving cousin know of his wherabouts.

Now, Mr. Reeks was not in the habit of taking a daily paper; first, because it was expensive; and, secondly, because it did not interest him from a business point of view; whatever arrangements he made for the getting or scraping together of a precarious livelihood, were usually conducted at the bar of an obscure public house, or, even on occasion, at a street corner. Thus it happened that he knew nothing concerning all the newspaper talk there had been about the death of Gilbert Rickerby, or about the forgotten romance which had been thrown around the house where he was born. This scrap of paper, coming in so strange a fashion to him, was the first intimation they had had that Gilbert Rickerby was wanted.

Mrs. Reeks read it aloud; Mr. Reeks sat back in his chair and stared at her in amazement; the supper grew cold, but neither of them noticed it. After a long silence, Mr. Reeks spoke in solemn tones:

"Rickerby was the name of our lodger!" he said, in an awed whisper.

"Yes," said Mrs. Reeks, slowly, "and he is missing. More than that, George, there's £100 reward!"

Mr. Reeks started up wildly, almost upsetting the table in his agitation. "Where is he?" he cried; "where is the man who cheats me out of his rent, and then goes about with hundreds of pounds tacked on to his name?"

"It's very certain that he is not here," responded Mrs. Reeks, gloomily. "If he was—"

Mr. Reeks breathed heavily. "If he was—I'd hold him until you had time to find a policeman; then we might stand some chance of the reward. One hundred pounds, Mrs. Reeks. I never had £10 in one moment in all my life—let alone ten times ten."

There was another long silence, while Mr. Rickerby looked at the scrap of paper—holding it alternately close to his eyes and at arm's length, as though to get the full, dazzling effect of it. Finally he put it down with a sigh and shook his head.

"It's no good, my dear," he said. "The man has gone; if he wanted to put in an appearance, he would have done it before this—if only for the sake of that £100! I'd have put in fifty appearances for that amount."

Mrs. Reeks was thinking hard. She sat, with her chin on her hand, staring, with knitted brows, at her husband, and now and then slowly nodding her head. At last she spoke:

"George Reeks—it seems to me that there is something to be made of this."

Mr. Reeks sat upright and looked at his wife.

"Think hard, Mrs. R.," he said; you have a wonderful mind, if you care to put yourself to it. Think hard!"

"I am thinking harder than I ever thought in my life before, George Reeks," she added, nodding at him with much gravity. "I always said that I ought to have been the man, because I have got the headpiece."

"True, my love—most true," replied Mr Reeks, admiringly. "And what says that headpiece?"

"It says, in the first place, George Reeks, that this Mr. Gilbert Rickerby went away from here in a most desperate hurry; and it says, further, that he left belongings and papers behind him—"

"Steady, Mrs. R.—go steady; I'm getting excited!" broke in Mr. Reeks.

"More than that," went on Mrs. Reeks, rising and pointing aloft, like a prophetic spirit; "it says that those papers are up stairs, in his room, now; that he is disposed of, or keeping away for his own purposes; it says, also, that we want to know what is in those papers, and what bearing they have on this advertisement, and on a certain reward of £100. That's what it says, George Reeks; what do you think of it?"

Mr. Reeks had risen, also, in his growing excitement; but he qualled before the infinite possibilities which seemed to be opened out in the larger mind of his wife. "What—what ought we to do?" he asked, feebly.

Mrs. Reeks had but one reply. She stepped forward quickly and grasped him by the arm. "Come up stairs," she said, in a tragic whisper.

They went up together; hesitated for a moment at the door of the room; and then went in—Mrs. Reeks first. Mrs. Reeks carried a candle; and the place—although it was but a comfortably-furnished, middle-class room—had something of an eerie appearance, by reason of what was in their minds; perhaps they had thought that the mysterious Gilbert Rickerby might start, at any moment, from the shadows, and confront them.

On a table near the window, were spread some papers, which had been pulled, hurriedly, out of a leather writing case and left exposed to view. On those Mrs. Reeks pounced at once, seated herself in the chair by the table, and began to read them.

"To begin with—a diary," she whispered. "Th elast page unfinished, with a line broken off in the middle."

"Read it—read it, Mrs. R.," said George Reeks, in a trembling voice.

Mrs. Reeks read:

"To-night I will put the theory of my life to the test; to-night I will give the lie to all those croakers who say that there is no truth in man or faith in woman. I did wrong to bind an innocent girl to me, by a promise she was unable to keep. To-night I will play the fairy godmother, and cry, 'God bless you, my children!' To-night some of the old mistakes, born in me and bred in me by a selfish father, shall be swept away and atoned for. I go to meet the man who loves my dear girl; I go to give her to him. God bless him if he be worthy of her; God help him if—"

Here the entry broke off abruptly, as though the writer had not quite made up his mind how to express what he felt. Mrs. Reeks laid her hand on the diary and loked up at her husband.

"Now, the thing is pretty clear, so far as we can judge," she said. "He told you, if you remember, that he had but just returned from abroad; that he was unknown in England. It is evident that the entry refers to an appointment he was to keep; the advertisemet tells us that he did not keep it. Now, he left this house intent on keeping that appointment; he was in such a hurry about it that he would not stop to finish what he was writing or to put away his papers. The fact remains that he did not keep the appointment; the further fact stands that the appointment was so important that the other party is willing to pay £100 to see him. Do you follow me?"

"A—a little, my dear," replied Mr. Reeks. "You go at such a fearful rate, that it is difficult to follow you at all." He leaned his head upon his hand in a state of bewilderment. "What do you expect me to do?"

"In the first place, George Reeks," said Mrs. Reeks, in a business-like tone, "two things are clear. This diary suggests that Gilbert Rickerby knew very little, if anything, about the man he was going to meet; the advertisement suggests that the man he was to meet knew very little about him. Very well, then; here is my proposal."

"Make it as easy as you can, my dear," pleaded Mr. Reeks.

"It's as easy as winking if you put your mind to it," replied Mrs. Reeks, sternly. "You shall answer this advertisement; you shall find out how the land lies; you shall, if possible, claim to know more of this Gilbert Rickerby than you really do; and you shall, if possible, get the reward." Mrs. Reeks sat back in the chair, folded her arms, and looked at her husband with much determination.

"But—but, my dear—what do I know about the matter?" he urged.

"What does anybody know about the matter?" she retorted. "If this Nugent Leathwood, who advertises, had known anything about the matter, or about the man, he would have known where to apply concerning him—would have known, for instance, that he was living here; and there would have been no necessity for him to advertise at all or to offer such a reward. No, George Reeks, this is the chance of a life-time, and you must take it."

"But, my dear, mention is made in the diary of a—a girl," hazarded Mr. Reeks.

"That has nothing to do with you!" replied Mrs. Reeks, sharply. "You have to concern yourself with money, not girls. We don't want any nonsense of that kind, George Reeks. Now, we'll just glance through the rest of the papers and see what is to be found."

They glanced through the rest of the papers, and found documents of all kinds—some relating to shares and stocks; warrants for payment of money on this, that and the other; valuable securities of all sorts. Then they looked at each other, this poverty-stricken pair, debt forever hammering at their poor doors, and a new intelligence seemed to flash from one to the other. Mrs. Reeks hurriedly thrust all the papers into the writing case and faced her husband.

"George Reeks—there is more in this than I thought. No man would go away and leave all this behind him unless he felt that, for some reason, he could not face the world. George—you shall face it for him!"

"What do you mean?" gasped Mr. Reeks, recoiling from her.

"I mean that Gilbert Rickerby has dropped out of existence; that this man, who wants him so badly, does not, apparently, know where to find him; that he has been abroad for years; that you, George Reeks, shall blossom out into Gilbert Rickerby—and make what you can out of it!"

Mr. Reeks began to protest feebly. "Quite impossible, my love; I never personated anyone in all my life, and I'm not going to begin now."

Mrs. Reeks got up and took him strongly and fiercely by the shoulders; in that position she towered above him, and he visibly qualled. "George Reeks," she said, in a determined voice, "you have been a failure; as George Reeks you cannot live respectably. Now, you shall have to try as Gilbert Rickerby; you shall put a bold face on it" (as if it were possible for Mr. Reeks to put a bold face on anything!) "and see what can be done. In any case, we can't be worse off than we are at the present moment—and I'm desperate!"

"I'm desperate enough," replied Mr. Reeks; "but I don't see what good this is going to do. It's all very well to say that I am to blossom out as Gilbert Rickerby; but I'm not a bit like him."

"That's not in the least necessary," said Mrs. Reeks, airily. "I only say that it must be done as a temporary measure. If you have the pluck to stick to it that you are Gilbert Rickerby, it may mean money in your pocket; people who are prepared to throw £100 about are not likely to be particular what they spend. Take the plunge, George Reeks—and take it boldly; if the worst comes to the worst, and they search you, they will at least find that your linen is marked 'G. R.'"

"But what am I to do?" asked Mr. Reeks, spreading out his hands, feebly. "I may carry the thing through at first—but they are bound to find me out."

"Let them!" said Mrs. Reeks. "Never mind about the future; make what you can, at the moment, of the fact that you know something of Gilbert Rickerby, and that you have his papers in your hands."

"His papers! Yes, that's a strong point. After all, as you say, Mrs. R., we can't be much worse off than we are, and I can always find some way of slipping out of it. Now, let me think what sort of a man this Gilbert Rickerby was; and let me pluck up courage enough to carry the matter through."

Mr. Reeks discovered that it wanted more courage than he was at that moment possessed of. But, after a sleepless night, and the discovery that the morning brought nothing better than two irate tradesmen, who told him pretty roundly what they thought of him, he determined, in desperation, to see what could be done; in the event of failure to personate Gilbert Rickerby he felt that there might be some prospect of trading upon his knowledge of the diary and the papers, and screwing some money out of someone. Waiting until nightfall, he made himself as respectable as a limited wardrobe would permit and set off for St. John's Wood.

Now, there are many ways of getting from Camden Town to St. John's Wood. If one has leisure, and the weather be fine, it is possible to walk, and to note, as one walks, of the change of each neighborhood as it merges itself into the next; or there are omnibuses which strike a path into the heart of the mysterious region, and seem to lose themselves and their passengers in it. Or, there are cabs, which may be had for the hailing, at street corners, and which will deliver one, as it were, within an inch of the spot one desires to reach. Mr. Reeks, knowing well the depth of his pocket, and having private reasons of his own, decided to walk.

But, as has been said, Mr. Reeks was not a courageous being; and, moreover, he had before him a difficult task. Therefore, with a laudable desire to keep up the small measure of courage he possessed, he stepped into the first public house he saw and partook of certain strong liquors. Indeed, after that he may be said to have punctuated his erratic path with such pauses; so that, by the time he had arrived at the gate of Rickerby's Folly, he was prepared to swear positively, not only that he was the real Gilbert Rickerby, but that he was anyone else who might be suggested to him at the moment.

Cornelius admitted him; Cornelius saw him go swaying unsteadily up the garden towards the house; Cornelius ushered him into the room wherein Nugent Leathwood sat, with the simple announcement that here was a gentleman to see him.

Leathwood, starting up from his chair, confronted this strange-looking little creature, with a hat cocked jauntily over one watery eye, and demanded to know what he wanted.

"One 'unnerd pounds 'ward!" exclaimed the apparition, sleepily. "I'm Mr. Gilbert Rickerby!"

CHAPTER VII.

A Dead Man's Money.

However startling it may have been to Nugent Leathwood to have this man standing before him, and proclaiming himself by that name, which already seemed to haunt him night and day, he soon recovered from the shock; saw that whatever this man was or, whatever he might know, he was, at the best, a weak little creature, half-stupefied with drink and scarcely knowing at the moment who he was or what he said. However, precautions had to be taken; Leathwood came slowly toward the swaying figure, and stood before it, with his hands thrust in his pockets, and stared at him leisurely.

"So you are Gilbert Rickerby, are you?" he asked, quietly. "Welcome, Mr. Gilbert Rickerby—back from the grave! Do you understand me?—back from the grave, I say!"

"What—what, d'you mean?" stammered Mr. Reeks, partly sobered by the manner of the other and by the words.

"I mean that Gilbert Rickerby is dead—died nearly a week ago; that he lies in his grave and is almost forgotten by this time. Where have you been wandering, you madman, not to know that?"

Mr. Reeks opened his mouth as if to say something, shut it again hurriedly, and turned and made for the door. But before he reached it, however, the hand of Nugent Leathwood fell upon his shoulder and twisted him round, and the eyes of Nugent Leathwood were looking into his quailing ones.

"Don't run away," said the quiet voice. "There is some game on here which I do not understand. Come, now, who put you on to this game, and who are you, really? You are not Gilbert Rickerby; of that I am certain. But you know something about him. Why, don't you know that Gilbert Rickerby was a young man of twenty-six?"

Mr. Reeks nodded feebly. "About that, I should think," he said.

"Oh! so you know him, do you? This grows interesting. Come, sit down, my friend, and let us hear what you have to say for yourself." He pushed the reluctant Mr. Reeks into a chair, and seated himself on the edge of the table close beside him. "Now, let me hear what you have to say about this Gilbert Rickerby."

George Reeks saw, only too plainly that he was in a remarkably tight place; even in his muddled state, at the moment he was quite capable of recognizing that fact. Moreover, this calm man, with the quiet voice and the dark hair, had about him a certain sense of power that was not to be denied. Therefore, with some attempt to treat the matter as a mere joke, and with many labored apologies for the mistake he had made, the little man made a full confession—pointing out how he had been tempted by some faint hope of the reward—which was offered. Nugent Leathwood listened with the closest attention—asking a question now and then, and occasionally breaking in with a short, dry laugh. At the end of the recital the little man sat cowering in his chair, fully sobered, and wondering dimly, what was going to happen.

As the Orient Sees Us.

"Is this Brooklyn bridge built for Americans or Europeans, uncle? People crossing here use no English," I said.

Liberty Statue! I will let the Beauty Statue hail from the Bay of Yeddo when I am wealthy enough to afford it.

We walked down Broadway. We came to a graveyard.

Tombstones in the midst of commerce! O romantic New York!

I wondered how Wall street gentlemen would be struck glancing at them.

What a soft silence hovered!

The old Gothic church was my own ideal.

"Uncle, let us fall in and rest," I cried.

The morning service was proceeding.

Alas and alas!

Not one soul was there.

Question of Beauty.

In the early Indiana days, when both judges and attorneys literally "rode the circuit," a newly elected judge, noted for his lack of personal beauty, was plodding along on horseback between two county-seats one fine summer day. Suddenly he was confronted by a hunter, who unslung his squirel rifle from his shoulder, and ordered the horseman to dismount. Somewhat startled by this peremptory command, the jurist began to remonstrate. He was quickly cut short, however, by the remark: "It's no use talking. I long ago swore that if I ever met a homlier man than I am I'd shoot him on sight." The judge, sizing up the situation, promptly got off his horse. Folding his arms he faced his assailant, and said: "If I am any homlier than you are, for heaven's sake do shoot and be quick about it." Needless to say, his wit saved him.—Argonaut.

Benevolence Its Own Reward.

"Hear about old Goodboy's adventure las: night?"

"Nope; caught in the act of performing a virtue, as usual, I suppose."

"Not quite. Adventure of charity. Met a young man he knew. Young man had dined not wisely, but too well. Said to young man, 'Come 'long, old chap, I'll see you home all right.' Young man came and Goodboy brought him to the house, leaned him against the door post, rang the bell and descended. Didn't get half way down stairs when he heard a shrill woman's voice and the young man coming after him. Young man came quick and head first. Was almost sober when he reached the sidewalk. 'What'd jue do? I don't live there—I moved last week,' he sobbed. And Goodboy staid late on the curb opposite waiting to see what would happen to the man that did live there."—New York Times.

The Future of the Holy Land.

Palestine is not destined to be simply a pastoral country. The suburbs of Jerusalem and Jaffa are increasing at such a rate that one almost foresees the time when Jerry building will be traced to Jerico. The bulk of the Jews live in towns in Jerusalem, in Tiberius, in Safed, and for these Jews urban industries must be created—olive-wood carving, embroidery, ready-made clothes, straw-plaiting, basket-making, soap and glass manufacture, jam-making—all were suggested at a recent conference of the colonization societies, now at last awake to the actualities of the problem. The Ica has set up a weaving room in Jerusalem, the wool and silk of which are procured in Palestine and Egypt. A dyeing factory and a lace factory are in preparation.—I. Zangwill, in Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly for December.

No Objection to That.

SARTORIAL PLAINT.

TAILORS AGGRAVATED BY WIVES OF THEIR CUSTOMERS.

Women Accompany Their Men Folks to the Tailor Shops and Worry the Knights of the Shears About the Fit of Garments.

The tailor's young man carefully massaged the corners of his eyes and smoothed out the deep creases at the sides of his nose. "I've aged ten years in the last six months," he said despondently. "I used to wonder why it was that milliners and dressmakers all looked so weary and haggard, but I understand it now. The mystery was explained when the women commenced coming here with their husbands, and fathers, and brothers, to see that their clothes fitted all right. I never knew before what the real trouble was. I'd rather make ten suits of clothes for a womanless man that one suit for a fellow with a lot of female relations. I don't know what has come over the gentle sex here lately. The time was when they had enough to do to attend to their own wardrobe, but with the increase of social liberties they have enlarged their sphere of action, and have taken to bothering the life out of us men folks. The feminine invasion this season has been unprecedented. It isn't the mere fact that their being here disturbs me. I don't mind that. It looks kind of homelike to see them sitting around gossiping in regular pink tea fashion, and if they'd only attend to their own business I'd never put up a single kick. But they are so confounded meddlesome and impertinent. They are eternally finding fault. Indeed, that is what they come here for—to find fault. It is absolutely impossible to please them, and I haven't a doubt that when they get to heaven they will raise a row about the fit of their robes. Without being at all irreverent, I must say that I am tremendously sorry for celestial dressmakers. The fun of the thing is, their husbands don't really want them here any more than I do, but they know better than to say so. I flatter myself that there isn't a man in town that can turn out a better fitting suit than we make here, but you can't convince the women so. A man stands up before them for inspection, clothed in garments that are absolutely flawless, both as to make and material, but those impudent critics pinch at the sleeves and pull at the collar, and turn the whole suit around until it has no more shape than a meal bag, and then they stand off and look at their own handiwork with stern disapproval. 'Why, Henry,' they chirp, 'there is positively no shape to those clothes. They are a perfect botch. They look like old togs stuck on a scarecrow. And the material is not first class, either. I'm sure it is half cotton.' And then 'Henry' looks at me sheepishly and says: 'A-a-ahem, Johnson, I believe you'll have to make a few alterations here. Just make a note of what Mrs. Smith says, and make changes accordingly.' And about that time my fingers fairly ache to twine around Mrs. Smith's windpipe, but I throttle my desire for vengeance instead, and listen patiently to her complaints. Of course, I don't make any of the alterations suggested. I don't have to, for the suit is already perfect, but I have to pretend that I make the whole suit over, or else lose 'Henry's' trade, and I can't afford to do that—especially as almost every man that comes here nowadays is a 'Henry' with an equally officious wife. The worst of it is, my reputation suffers from this system of female espionage, for every one of them goes away and boasts of what a hard time she had to make me do the right thing by her husband. Only last week I heard a certain 'Mrs. Smith' say to another: 'Isn't it terrible the way tailors are imposing upon their customers nowadays? Why, I have to go with Henry every time he has a fitting. If I didn't he'd never have a rag fit to put on his back.' I'm afraid I'm not a particularly devout man," concluded the tailor, with sympathetic solemnity, "but I do pray with all my heart that the day is not far distant when the New York legislature will pass a bill forbidding women to accompany their men folks on their visits to the tailor."—New York Times.

Manners in Menus in Russia.

The Russian has no fixed meal time. He eats when he is hungry, which is often. He has about six square meals a day. He has at least a dozen lunches, a little bit of salt fish or some caviare, or a piece of bread and cheese, washed down with a nip of fiery vodki. He never passes a station without a glass of tea—marvelous tea, with a thin slice of lemon floating in it. You get a fondness for Russian tea, and forswear bemilked decoctions forever. The table manners of the Russian—such as you see in hotels and buffets—are not pleasing. He sprawls with outstretched elbow on the table and gets his mouth down to his food rather than raise the food to his mouth. He makes objectionable noises in his throat. He has a finger bowl, and he rinses his mouth as the rest of us do when cleaning our teeth in our bathrooms. Then he squirts the water back into the bowl. In time one gets used to this.—Chicago Journal.

Scotland's Popular Preacher.

Now that Dr. Hunter has gone to London, perhaps the most popular preacher in Scotland is Rev. Hugh Black, who has lately been thrilling New York congregations. His coreligionists there have been tempting him with offers to succeed the late Dr. Babcock of Fifth Avenue church, but the claims of Edinburgh are too strong for him.

SASKATCHEWAN, WESTERN CANADA IS CALLED THE "GARDEN OF EDEN."

By a Former Resident of Reed City, Michigan.

In a letter to the Reed City, Michigan, Clarion, Mr. Jas. G. Armstrong, of Meltford, Saskatchewan, says, writing on 27th May, 1901:

"This is a fine country for a poor man, as he can go out on the hay slews and cut all the hay he needs. He turns his cattle out on the prairie, and when he is not using his horses he turns them out also. There is such an abundance of food, they never wander away.

"A lady, who has lived here eight years told me that this was the original 'Garden of Eden'. I certainly would believe it, if we could only find the apple trees. But as it is, we have many varieties of fruit—strawberries, cranberries, saskatoons, huckleberries, red and black currants, dewberries, plums, red and black cherries, and red raspberries. All of these fruits grow wild. Then the flowers that dot the prairies, making them look like a real garden. We have eaten of the wild red currants, and they are equal if not superior to those grown in Michigan. We have sweet corn 7½ inches high. As the Western farmers are all done seeding, branding cattle and sheep shearing are now progressing. Wool is only five cents a pound, and many ranchers have on hand last year's clip. I enclose you a potato blossom, slice of new potato, which measured 6½ inches when cut. This is no fairy tale, as we are so much farther than Reed City. It is all facts. Come up and see. This has been truly called the 'garden of the west.' With fruits and flowers, lakes and streams, fish and fowl, beautiful rivers, tracts of timber and mountains, what more does a man want?"

Information concerning all parts of Western Canada will be cheerfully given by communicating with the agent of the government of Canada, whose advertisement appears elsewhere.

Paris Postal Stories.

Some Paris postal stories are going the rounds just now. One of them has reference to a letter posted in a little country place in France to the minister of public instruction, Paris. The sender did not put a stamp upon it, knowing that government letters are carried free.

The provincial lady official, however, evidently not knowing this, put a postage stamp on the letter and sent the postman to collect the 15 centimes from the sender, whose name, by some mysterious means, the secret of which is in possession of her sex, she managed to discover.

Another anecdote relates that a well known Parisian lawyer sent a letter to M. Millerand, and put a 15-centime stamp on it, evidently forgetting that a stamp was unnecessary. Now, the letter was overweight, and the postoffice people, evidently thinking only of the stamp, and not of the minister's privileges, claimed 30 centimes excess. This, of course, M. Millerand refused to pay, and the unlucky sender was forced to take it and pay the 30 centimes, making in all, 40 centimes, out of his own pocket; whereas, had he put no stamp at all on it, it would have been safely delivered.—Paris Messenger.

UNABLE TO STAND FOR MONTHS BECAUSE OF SPRAINED ANKLES.

Cured by St. Jacob's Oil.
(From the Cardiff Times.)

Among the thousands of voluntary endorsements of the great value of St. Jacob's Oil for sprains, stiffness and soreness, is that of Mrs. G. Thomas, 4 Alexandra Road, Geill, Ysbrod, near Pontypridd, South Wales, who says:

"It is with great pleasure that I add my willing testimony to the invaluable excellence of your celebrated St. Jacob's Oil, as experienced in my own case. I sprained both my ankles in walking down some steps so severely that I was unable to stand for several months. The pain I suffered was most severe and nothing that I used helped me until I applied St. Jacob's Oil, when they immediately became better daily, and in a short time I was able to go about, and soon after I was quite cured. I as now determined to advise all persons suffering from pains to use this wonderful remedy, which did so much for me."

Mrs. Thomas does not enlighten us as to what treatment she pursued during the months she was unable to stand, and during which time she was suffering so much, but we venture to suggest that had she called in any well known medical man he would have at once prescribed St. Jacob's Oil, for it has conquered pain upwards of fifty years, and doctors know there is nothing so good. The proprietors of St. Jacob's Oil have been awarded twelve gold medals by different international exhibitions as the premier, pain-killing remedy of the world. The committees who made the awards were in each instance composed largely of the most eminent medical men obtainable. Mrs. Thomas evidently did not know the high opinion in which St. Jacob's Oil is held by almost every progressive medical man.

Like the Others.

"I thank God," said the Pharisee, "that I am not as other men."

"Oh, I don't know," replied the lady. "You seem to be like a good many of them. I saw you occupying a seat in a car last night when there were lots of women standing."—Chicago Record-Herald.

BOSTON ASTRONOMER CONSTRUCTS WONDERFUL MECHANISM

Mr. Charles N. Packard of Boston, Mass., who keeps himself closeted from the outer world most of the time in a dark room, forecasts an astronomical event which will be of interest to the entire country. He says that the four big planets—Jupiter, Mars, Venus and Saturn—will come together in November, a situation which has probably never before occurred within the memory of man. There will be no clash, but it will be an event worth witnessing. Mr. Packard has evolved a device, both interesting and instructive, which for want of a better name he calls an astronomical clock. Mr. Packard's astronomical clock is an almanac in itself. The intricacy of dials which show what time it is in London, Chicago, St. Petersburg, Melbourne and Manila, the hour at which it will be full sea at New York and Boston, the number of days since the new moon, the day of the month, the signs of the zodiac, as well as details which are of little interest to the unscientific mind, is operated by the works of a cheap clock which moves an ingenious system of gears. The cutting of the gears so that the whole mechanism should move in harmony was the greatest problem which Mr. Packard had to solve. He knew that his theory was all right, but the working out of the details was a somewhat laborious task. The clock was finished two years ago and in that time not the slightest discrepancy has manifested itself. The outer disk, which is stationary, has an enameled face on which are marked the different times—Eastern, Central, Mountain, Pacific, Manila, St. Petersburg, London. This process is a simple one, the disk being merely divided into 360 degrees, the relative positions of the different cities as regards time being determined by their variation in longitude. Inside of the stationary disk is a clock face, which is divided into 24 hours, as shown in the illustration. When the clock was photographed it was 5:40, eastern time, or the time which prevails in New England. In London, as is shown by the illustration, it was nearly 11 at night, and in Manila it lacked but a few minutes of 7 in the morning. In other words, Uncle Sam's Philippine possessions have an advantage of 13 hours in the race of civilization. A new moon appears in 29 days, and the third circle, which revolves inside of the second one, is divided into 29 parts, which are numbered in rotation. The number which is the nearest the prominent dot in the fourth circle indicates the number of days since the new moon. The fourth circle shows with unvarying accuracy the time at which it is full sea at Boston and at New York. Inside of this circle is a circular band showing the signs of the zodiac. The innermost plate represents the earth and shows the positions of the fixed stars in relation to the earth. The pointer indicates the day and month. As previously stated, the whole arrangement is operated by the works of a small clock, which move a system of gears. Each of the circular faces is independent of the others, and the cutting of gears so that the relative speed of the moon and earth about the sun can be transferred to the clock, was a delicate operation. The third circle, in which there is a dot representing the sun, moves the most slowly of all. It requires a full year to make one revolution. The clock illustrates why there is no leap year in 1900. Theoretically the earth revolves about the sun once in 365¼ days and every fourth year the 365-day calendar is straightened out by a leap year having 29 days in February, or 366 days in all. As a matter of fact the earth makes its trip around the sun in 11½ minutes less than 365¼ days, and it is necessary to throw out three days in 400 years to keep the calendar straight. Last year was not a leap year, but the year 2000 will be, while 2100, 2200 and 2300 will not.

The Moon and the Weather

Revival of an Old Superstition

Some persons still believe that the weather is controlled, to an important extent, by the influence of the moon or the planets. Long-range weather predictions, based upon this supposed influence, are published, apparently finding a considerable number of believers, or it would not pay to print them. Another experiment of this sort is now being tried in Russia.

During the past year a journal called Climat has been published every two months at St. Petersburg. It is printed in English, German, French and Russian under the editorship of Mr. Nicolai Demtschinsky. The earlier numbers were devoted to predictions of the weather for a long time in advance by means of certain deductions based upon the alleged influence of the moon. The publication of these articles seems to have revived some interest in the matter. The predictions were made to include places as far away as Aberdeen, Scotland, and Valencia, Spain.

Dr. H. R. Mill, the editor of Symons' Monthly Meteorological Magazine has just subjected the predicted weather conditions for Aberdeen and Valencia to the test of comparison with the weather actually observed at those places. The results are disastrous for the predictions. He found, as was to be expected, that "practically the forecasts as a whole would appear to be valueless" as far at least as those two stations are concerned. A note in the Bulletin of the American Geographical Society says that, as far as the writer has observed, this is the only published comparison of predictions with the facts of observed weather.

It cannot be said that any noteworthy results have yet been attained from the efforts of many persons to trace the supposed influence of the moon upon weather. Dr. Hann, in his great work on "Klimatologie" makes no allusion to the matter. Prof. Davis of Harvard, in his "Elementary Meteorology" says: "The control of the weather by the moon or the planets still occasionally finds enough believers to support the publication of elaborate long-range weather predictions. As these are couched in general language and intended to be applicable to large areas of the country it is not at all difficult to gather a number of verifications for them; but they are no better than the forgotten predictions of astrology of centuries ago."

Physical Growth of the Japanese.

The increase of stature among the Japanese is very perceptible; and the substitution of tepid and even cold water for the hot baths among many of the people is responsible for an increasing floridity of the complexion. Before the advent of military discipline on European models the Japanese were notable as the smallest-necked race in the world, a firm of London collar-makers with a large trade to Japan asserting that 13 inches was the normal circumference of a full-grown Japanese's throat. In a little over 20 years, owing to more athletic development, the average has risen an inch and a half. To athletic development should also be added greater avoirdupois, inasmuch as a more generous diet and abstention from parboiling are bringing their reward in an accumulation of muscle and tissue.

Saved His Ears.

A prisoner was once condemned by the late ameer of Afghanistan to have his ears sliced off quite as a minor punishment. He had a powerful friend, however, who was much attached to him. This friend begged the ameer, in duly submissive tones, to allow him to perform the operation, a favor which was granted. However, the amateur begged the ameer to show him what portion of each ear he wished to be removed. The ameer accordingly touched them lightly. Whereupon the ingenious and courageous person proceeded to quote a passage of the koran which said that anything touched by the representative of the Almighty became sacred. The despot smiled grimly and forgave them both.

Life is Growing Longer.

From statistics and certain changes in our methods of living, it has been proven that life is being steadily lengthened. We are justified in believing this when we consider the great advance made in medicine during the past fifty years, the most noteworthy of them being Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. This ideal medicine cures headache, sour stomach, belching, heartburn and indigestion, also steadies the nerves, induces sound sleep and prevents malaria, fever and ague. Be sure to try it.

Don't Get Rich, Papa.

The children of a certain family, during its prosperity, were left in the nursery in charge of servants. When adversity came, the servants were discharged, and the parents lived with the little ones. One evening, after the father had returned home, after a day of anxiety and business worry, the little girl clambered on his knee, and, twining her arms around his neck, said:

"Papa, don't get rich again. You did not come into the nursery when you were rich, but now we can come around you and get on your knee and kiss you. Don't get rich again, papa."

New Cure for Rheumatism.

Hester, Mo., Dec. 16.—An unusual case which has recently come to light here is exciting the keenest interest among medical men. Mrs. Ellenor Guardhouse suffered for over forty years with Sciatic Rheumatism so severely and so constantly that her case has been regarded as chronic and absolutely incurable. At times the pain was almost unbearable and she could not rest day or night.

Some months ago she was induced to try Dodd's Kidney Pills, a remedy recently introduced in this neighborhood. The immediate results were magical, and she continued till she had taken eight boxes, and now she declares that she has not an ache or pain left. She believes that she is completely and permanently cured, and as she has not used the pills for some months and is to-day in the best of health, the doctors, who were at first skeptical, are amazed.

Naturally people want to be WELL for Christmas, for nothing so promotes happiness and good cheer. Therefore, take Garfield Tea now; its uses are manifold; it cures all derangements of stomach, liver, kidneys or bowels; it cleanses the system and purifies the blood, thus removing the cause of rheumatism, gout and many chronic diseases. It is good for young and old and has been held in the highest repute for many years. Physicians recommend it.

THE NEWS,

By John W. Eastman.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY.

Capt. Mercer has resigned as Indian agent and Maj. Scott has been appointed to fill the vacancy. Capt. Mercer gave excellent satisfaction to the Indians on the Red Lake reservation and they all regret that he has resigned.

It is the duty of every person interested in the future of Thief River Falls to attend the meeting in the city hall tomorrow evening. A public discussion—followed by a little hard work—on matters pertaining to the welfare cannot fail to prove beneficial. Now is the time to get out and all pull together.

The Crookston Times says that the allied forces of Democracy and Populism will probably nominate Col. R. A. Wilkinson, of Crookston, for congressman in the new Ninth district. Col. Wilkinson's connection with the Great Northern railroad would make him especially strong with the pops.

It hardly seems possible that any citizen of Thief River Falls who attends the school election will cast a vote against the bonds and the building of a new eight room brick school house. The room is badly needed and while there are some who think that a "good enough" building could be built for less than $18,000, we believe that a large majority are in favor of seeing a good, substantial building erected.

Advertised Letters.

The following is a list of the letters remaining in the Thief River Falls, Minn. Post Office for the week ending Dec. 14th, 1901, unclaimed:

Anderson, Ole
Brown N. W.
Decker, Mat
Gullickson, Martin
Houre, Louis
Knudson, Olaf B.
Mc Conald, C.
Naten, Tolev E.
Olson, Olaf
Platt, Mrs. Mary
Warner, Rudolph

The above will be kept at this office two weeks, then returned to the Dead Letter Office. When calling for any of them, please say "advertised". Ira C. Richardson, Postmaster.

H. Fant last week sold to the Prichard Stone company the lot and building occupied by Jackson & Bailey's hardware store. The consideration was $2500. Mr. Fant purchased this property together with the building which he occupies as a store three years ago for $2800, and as he has collected good rent during that time, his profit in the transaction is a handsome one. It is understood a brick building will be errected by the Prichard-Stone company.

For a good turnout go to Joe Ryson's livery stable.

COUNTY DITCH

For the Towns of New Solumn and Viking.

There will be a public meeting at the Anton Hanson school house of New Solumn and Viking farmers on Saturday afternoon, Dec. 28, for the purpose of considering the building of a county ditch. The proposed ditch is to be built from section 32, in the town of New Solumn, and to run west to the Snake river in the town of Viking. It would drain a large territory of land that is not now of much value, and it is believed that a large majority attending the meeting will be in favor of having the ditch built.

The latest Emardville ditch petition is being circulated by Harold Buggo. The route of the proposed ditch commences near the south east corner of the northeast quarter of section 25 running thence north between ranges forty one and 42, to the south east corner of the north east quarter of section 1, where it intersects a ravine, running into the Clearwater river in section thirty six of Wyandotte township, making a north and south ditch five miles long. Red Lake Falls Gazette.

To encourage proper cultivation of corn in North Dakota, the D. S. B. Johnson Land company has offered to pay half of a $300 prize to be offered the farmer in Dickey county who raises the best 20 acres of corn in 1902. PRAISE EDDY

The Commercial Club Passes a Resolution.

At a meeting of the Commercial Club held last Friday evening the following resolutions were adapted:

Whereas: the Hon. Frank M. Eddy has been untiring in his efforts to secure the opening of the Western portion of the Red Lake Indian Reservation to settlement and cultivation and whereas: although this country is no longer in the district represented in congress by Mr. Eddy, he has not abated his interest in this matter nor ceased his endeavor on behalf of his former constituency. Therefore be it unanimously Resolved: by the commercial Club of Thief River Falls that we are deeply grateful to Mr. Eddy for his disinterested effects to further the welfare of a constituency to which he is no longer bound by political ties and be it further Resolved: That the sincere thanks of this club are hereby extended to Mr. Eddy to whom we pledge our active support in the furtherance of this just and beneficial legislation.

A traveling man up at Larimore cautioned the baggage smashers to unload his trunk carefully as it contained dynamite. They laughed him to scorn for trying to josh them, and let the trunk drop extra hard on the platform. As they gathered themselves up over on the sidetrack and picked the trunk slivers out of their anatomy the aforesaid smashers were forced to believe the man knew what he was talking about. The trunk was loaded with $100 worth of quick-tempered nitroglycerin and the railroad claim agent has a new problem on his hands.

GENEROUS ACT

Seven Poor Families Receive Substantial Gifts.

A gentleman who is always thinking of the welfare of others went around among his friends Tuesday and raised enough money to purchase a large amount of groceries for seven poor families in this city. Each of the seven families received the following list of goods: Two 100 pound sacks of flour, 50 pounds of cream of wheat $1 worth of sugar, $1 worth of coffee, 50 cents worth of tea, and three chickens.

It is needless to say that seven families spent a very happy Christmas as a result.

That great railroad man without doubt the greatest in the country today —James J. Hill, happened to be in one of the halls of the mammoth Great Northern building in St. Paul a week or two ago and espied a pale-faced youngman puffing coffin nail for he was worth, the smoke coming out of his nose and mouth and I dont know but his eyes too. A frown appeared on Mr. Hill's face and addressing the young man sternly, asked in what department he was employed. Being told, he called another employer to tell the head that he wanted to see him. The head appeared and Mr. Hill said; "See that young man there; Caught him smoking a cigarette in this building. Dispense with his services at once." There's a moral here that best be heeded by the young men of today. Here is a man who has hundreds under him and who will not tolerate a cigarette smoker for a moment, and there are many more just like him. The boy who smokes the little sticks is not wanted and the sooner he learns the better it will be for his health and business prospects.—Anoka Union.

Joen Gilstad hit Bemidji from the Blackduck country and reported that a fellow met a huge buck deer in the big railroad cut this side of Blackduck and killed him with a single shot from a 22 calibre revolver.

Minister Wu makes the point against the Chinese exclusion act that it tends to deprive the United States of the commercial benefit of more extended trade with the Chinese empire. This may be, but the American people, whenever they have had a chance to vote on the subject, have shown that they would rather let trade with China go to the dogs than to welcome Wu's countrymen to unrestricted domicile in this land of the free and home of the brave. Our captains of industry and commerce argue that we shall be able to do a very respectable business with China in any event, by reason of our great productive power, if ocean transportation from our Pacific coast can be satisfactorily arranged.—Minneapolis Tribune.

GOOD MEETING

Held by the Commercial Club Last Friday.

A large number of business men were present at the city hall last Friday evening to attend a meeting of the Commercial Club. Various subjects concerning the future welfare of the city were discussed and it was decided to hold a meeting on the first Friday of each month hereafter. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year:

President—C. L. Dobner.
Sec.—W. C. Smiley.
Treas.—Hans Langseth.

CHRISTMAS

As It Was Observed in Thief River Falls.

Christmas day was observed in a very quiet way in Thief River Falls. Few people were upon the streets, performing to remain at home with their families. The day was a warm one,—more like a spring day than one of midwinter.

Religious services were held in all the churches and a large number attended. The churches all had their Christmas trees on Chirtmas eve, at which time attractive programs were rendered.

New Year 1902

1902
FATHER TIME SETS OUT A NEW TREE

OLD AND NEW.

I cannot joy with those who hail
The new-born year;
I rather grieve with those who give
The dead Old Year
A tender tear.

The New—what know I of the New?
I know the Old!
God's benison upon his corse,
On which the mold
Lies stiff and cold.

Here in the shadow let me stand
And count them o'er,
The blessings that he brought to me,
A precious store—
I asked no more.

He brought me health—a priceless boon
To me and mine;
He brought me plenty for my needs,
And crowned my shrine
With love divine.

Ah! when I think—suffused with tears
I feel my eyes—
Of all the dear delights he brought;
Yet stark he lies
'Neath Winter skies.

Therefore I cannot hail with joy
The new-born year;
I rather grieve, with those who give
The dead Old year
A tender tear.

After Ten Years

The Story of Two New Year's Eves

WALTER CARSON leaned back in the easy chair, drawn up before his sitting room fire at his Duke street chambers in London. The clock had struck 10, and the sonorous boom from Big Ben came floating over the Green park as a sort of benediction on the rapidly dying year. The roar of the great city without was not lacking in its element of melody, and the noise of merry revelers in Piccadilly completed a strange yet fascinating tout ensemble. / Passing down the street came three young men singing that old Southern song, "I'se gwine back to Dixey." The words and the melody startled Carson from the reverie into which he had fallen. Sitting upright in his chair, he said, aloud:

"What memories that song recalls! How my loneliness grows upon me! What a fool I was ever to have indulged in the thing called love! But there, I've tasted the poison and must abide by the result. What's that result? Pleasing? Why cannot I be of the gay throng outside? Here in this mighty crowded city I am as lonely as a man lost in a desert." He rose and, going to the other side of the room, opened a cabinet and took from it a bundle of letters, some dozen. They were faded and bore traces of much handling. After reading, he replaced them, and, walking to the photograph of a child on the wall, indulged in soliloquy.

"I know you not, my sweet child, but your mother was always, and always must be everything to me. How hard and cruel seems the world! Your mother and I parted ten long years ago this night, to meet again in two years time! What happened to prevent us? I wrote many times, but no reply ever reached me. Three years after we separated a letter came from her, and in it I read: 'Now that I am married, perhaps you will write.' Life seemed a blank, and I came to London, a wayfarer, caring not what became of me. I turned to literature, and have been what people call successful. But what is success without the power to experience that which makes it other than a metallic gratification? Eighteen months went by before I next heard from your mother, and then your photo only reached me, since when all has been silence! Your mother married a good man, and I pray for her and for you, too, baby, that you may grow up in her footsteps!"

The circumstances under which his letters to the girl went astray were to him mysterious, but, as a matter of fact, easily explained. The girl was the daughter of a country lawyer, and he had made her acquaintance when she was staying in a boarding house in Bloomsbury, in which he was also a lodger. Her reason for being in town was that she might improve a somewhat neglected education, and she was taking singing lessons at a school of music in the neighborhood. An aunt took away this unwanted daughter from among the large family at home, to be a companion across the Atlantic, and, suspecting her of flightiness, opened her letters in the capacity of guardian. The first of Carson's epistles—he was a cautious man and did not commit himself to paper until he could not resist doing so—arrived when the aunt believed she was arranging a highly desirable engagement for her niece, and on the principle of doing wrong that good may come, she kept back the notes of this obviously poor suitor.

Carson often felt desolate, but never so utterly as then, and as he paced the floor the laughter of the happy crowd seemed to mock him. He rang the bell and ordered some tea. The demure little maid looked at him, and, going down stairs, said:

"Poor Mr. Carson, he looks so strange and miserable!"

Returning, she found him sitting in his chair gazing with half-closed eyes into the fire. Placing the tea on a small wicker table by his side, she attracted his attention by the question, "Anything else, sir?"

"No," was the reply; "but, see, this is New Year's Eve. You've been a good servant to me, at least. Buy yourself something," handing her a sovereign.

The amount of the gift bereft the girl of the power of speech, and with a curtesy, eloquent in itself of gratitude, she left.

Carson, sipping his tea, again soliloquized. "It's now within an hour and a quarter of the New Year. What will that year bring into my life? It cannot bring the light of love and companionship. The same round of weeks and months, and so it will be to the end. Ten years ago, in Old Kentucky, we said 'Good-by.' It was a 'good-by' forever."

Apostrophizing the absent woman, he continued: "Leila, Leila, to my grave I take with me the love I bear you. Why did we live to be parted so ruthlessly? What strange fate has so guided our destinies?"

He turned to the story of Evangeline and read of the sufferings of that heroic character. The reading soothed him and he fell asleep.

The clocks were striking the twelfth stroke of midnight when he awoke. He barely opened his eyes, then closed them again, and listened to the joyous salutations of people meeting in the streets. He was not selfish, neither was he bad natured. No man who every truly loved can be altogether either. As he listened he said:

"I wish for all a bright New Year, and Leila, my absent Leila, whom I shall never see again, may your life know no sorrow, may yours never be the aching heart, and may you be blessed in your children growing up around you. My Leila——"

He did not finish the sentence, but the tears came trickling down his cheeks as he realized his barren life. Then he became conscious that some one had come into the room and been a witness of his weakness and his secret—secret because society said Walter Carson carried his heart on his sleeve and was incapable of deep affection. So sitting up and turning round he was startled to see seated on a chair a tall lady, clad in deep mourning and veiled so heavily that he was unable to distinguish her face.

"Madam," he inquired, too taken aback even to get up, "I should like to know why I am thus honored?"

"I came in with the New Year. Not an omen of ill-luck, I hope," replied a musical voice; "but I first want to know if Walter Carson is not an assumed name?"

"Why do you ask such a question?"

"For the best of good reasons, and as you will not tell me, perhaps you will allow me to say that I think your real name is Herbert Wilton," proceeded the mysterious stranger.

"I KNOW YOU NOT, SWEET CHILD."

Carson was utterly unprepared for this, and his surprise was painfully manifest. Appearing not to notice it, the lady went on:

"You are unhappy, I know, Mr. Wilton. I shall not call you Mr. Carson. I am certain of it, because I was watching you for ten minutes before you opened your eyes. Can I be of any help to you?"

"I don't understand you, madam," answered Carson. "I have no trouble, at least none that you could assist me in."

"Has it any connection with an old love affair?" very slowly asked the veiled visitor.

"I must decline to discuss my private matters with an utter stranger," replied Carson, jumping up.

"Am I an utter stranger, Herbert?" responded the stranger, also rising, and as she did so throwing back her veil.

"Leila!" gasped Carson, looking incredulously into her face.

"Yes, Leila," was the answer whispered, while her arms stole round his neck, "come back to you with the New Year, never to leave your side until it so pleases God."

Then they sat down and she told him how, three years before, after being left a widow, she determined to find out what had become of the sweetheart of her younger days. How, by a chapter of happy accidents, she learned that he was in London. How, on knowing this, she hurried over land and sea, and just at the birth of the New Year entered his room. She saw the tears fall from his eyes, heard her name mentioned, and his blessing go out to her. All doubts were then at an end.

"My children will be here by the next boat, and you must be to them a father. Now I must go, as I'm weary with the excitement of the day."

Carson drove her to her hotel, and to him the New Year bells never seemed to have rung such merry peals. They rang into his life a New Year in every sense. A few days later there was a quiet marriage, and on the following New Year's Eve, as Carson and his wife listened to the hour of midnight strike, they thought, with hearts full of love and gratitude, of the joyous meeting twelve months before.

"I CAME IN WITH THE NEW YEAR."

Hopes of the Future.

With the coming of the New Year all our hopes of future good for ourselves and for humanity at large receive a new impulse and an accession of power. If we are alive to the wide extension of knowledge, the conquest of the material world, the imminence of new and important discoveries and changes which shall make the possibilities of life more interesting and beautiful, we cannot but rejoice that we are born into this wonderful epoch. Tennyson's poem, written in the flush of young manhood, voiced the scientific fact in eloquence that can never be forgotten, but the thoughts of men are widened by the process of the suns. It is truly to the thoughts of men that we owe all the triumphs of civilization, the triumphs of religion, art, industry and science, and in the last resort all that is and all that we hope for resides in the thoughts of men and in the feelings and emotions which give birth to these thoughts, and between which there is such a constant interaction.

Balancing Our Books.

When the year is ended and the final summing up of accounts is finished, it is comforting to look back and to be able to say, in all sincerity, that we have done the best we could for ourselves and for those about us. It is more than comforting to see that we have gained something, that our efforts have been crowned with success, and that we are by this advancement enabled to score a victory, even though it may be trifling, over adverse circumstances. It encourages us to redouble our efforts to make a better showing for the years to come, to so order our affairs that this season's gain will be but the beginning of better things, and that the great and grand fabric of our future may rise, ever increasing, ever more and more beautiful, and end in a noble, manly, womanly, Christian, symmetrical character that will make its possessor known and honored of all men.

To the Young.

While the opening of the New Year is a significant season for persons of all ages, it is especially so to the young and those in early maturity. There is so much ahead of the youngsters; so much for them to look frward to, to hope for, achieve; so much that will help them to make their lives worth living, and to make the world the better for their having lived in it.

Welcome the new year. Welcome its work, its cares, its responsibilities, its trials, crosses, losses, sorrows and bereavements. Welcome its work, because it is only by work that we achieve successes and make ourselves strong for the toils and tasks that are to come. Welcome its cares, for they are the world's educators, developers and teachers, and they lead us into those ways of prudence, thoughtfulness and moderation which are the forerunners of prosperity and plenty.

ABOUT TOYS.

New Use for Discarded Wooden Blocks of London Pavements.

An ingenious use has been found for the discarded wood blocks from London street pavements. The woods employed for this purpose are the karri and jarrah woods of Australia, which, owing to their density of grain and extreme hardness, are peculiarly adapted for paving purposes. The blocks are in reality only surface damaged and the inside is as hard and as durable as it was when first laid down. Several top manufacturers now purchase the blocks for the purpose of making toys out of them. The outside is trimmed off and the remaining portion converted into small toys. Owing to the fact that the raw material is purchased so cheap the home manufacturers are in a position to undersell foreign competitors. Hitherto Germany has enjoyed a monopoly in the English toy market. But even cheap labor cannot place the toys upon the market at the same price at which the English manufacturer is now selling his products. M. Lepine, the energetic prefect of police of Paris, has hit upon a plan by which he hopes to stimulate French toymakers and keep out the wagon loads of German toys which find their way to the boulevards during festive seasons. For this purpose he has issued a circular inviting a public exhibition of toys, which can be sold for sums varying from a sou (two cents) to three francs (60 cents). No toy already known will be admitted to the competition. The competitors are to be of French nationality, and the exhibition will last from Nov. 24 to Dec. 8, when a distribution of prizes will take place. A treat was in store for the children of the Duke and Duchess of Cornwall and York when their parents brought home the Canadian toys that they have had presented to them. Among them was the model of the city of Toronto, complete in every detail, for which the school girls of that place subscribed. This wonderful toy is made in sections, duly numbered, and can be put together quite easily.—Chicago News.

CLOTHES PROVE THE RUIN.

Tribe of Indians Is Dying Off from the Effects of Wearing Coats.

The white man's glory—his clothes—is likely to prove the bane of the red man of the west. At least one tribe of Indians is succumbing to the enervating influence of the tailor-made coat. The Topowaks, of whom a few lonely individuals still survive, were an agricultural race living happily on the bottom lands of the Colorado river near the gulf of California. They peacefully tilled the soil and went about as their ancestors had done for hundreds of years, enjoying life in their untutored fashion. But one day sudden envy of the white man's wardrobe implanted itself in their breasts. Then after each harvest the head of the family put seventy-five or a hundred pounds of corn into small sacks and made the seventy-five miles' journey to Yuma. Here the corn was sold to the traders for about $1.50, which is fully 50 cents under the market value, and he invariably spent all of the proceeds in shirts and overalls for himself and calico for his wives. It was not alone the unaccustomed physical oppression following the wearing of these unusual garments that weakened the savages, but they even began to deny themselves proper food in saving money to make additions to their collection of "store clothes." To be dressed like the neighboring white man was a distinction among the braves that cost them dear. Professor W. J. McGee of the bureau of ethnology said of this strange case: "The fact is, they are dying from civilization, or it would be more proper to say, from the fact that their civilization has not kept pace with their ambition. They are an interesting people from the fact that they are the lowest, most primitive and thoroughly degraded of all the Indian tribes in the southwest."—Chicago Chronicle.

Largest Gun in the World.

The biggest gun in the world is now practically completed and awaiting its carriage in the shops of the army gun factory at Watervliet, N. Y. It was planned ten years ago and has been over five years in process of construction. It is the most powerful engine of destruction known. When compared to it the largest gun built in the civil war times looks like a toy cannon. This new weapon is known as a 16-inch breech-loading rifle and it is intended for harbor defense. Forty of these monsters were recommended by the Endicott board for the harbors of New York, Boston, San Francisco and Hampton Roads. New York was to have 18, Boston 8, San Francisco 10 and Hampton Roads 4. According to present intentions this number will be somewhat reduced.

Novel Postal Cards.

Postal cards are coming to be considered good form. Whereas they were formerly admissible only as a means for dispatching an order to a tradesman, they may now be used for the transmission of personal messages. The stipulation, however, is that they must bear a reproduction of one's house. This promises to make the fashion an exclusive one. Anybody can consult a heraldic expert and have his family insignia discovered and transferred to his notepaper. But not everybody lives in a mansion that would form a desirable decoration for a postal card. In any case, the suburban resident will, it is plain, have the advantage. Postal authorities now allow cards of very fair proportions to pass as postcards.

A Problem in Fur.

BY BLANCHE ELIZABETH WADE.

(Copyright, 1901, by Daily Story Pub. Co.)

Gordon hated cats. To him the name cat meant not a round, soft, silky ball, with a contented purr somewhere inside, but a gaunt, prowling creature generally one-eyed and scalloped-eared, and more often with three sound legs, than with four; a monster haunting backyard fences; a freak giving vent to unearthly shrieks so badly aimed at the unoffending moon that instead they pierce the innermost depths of poor sensitive mortal souls and stir up emotions better not described.

Therefore, Gordon did not jump for joy after he had read the following letter from a wealthy aunt:

"My Dear Nephew:—While the description you gave of your new studio charmed me, I observed that you lack one thing, and that an important one." ("Money! Always did, my dear aunt.") "That to which I refer, is indispensable to every pretentious studio." ("And to every unpretentious purse, aunt.") "No studio, my dear nephew, should be without a——" and here, Gordon was seized with one of the afore-mentioned better-not-described emotions, for the word he read was cat! "A cat," went on the letter, "is as necessary to an artist's success as is his brush; indeed, I may say, the cat adds a tone," ("Better say a fiendish noise, aunt,"), "which is not to be obtained by mere pictures and furnishings. Now, I do not mean that I think you ought to take in an ordinary animal;—better none at all, than any common type. Knowing you are not so placed as to be able to make for yourself a good selection, I have done it for you, and am now sending you a most beautiful creature—a full-blooded Angora, registered as John Alden, and aged three months. He is valued at fifteen dollars, but as he grows older will increase in worth. Let me know if he arrives safely, and what you think of him; also, do not fail to send me occasional reports of him."

Then followed several pages of directions for the care of Angora cats, proper foods, etc., and Gordon dropped the letter with a disheartened sigh.

The next day John Alden arrived. At sight of him Gordon did not shudder as he had fully intended to do. Instead he timidly stroked the long, yellow fur and laughed when this act started a spinning-wheel in John Alden's interior. Then and there, of his own accord, with no thought of doing so for the sake of his own interests in pleasing a rich relative, Ernest Gordon mentally swore to do the right thing by his new possession, and when purrs gave place to hungry mews, hastened to his small inner room, procured a saucepan, lighted his oil-stove, and heated milk according to his aunt's advice.

John Alden was duly introduced to the elevator boy and to the night watchman, each of whom gladly took the oath of allegiance to his furry highness. Thus was his installation accomplished, his reign begun.

"Your generous gift, came safely," wrote Gordon to his aunt. "I like him immensely and appreciate your kind interest in making the success of my new studio complete. I have no doubt my Angora friend and I will get on famously together."

His lordship was not long in establishing himself as master of the studio. Disdaining the comfortable basket Gordon had arranged for him, he carefully selected the most expensive fabrics whereon to compose his dainty limbs; scorning the spool and string provided for his amusement, he tore up and down velvet curtains and portieres. He whisked as lightly as a feather, back and forth, in and out, among costly vases and marbles, and though Gordon sometimes drew long breaths, he said nothing.

A week passed, during which John Alden met many enthusiastic admirers, chief among whom was Miss Isabel Graham, who was sitting for her portrait.

"A cat!"

"How thoughtful of your aunt!" the young lady exclaimed at first sight of the cat. "Mr. Gordon, you must be proud to own that dear creature," and Gordon was not wicked enough to ask which.

Before the second week was over John Allen signified his determination to see something of out-door life, and fought so frantically at the window-screens that Gordon took him to the boarding-place, where there was a strip of yard. This was too narrow to suit His Majesty for more than a day, and as the landlady could not watch him all of the time, he stole out and sought the acquaintance of the alley cats. Gordon gazed sadly at the dirty, tangled fur, as Puss strolled in wearily one evening. Once more His Highness took up his abode at the studio.

"He ought to be brushed," said Miss Graham on the following morning, as she tried to separate the snarled locks.

Gordon bought a soft brush and worked two hours at the fur. While thus engaged he made a startling discovery.

The next day while showing Miss Graham some Puritan studies before beginning work on the portrait, he exclaimed in a tragic tone:

"O, Miss Graham, did you know—er—that—that John Alden had fleas?"

"Mr. Gordon!" cried she in a shocked voice. "Did you intend that as a joke! O," suddenly remembering. "Of course. I had forgotten. You mean the cat!"

"Most certainly," returned Gordon, emphatically.

"Well, in that case, I can tell you what to do. Wash him with tar soap or with dog soap and comb them out with a fine comb."

"How thoughtful of your aunt."

Gordon purchased three combs before he found one that would not break. He bought three different kinds of soap, and returning to John Alden he combed, he bathed, he rubbed and then combed again. At the end of the tussle John Alden lay snugly sleeping under a warm drapery high on a bookcase and Gordon dressed his own torn and bleeding hands and captured two live fleas on his coatsleeve. He has since come to believe that those insects flourish on strong soapsuds, for after this performance John Alden did little but scratch and dig at his poor, tormented skin. He lost his appetite and grew thin. Miss Graham advised more combing and warm catnip tea. Gordon bought catnip at the druggist's. He bought also a walnut wash recommended by the chemist and a bottle of cat tonic. Still the fleas increased and John Alden diminished.

Gordon wrote to his aunt. "Take him to a veterinary surgeon," advised she, "for the fleas will kill the cat if not seen to at once."

"What a pity!" said Miss Graham, when she heard this. "Now, I think that entirely unnecessary. Poor Pussy would die there. If you will trust him to me I will take him home and my mother will doctor him up for you. We live out of town in the summer, you know, and there is lots of delicious grass for him to roam over and no cats in the neighborhood. We will watch him closely and he won't run away. Besides, there are oceans of fresh catnip growing about the place, and home dried catnip is different from that compressed stuff you bought. Then, too—you—you might come often, you know, to—to—see how he was getting on."

John Alden went to the country. A month later a letter went to the aunt.

"You will be glad," wrote Gordon, "to hear that John Alden is entirely rid of fleas, eats like a bear, and is more beautiful than ever. You will be surprised to hear that I have found that a cat does not add the finishing grace to a studio. There is something else. That to which I refer is a wife who knows how to take care of the cat and of the artist. As you are not so placed as to make this selection for me, I have done so myself—or rather—John Alden has at last spoken for me as well as for himself to the fair Priscilla. Her name is Isabel Graham."

"Your affectionate nephew,

"John Doe" in England.

Forty-nine years ago died two near relatives—in the legal profession—of the celebrated "Mrs. Harris"—John Doe and Richard Roe. For centuries their connection with landed property had been extensive and peculiar. If Smith wished to eject Jones, Smith became John Doe, the plaintiff, and Jones was compelled to join in the legal comedy by becoming Richard Roe, the defendant. Those names were also inserted in criminal proceedings as pledges to prosecute. A curious incident happened at the trial, in 1724, of Louis Houssart for the murder of his wife. Among other pleas in bar to and abatement of the proceedings, he pleaded "that there were no such persons as John Doe and Richard Roe." To this it was replied that there were two such persons in Middlesex, one a weaver, the other a soldier, and this fact was sworn to. This legal fiction was abolished on October 24, 1852.—London Chronicle.

Rickerby's Folly

By TOM GALLON

CHAPTER VII.—(Continued.)

"A pretty plot, upon my word," was Leathwood's comment, as he nodded to Mr. Reeks over his folded arms. "So you see, knowing only part of the story, you thought you would trade on your knowledge of the man; perhaps you thought you'd frighten something out of me—eh? Now—do I look like a man to be frightened easily?"

"No: I should say not," said Mr. Reeks, meekly.

"And I should say not," retorted the other. "Now, I don't mind telling you that, in spite of this lamentable breakdown on your part, and in spite of my being able to see what a poor creature you are, I think there is money in this for you after all—perhaps more than there would have been if you had merely succeeded in securing the reward. Only, I warn you: if you are of use to me, I'll serve you well. But I must have the whole truth out of you."

Mr. Reeks began to protest, almost with violence, how very sincere he was by nature, and how greatly he regretted that he should ever have lapsed, even for a moment, from the strict path of rectitude; but Nugent Leathwood cut him short.

"There—enough of that. In the first place I want to know under exactly what circumstances this lodger of yours came to you: who saw him—who knew him—whom he met. Now, then, begin at the beginning."

"He came to me first on the recommendation of his servant, who knew me slightly—What's the matter?"

Nugent Leathwood had turned abruptly, and was staring at the little man with wide eyes. "His what?"

"His servant," repeated Mr. Reeks. "They came together, and took the rooms together; on the night that you tell me he was killed in the street, Mr. Rickerby went out with his servant—and neither of them ever came back again."

"Good heavens!" The man who had been sitting on the table got down and stood perfectly still in the middle of the floor for a few moments, staring before him and muttering to himself. "I never thought of that; I never dreamed that Gilbert Rickerby, coming here in secret, landing in England almost unknown to anyone, should have anyone with him! What the dickens does it mean? Gilbert Rickerby dead; Gilbert Rickerby advertised for, far and wide; yet this confidential servant, who actually went out with him, on the night he came here, says nothing, does nothing, makes no stir in any way. What have I done? This man, whose existence I never suspected—this servant, may be watching and waiting; laying traps for me." He turned swiftly to Reeks, who was staring in a bewildered fashion at him. "Youw say you have seen nothing of the servant since? Be careful what you say!"

"From the moment they left the house together, on that night when they were coming to you—"

"How do you know they were coming to me?" asked the other, quickly.

Mr. Reeks discovered that it wanted more courage than he was at that moment possessed of. But, after a sleepless night, and the discovery that the morning brought nothing better than two irate tradesmen, who told him pretty roundly what they thought of him, he determined, in desperation, to see what could be done; in the event of failure to personate Gilbert Rickerby he felt that there might be some prospect of trading upon his knowledge of the diary and the papers, and screwing some money out of someone. Waiting until nightfall, he made himself as respectable as a limited wardrobe would permit and set off for St. John's Wood.

Now, there are many ways of getting from Camden Town to St. John's Wood. If one has leisure, and the weather be fine, it is possible to walk, and to note, as one walks, of the change of each neighborhood as it merges itself into the next; or there are omnibuses which strike a path into the heart of the mysterious region, and seem to lose themselves and their passengers in it. Or there are cabs, which may be had for the hailing at street corners, and which will deliver one, as it were, within an inch of the spot one desires to reach. Mr. Reeks, knowing well the depth of his pocket, and having private reasons of his own, decided to walk.

But, as has been said, Mr. Reeks was not a courageous being; and, moreover, he had before him a difficult task. Therefore, with a laudable desire to keep up the small measure of courage he possessed, he stepped into the first public house he saw and partook of certain strong liquors. Indeed, after that he may be said to have punctuated his erratic path with such pauses; so that, by the time he had arrived at the gate of Rickerby's Folly, he was prepared to swear positively, not only that he was the real Gilbert Rickerby, but that he was anyone else who might be suggested to him at the moment.

Cornelius admitted him; Cornelius saw him go swaying unsteadily up the garden towards the house; Cornelius ushered him into the room wherein Nugent Leathwood sat, with the simple announcement that here was a gentleman to see him.

Leathwood, starting up from his chair, confronted this strange-looking little creature, with a hat cocked jauntily over one watery eye, and demanded to know what he wanted.

"One 'unnerd poundg 'ward!" exclaimed the apparition, sleepily. "I'm Mr. Gilbert Rickerby!"

CHAPTER VII.

A Dead Man's Money.

However startling it may have been to Nugent Leathwood to have this man standing before him and proclaiming himself by that name, which already seemed to haunt him night and day, he soon recovered from the shock; saw that whatever this man was or whatever he might know, he was, at the best, a weak little creature, half-stupefied with drink and scarcely knowing at the moment who he was or what he said. However, precautions had to be taken; Leathwood came slowly toward the swaying figure, and stood before it, with his hands thrust in his pockets, and stared at him leisurely.

"So you are Gilbert Rickerby, are you?" he asked, quietly. "Welcome, Mr. Gilbert Rickerby—back from the grave! Do you understand me?—back from the grave, I say!"

"What—what d'you mean?" stammerered Mr. Reeks, partly-sobered by the manner of the other and by the words.

"I mean that Gilbert Rickerby is dead—died nearly a week ago; that he lies in his grave and is almost forgotten by this time. Where have you been wandering, you madman, not to know that?"

Mr. Reeks opened his mouth as if to say something, shut it again hurriedly, and turned and made for the door. But, before he reached it, however, the hand of Nugent Leathwood fell upon his shoulder and twisted him round, and the eyes of Nugent Leathwood were looking into his quailing ones.

"Don't run away," said the quiet voice. "There is some game on here which I do not understand. Come, now, who put you on to this game, and who are you, really? You are not Gilbert Rickerby; of that I am certain. But you know something about him. Why, don't you know that Gilbert Rickerby was a young man of twenty-six?"

Mr. Reeks nodded feebly. "About that, I should think," he said.

"Oh! so you know him, do you? This grows interesting. Come, sit down, my friend, and let us hear what you have to say for yourself." He pushed the reluctant Mr. Reeks into a chair, and seated himself on the edge of the table close beside him. "Now, let me hear what you have to say about this Gilbert Rickerby."

George Reeks saw, only too plainly, that he was in a remarkably tight place; even in his muddled state, at the moment he was quite capable of recognizing that fact. Moreover, this calm man, with the quiet voice and the dark hair, had about him a certain sense of power that was not to be denied. Therefore, with some attempt to treat the matter as a mere joke, and with many labored apologies for the mistake he had made, the little man made a full confession—pointing out how he had been tempted by some faint hope of the reward which was offered. Nugent Leathwood listened with the closest attention—asking a question now and then, and occasionally breaking in with a short, dry laugh. At the end of the recital the little man sat cowering in his chair, fully sobered, and wondering, dimly, what was going to happen.

"He left it in writing; I have found papers in which he sets out clearly what he is going to do—mentions a girl, among other things."

"A girl? Yes, I suppose he would mention the girl," said Leathwood, thoughtfully. "Look here; I must have those papers; I must know exactly what he has written. Where are they now?"

"At my house," replied Reeks.

"Has anyone seen them, other than yourself?"

"Only Mrs. Reeks—my wife."

"Reeks!" He seemed to ponder over the name for a moment, as though it woke some train of thought in his mind. "Well—is your wife safe? I mean," he corrected himself, hurriedly, "is she likely to talk about matters which do not concern herself?—Does she understand the necessity for being silent sometimes, if she is well paid for being silent?"

Mr. Reeks nodded, solemnly. "It would be difficult to find anyone who could bottle herself up more completely than Mrs. Reeks, when necessary," he said, proudly.

"Good. By the way, your name seems familiar to me somehow. What is it, again?"

"Reeks—George Reeks," replied the little man, glad to be able to proclaim himself under his true colors.

"George Reeks!" Nugent Leathwood turned the name over and over in his mind for a moment, then, suddenly, started and clapped a hand to his head. "By Jove! the man who went with me to the funeral; the man who picked up—" He did not finish the sentence, but, after a moment's further thought, he sprang fiercely upon the astonished Mr. Reeks and gripped him by the collar.

"You fiend!" he breathed. "What trick are you playing upon me? You come here, proclaiming that you are Gilbert Rickerby; you tell me a yarn about a servant of the dead man whom no one has seen since his master's death; now you say that your name is the same as that of a stranger I met at the hospital, and who followed—followed Gilbert Rickerby to the grave. In Heaven's name, who are you—and what do you know?"

"I—I assure you," stuttered Mr. Reeks, in an agony of fear, "that I was—was—bap—tized George—surname Reeks—at—the P—p—parish C—c—church—"

"There, that'll do," cried Leathwood, fiercely, shaking him into silence. "I believe you're too great a fool to know how to play such a trick. But there's something I don't understand; and I mean to get at the bottom of it. Now, tell me: what sort of man was this servant?—At all costs, he must be found. What manner of man was he?"

"Well," began Mr. Reeks, thoughtfully studying the other; "I should say he was a man of about your height—dark, quick manner with him, clean-shaven."

Now, in the dreadful hurry of that one tragic struggle, on the night when the unfortunate servant met his death at the hands of Leathwood, the latter had got but a dim idea of what his victim was like. True, he still had before him, and would have until his death, the picture of the surprised, pleading, distorted face; but it had been so horrible that, after the first moment, he had averted his own from it; and, in removing the body, had been careful to cover that ugly thing. So that it is not surprising that he should not have recognized the careless description given of the man by Reeks—a description which might, moreover, apply equally well to a hundred men one meets on the street every day. He shook his head in perplexity.

"No, that's not the man at all. But I think I see daylight on this matter, and it means black midnight to me, if I'm not careful," he added, under his breath. "All that I know is that a man, giving your name, picked up—well, picked up Gilbert Rickerby in the street, and took him to the hospital; followed him to the grave with me. I asked his name, and he said 'George Reeks.' A tall, fair man, with a tanned skin, as though he'd been abroad a lot—fair mustache—and a deep scar right across his cheek bone; not a disfiguring scar, but enough to be noticeable."

While he spoke Mr. George Reeks had been drawing himself more and more upright; had the other man looked at him, he would have observed that the little man was clutching each side of the seat of his chair with his hands, while his eyes seemed almost to be starting out of his head. Fortunately for him, however, Nugent Leathwood did not look around; still keeping his eyes on the floor, he asked, quickly:

"Do you know any such man—as that?"

Properly, Mr. George Reeks ought at once to have said "Yes." But he saw himself in serious difficulties if he did. He had heard already that Gilbert Rickerby was dead; that this man now talking to him had seen him die, and had followed him to the grave. Yet he knew, with absolute certainty, that the description given of the man who had declared he was George Reeks was a very accurate description of Gilbert Rickerby. And that man had followed some other Gilbert Rickerby to the grave! Poor George Reeks felt his brain reeling; for the moment he was not at all certain who he was or where he was or what was happening; or how many Gilbert Rickerby's there were, and how many of them were alive and how many dead. He decided to get out of the tangle as easily as possible.

"No—not—not exactly," he replied. "But it's certainly not the servant—not a bit like him."

"Well, it's a puzzle, that's all it is," said the other. After a few moments' thought, he turned abruptly to Reeks, and spoke with a frankness he could assume easily enough when he liked: "Forgive me," he said—"I forgot myself just now; but I shall hope to make amends in the future. As a matter of fact, I am placed in a great difficulty—and I think that you are the man to help me. Now, I would not ask anyone to help me without an adequate payment; you shall not suffer on that account."

"You are very good—" began Mr. Reeks, mildly.

"You have certain papers belonging to the late Gilbert Rickerby. As his cousin, and the next-of-kin as regards the estates, I could claim these papers; but that would be a hard and ungentlemanly thing to do—and I am dealing with a gentleman." He bowed, with a flourish of the arm, towards Reeks.

"Thank you; you are extremely good," said Mr. Reeks, again.

"Not at all. In a word, I desire to behave handsomely. I know that you will not talk about matters which do not, after all, concern you; and I am, therefore, the more disposed to deal generously with you. I will buy those papers from you; more than that, I will pay for them with a sum of money which was found at the hospital on the person of the unfortunate Gilbert Rickerby—a sum of £500."

Now, this was, of course, absolutely nutrue; the sum of money in question had been found in notes on the person of poor James Holden, whom he had murdered.

"Really, this is very generous!" gasped George Reeks.

"Not at all. I desire merely to do what is right; I pay for certain papers belonging to a dead man, with money left behind in my hands by that dead man; that is all." He might have added that he had the superstitious fear of the murderer, of handling money taken from the dead; more than a superstitious fear—a fear that it might lead, in some way, to his undoing.

"Five hundred pounds! You shall have every paper he left—every mortal thing that was his," ejaculated Mr. Reeks. "And as for silence—never a word, I swear to you. Five hundred pounds!"

"Well, that's settled," said Leathwood, in a cheerful tone. "Now, bargain for bargain; when the papers are placed in my hands you shall have the money. Will that do?"

"Nothing could be more fair," cried Mr. Reeks. Indeed, his one desire, at that time, was to get rid of the whole bewildering business, quite apart from the fact of making anything out of it.

"Very good. For the present, we will say good-bye. Just let me have your address; that is it—write it down here." He motioned towards the writing materials, which stood on the table. Then, as Mr. Reeks was writing, he bent down, to say, in a lower tone: "You spoke about a girl, who was mentioned by the late Gilbert Rickerby in certain papers. Let me assure you that the girl is well—that she is here—and that she is under careful guardianship."

"I'm glad to know that," replied George Reeks, carefully blotting the slip of paper and handing it to Leathwood. "That's the address. Shall I bring up the papers to-morrow?"

"If you will be so good," replied Nugent, sweetly. "Good-night; I must leave you to find your own way to the gate; I'll take you to the door and show you where it is."

So Mr. George Reeks was conducted to the door, his hand cordially shaken, and himself shut out in the darkness, Nugent Leathwood saying, just before closing the door: "You will find the gate straight in front of you at the end of the path."

But Mr. George Reeks, standing alone in the darkness, and with the memory of the strange happenings of the night full upon him, did not feel disposed to seek that gate at once; or, indeed, to be in any great hurry to return home. Instead, he wanted to stand there, under the stars and the night sky, and drink in, in the silence, the full beauty of the prospect which had suddenly opened before him.

"Five hundred pounds! No more beating of brokers' men; no more bullying from tradesmen! I'll open an office—a respectable office, in a respectable neighborhood; I'll launch out on new schemes; I'll do commission work that I've never attempted before. Gilbert Rickerby, whether you're alive or dead, I'm glad you came to lodge at No. 2, Little Pond street. If I'd got the money in my pocket I'd have a cab home!"

But, whatever he intended to do, he was in no hurry about it. Still meditating over that extraordinary fortune which had come to him so unexpectedly, he resolved to take a turn around the house; and he noticed in doing so that, while one side had lighted windows dotted all over it, the other, which seemed to be a separate house, was dark and apparently uninhabited. Wandering on a little farther, still gazing up at those darkened windows, Mr. Reeks lost his way completely, missed the gate, and made the complete circle of the two houses without finding it. Standing still, he remonstrated with himself for his carelessness.

"You were drunk when you came in, George Reeks—you know you were; but you've gone through a great deal too much since then to be drunk now. It will never do to wake up that nice young man again and ask the way out; I must go round the wall and find it. It ought to be directly in front of the lighted house; and I appear, at the present moment, to be directly behind the dark one. However, I have to get home to Mrs. R—; so here goes!"

He had gone but a few steps when he thought he saw in front of him, among the heavy shadows thrown by the trees, a figure. Somewhat startled at first, Mr. Reeks drew back agains the wall; and then, laughing at his own fears, ventured boldly out and called to the figure.

"I beg you pardon, but I'm lost. I can't find the gate. If you will be so kind at to—"

His voice trailed off, and failed him altogether; for the figure—scarcely a dozen yards from him—had not moved. Very timidly, the little man ventured nearer, and began his appeal afresh.

"I say; could you show me—".

He had not time to finish the sentence; the figure moved suddenly, and without warning, and leaped upon him—a tall figure, and evidently possessing considerable strength. Then a hand gripped him, and another hand closed firmly over his mouth; looking up, he saw, in the dim light, a fair man, with a fair mustache and a tanned skin, and with a deep scar across one cheek bone. Trembling in deadly fear, he waited for the man to speak.

"Do you know me?" asked the man, sternly. "Don't try to speak, because I shan't let you. If you know me, nod your head."

Mr. Reeks nodded, though with considerable difficulty.

"I see you do. I am Gilbert Rickerby. If I let you free, will you swear to me not to attempt to raise the alarm—will you swear that you will do as I tell you? Remember, I have a dozen times your strength, and could catch you and silence you before you had gone a yard. Nod again."

Mr. Reeks nodded with what emphasis was possible under the circumstances, and the next moment his mouth was uncovered.

"He—he told me you were dead!" he stammered, pointing feebly toward the lighted house, and evidently not quite certain in his own mind as to whether Gilbert Rickerby was really dead or not.

"Yes; he thinks I am," replied the other, bitterly. "But what were you doing there—in that house?"

Once again George Reeks felt that there was nothing for it but to make a clean breast of the business; haltingly, and with many excuses for himself, he told his tale—told, last of all, of the promised 500 which was to come to him so easily. "I thought that you were dead, Mr. Rickerby, and that it would not matter," he pleaded.

"I know—I know; and I believe you," replied Gilbert. But he must not have those papers; he shall not. Tell me, did he say anything about a young girl—a young lady?"

"Said she was there—and in safe keeping," replied Reeks.

"In safe keeping! Good heavens—and he dares to say it! Mr. Reeks, I am hiding—I am living on false pretenses; I have no name—nothing that I can call my own. But, will you help me?"

Then the head of poor Mr. Reeks was whirling round again, or seemed to be; but he answered, steadily, though with something of a gulp at the thought of his lost fortune, "I will; I don't want his money, or anyone's. What is the matter?"

"You shall see for yourself," said Gilbert, gripping his arm. "I believe you have a heart; you must have; any man but a black-hearted villain would help a poor wretch, bowed down under such misery and grief as mine. Come, you shall know for yourself what I want!"

Utterly bewildered and feeling much inclined to shriek out, and wishing most devoutly that he had never seen or heard of Gilbert Rickerby, Mr. Reeks suffered himself to be drawn towards the dark house, at which he had gazed so curiously but a few moments before.

CHAPTER VIII.

The World of Dreams.

Still, with that powerful grip upon his arm, Mr. George Reeks was drawn along towards the dark house, quaking inwardly, yet filled, too, with a very lively curiosity as to what was going to happen. At the moment he had no thought of the £500 which had slipped through his fingers—or, it would be more proper to say, had never touched his fingers at all; he merely had a dim wish in his mind that Mrs. Reeks might turn up unexpectedly and come to his assistance; the matter was really too much for him.

Gilbert Rickerby opened a door—the door by which he had entered on that first night of his creeping back to his old home—and led the frightened little man down a dark passage; opened another door and drew him into a lighted room. Carefully closing the last door, he pointed to a seat, and Mr. Reeks dropped obediently into it.

"So you came to-night to personate me, did you?" asked Gilbert, looking at him, smiling. "Not very much alike, are we?"

"It was a liberty, I confess, sir," replied Mr. Reeks, humbly. "But I saw you advertised for—with quite a handsome award attached—and I thought there might be something to come my way. You see, sir, I couldn't make out what had become of you or of your servant."

Mr. Reeks was very apologetic at this point, and, in his modesty and his desire that it should be fully understood why he had taken such a liberty, had quite lost sight of the larger interest which faced him.

"Well—you've found me—and I have found my servant; you shall hear more of that presently. As I have hinted to you, Mr. Reeks, I am placed in the strangest position ever a man occupied yet—and I want you to help me. You need not tremble, or look about you; we shall not be discovered here. This house has an evil reputation, Mr. Reeks; and no one will come near it in a hurry. This side of Rickerby's Folly is haunted."

So far from comforting the unfortunate little man, this intelligence seemed to throw him into greater terror even than before; he clutched his chair and glanced, with starting eyes, on all sides of him; caught a glimpse of the strong, robust figure of Gilbert Rickerby, and felt vaguely comforted. But he gave vent to something of his terror and bewilderment, nevertheless.

"Mr. Rickerby—for I think you must be Mr. Rickerby; you look so very solid—I am a peaceable and peace-loving man. But I have to-night got mixed up in a matter which terrifies me, and which has thrown me off my mental balance, as it were. In the first place, I go into one side of this extraordinary house—under false pretenses, I admit—and, after being shaken almost out of my wits, I am offered a sum of £500 to deliver up certain papers which do not belong to me, but to a man declared to be dead. I make a bargain to do so; I come out of the house, only to be confronted by that very man, and I am brought by him into the other half of this infernal—the word is strong, sir; but, under the circumstances, it is justified—this infernal house, and I am calmly informed that it is haunted. If you should happen to have a little something reviving, sir, I should be grateful for a nip."

Gilbert Rickerby smilingly produced a flask and handed it to Mr. Reeks; it fairly clattered against his teeth as he took a long pull at it. But it brought color into his cheeks and appeared to warm him.

(To Be Continued.)

The Prey of the Fog Fiend.

The fog fiend has come to London ununusually early this year, and has been busy painting the town, not red, but drab. He cares neither for curses nor anti-smoke committees, and he plays quaint and bewildering tricks in the streets. Last night, for instance, after sickening and half-suffocating his victims during the day, deepening his tones as black as evening came on, he suddenly wiped off the paint in one part of London and allowed people to see and breathe clearly for an hour, but only to deepen their disappointment with another lose of gloom. The effect of this trick was very singular; the fog suddenly rolled up like a curtain, and for a short time, so a correspondent tells us, stars were actually visible. There are no words equal to the present occasion, so we must, perforce, be patient.—Westminster Gazette.

A Matrimonial Note.

A woman of education and refinement announced in yesterday's newspapers, quite as a matter of course, that she was engaged to a certain man, whose name she gave, and that she would marry him as soon as she was divorced from her husband. And, later in the day, her "fiance" confirmed the announcement.

From an indissoluble bond to a civil contract to a loose agreement at the pleasure of the parties concerned, the descent of the "honorable estate of matrimony" seems to be swift and unhalting. It is strange that the revolutionary change in the institution lying, or supposed to lie, at the very foundation of the social structure, should cause so little serious agitation and alarm.—New York World.

A Cuban Bogy.

Admission of Cuba into the Union would mean not only that the nation was to govern Cuba, but also that Cuba was to take part in governing the nation. It would mean that Cuba would have a voice in making laws for New York and New England, and the West and South; not only a voice, but, perhaps, in some close division, a deciding voice, so that, in the gravest affairs, this whole nation might be governed, and its destiny be decided by senators and representatives from Cuba. That, we are convinced, is something the people of the United States will never permit and will never make possible.—New York Tribune.

London on Wheels.

An idea of the enormous passenger traffic of London will be obtained from the following figures: Thirty-eight omnibus routes converge at Charing Cross. About 700 omnibuses pass there every hour, carrying 9,000 passengers. At Hyde Park corner there are twenty omnibus routes, 390 omnibusses per hour, with an hourly passenger average of over 5,000. At High street, Kensington, there are four omnibus routes, with 112 omnibuses and 1,500 passengers per hour. At Piccadilly Circus there are twenty-six routes, 445 omnibuses and 8,500 passengers, while along the Strand there are twenty-six routes, 445 omnibuses and 6,000 passengers per hour.—Tattler.

The Kaiser's Evening at Home.

Emperor William is very fond of hearing books read aloud in his drawing room, at home after dinner, when he has a quiet evening. While one of the gentlemen or ladies-in-waiting reads, his majesty sits at a table and sketches or draws designs. Sometimes the kaiserin takes up the book herself. Several of the emperor's sketches have been sold in Berlin and elsewhere at Charity bazars. The kaiserin's health has much improved lately. Her majesty is able to drive outdoors and to entertain her guests. Those who have seen her and spoken with her during the last fortnight found her looking well and in good spirits.

Serious Results.

The remark recently made by a French clerk when he was discharged by his employer is quoted to make doctors feel happy:

"This dismissal will result in the death of many people," said the young man.

"What do you mean?" asked the merchant. "Do you mean to threaten me?"

"No; not at all," replied the clerk. "I only mean to say that I now intend to study medicine."—New York Times.

FIGURES FROM BOARD OF IMMIGRATION COMMISSIONERS.

Classes of Immigrants Who Are Undesirable from American Standpoints of Citizenship—Pauper Element from Southern Italy Left in Seaboard Cities.

The report of the board of immigration commissioners at New York contains figures and statistics that furnish food for serious reflection on the much-vexed problem of restricting the flow of certain classes of foreigners to this country. The total immigration for the fiscal year 1900-1901 was 383,931, as against 341,712 for the year previous, an increase of 47,219. The total number of immigrants from southern Italy for 1900-1901 was 111,298, as against 83,329 for the preceding fiscal year. From northern Italy there were 20,360 immigrants this year as against 16,690 last year, an increase of 3,670. The commissioners' report will show that the southern Italians brought with them this year $964,979, a per capita rate of only $8.67, while the northern Italians brought $478,969, a per capita rate of $23.62, standing well up among the highest class of immigrants. As to the influx from other countries the figures are also interesting. The second highest on the list to the Italians are the Hebrews, who numbered 43,237, a decrease of 1,283 from the preceding year. They were also short of funds, having brought $360,940, a per capita rate of $8.58, which is 9 cents less than that of the southern Italians and the lowest on the entire list. Polish immigrants numbered 37,636, an increase of 801. They brought $373,559, or $9.93 per capita. The Lithuanians were 8,192 in number and had a per capita rate of $8.65, the Portuguese were 3,393 strong, with a $9.61 rate, and the Ruthenians 5,032, with a $9.64 rate to their credit. The per capita rate of all others was above $10. The German immigration amounted to 29,660, an increase of 6,298. Their per capita rate was $31.14, the third highest on the list, the first being held by the French, at a $39.57 rate, with a small immigration of 3,771, while the English, Scotch and Welsh at $32.64 were third highest, with a total immigration of 6,433 persons. Ireland sent over this year 10,953 immigrants, which was 5,247 less than landed during 1899-1900. They brought $340,822, or $17.10 per capita rate. The Scandinavians increased 1,334 over last year, their total being 24,161, with a per capita ratio of $16.15. The Slovaks numbered 26,931, an increase of 1,539. They had a $12.31 rate. The Magyars were 12,344, with 991 increase and a $10.98 rate. The Croatian and Dalmatian races were represented by 12,348 immigrants, with $15.54 as a per capita; the Dutch and Flemish had 3,065, with a high ratio of $26.30, while the Spanish, with 513, an increase of 204, had a still higher per capita of $30.23. The Armenians, Syrians and Bohemians furnished 11,721, the Finnish 8,359, the Greeks 5,051 and all other nationalities 1,627. Their per capita rates ranged from $15 to $22. As already stated, the increase in immigration for the fiscal year 1900-1901 was 47,219, and of this number 28,969, or 61 per cent, were natives of south Italy. One of the railroad officials of the immigration bureau, in New York, commenting on this feature, said: "The southern Italians, who so largely swelled the tide of immigration this year constitute an undesirable class for naturalization and citizenship. Past experience bears out this statement, and, as evidence of the fact that there is no racial prejudice in the assertion, it is only necessary to ask the opinion of a north Italian on the pauper element of southern Italy. Many of them have told me how utterly worthless these persons are at home, and statistics show how useless they are from a progressive standpoint in this country. They represent the lazy and indolent outcasts of southern Europe, are absolutely thriftless and will work only when dire necessity compels it. They bring just enough money with them to this country to comply with the immigration laws, and, as they cannot afford to buy railroad or steamboat tickets to sections of the country where there is a demand for their labor, they linger in the large cities of the East until their meager fund is exhausted, and then, for the most part, become burdens on the municipalities in which they are stranded. This, of course, will apply to some classes of other nationalities, and it seems that the time has arrived for more stringent immigration laws, restricting the wholesale influx of objectionable classes of foreigners to this country."—New York Sun.

Charity's Choice.

"Mummy," said a small girl—"mummy, dear, I do wish I might give some money for poor children's dinners." "So you may, darling." "But, mummy, I haven't any money." "Well, darling, if you like to go without sugar I will give you the money instead, and then you will have some." The small child considered solemnly for a moment and then said: "Must it be sugar, mummy?" "Why, no, darling. I don't much mind. What would you like to do without?" "How would soap do, mummy, then?" exclaimed the small maiden in triumph.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Cholly—"I think I may change my mind." Miss Marbleheart (earnestly)—"I would if I were you."—Judge.

PRESENTS LENGTHY ARGUMENT THAT SCHLEY ENJOYED NOT THIS HONOR.

HE, SAMPSON, WAS THE TRUE "IT"

POINTS OUT THAT THIS QUESTION WAS NOT BEFORE THE COURT.

Washington, Dec. 22.—The objection of Admiral W. T. Sampson to that portion of Admiral Dewey's report of the Schley court of inquiry in which he says Admiral Schley was in command at the battle off Santiago and entitled to the credit of the victory was filed with Secretary Long yesterday. The document was brought to the navy department by E. S. Theall, of counsel for Admiral Sampson, and handed to the secretary.

The department is requested to strike out or specifically disapprove that portion of Admiral Dewey's opinion filed in connection with the proceeding of the Schley court of inquiry in which he states his views to be that Commodore Schley was in absolute command at the naval battle off Santiago.

First—Commodore Schley was not in command at that battle.

Second—The president of the United States and the navy department had decided that Admiral Sampson was in command at that battle and Commodore Schley second in command.

Third—The question as to who commanded at Santiago was not referred to the court for consideration and evidence upon the point was excluded.

Each of these specifications is taken up in detail and exhaustive arguments are presented to support all of the contentions upon which they found Admiral Sampson's claims to the honor of having commanded in the battle of Santiago.

Capt. Lemly, judge advocate general, yesterday handed to Secretary Long his answer to the bill of exceptions filed by Admiral Schley against the findings of the majority of the court. All the points made by Schley are combatted by the judge advocate, who recommends that the findings of the court be approved.

GAGE WILL RETIRE.

To Step Out as Soon as the President Can Secure a Successor.

Washington, Dec. 22.—The New York announcement of Secretary Gage's resignation is quite generally credited in Washington. His address Thursday night is regarded as a sort of valedictory to official duties. It is Secretary Gage's intention to relinquish the treasury portfolio as soon as President Roosevelt can find a suitable successor and he has so informed the president. Mr. Gage would like to be relieved before spring. The president has done all he could to dissuade Secretary Gage from retiring and probably will continue to use his efforts in that direction. Secretary Gage's intention to retire was made known to the president some time ago.

BANK ROBBERY CHARGED.

Former Merchant Arrested for Robbing the Springdale Bank.

Fayetteville, Ark., Dec. 22. — N. B. Carlisle, formerly a merchant and later a livery stable man of this city, was arrested last night charged with robbing the Springdale bank Thursday of $7,000. He is held in the sum of $3,000 bonds for examining trial Monday. The robbery was a bold one and was executed by only one man. About $3,000 of the money has been recovered. An overcoat, supposed to belong to Carlisle, was found yesterday, and in the pockets were a pistol and package containing $1,000 in bills.

JACKSONS FOUND GUILTY.

Theocrats Are Sentenced to Penal Servitude.

London, Dec. 22. — Theodore and Laura Jackson, the latter best known in the United States by the name Ann Odelia Diss De Barr, were found guilty by a jury in the Old Bailey yesterday on charges of immoral practices and fraud. The judge at once imposed sentence of fifteen and seven years' penal servitude upon Jackson and his reputed wife, respectively. The prisoners listened to the passing of sentence in evident astonishment, but maintained silence.

One Hazer Expelled.

Chicago, Dec. 22.—As a result of hazing which was the outgrowth of rivalry between the occupants of College and North halls at Lake Forest university, Gus Johnson, a senior student from Decatur, Ill., was expelled from the university and five others were suspended, two until Sept. 1, 1902, without permission to ask to return.

Gardner Defeats Carter.

San Francisco, Dec. 22. — George Gardner and Kid Carter met last night in what was announced as a contest for the middleweight championship of the world. Gardner clearly established his right to the title by knocking out Carter in the eighth round.

To Stamp Out Smallpox.

Winnebago City, Minn., Dec. 22.—At a meeting of the board of health all places of amusement, churches, Sunday schools, day schools, lodges and public gatherings were closed until further notice because of smallpox.

Found Partly Burned Bodies.

Santa Fe, N. Mex., Dec. 22. — The bodies of two shepherds, partly burned, were found yesterday at Cabra Springs, near Canon Blanco, Santa Fe county. It is believed the men were murdered and their flocks stolen.

GROUND BROKEN AT ST. LOUIS.

Work on the Site of the World's Fair Is Commenced.

St. Louis, Dec. 22.—The governors of four Louisiana Purchase states—Minnesota, Nebraska, Arkansas and Missouri—several members of congress and world's fair national commissioners and other invited guests, among them Gen. John C. Bates, commanding the department of the Missouri, and Col. John D. G. Oglesby, representing Gov. Yates of Illinois, were present and participated in the ceremonies attending the breaking of ground yesterday on the site of the world's fair in Forest Park. The exercises at the site, where the thermometer registered around zero, consisted of an invocation by Rev. Dr. S. J. Niccolls, addresses by the chairman of the committee on ceremonies, Corwin H. Spencer, and President David R. Francis, and the breaking of ground on the site of the Education building by the officials of the exposition company, municipal authorities and invited guests. Speaking by Gov. Francis, Congressman James A. Tawney of Minnesota and Gov. Jefferson Davis of Arkansas and music by Seymour's famous sixty was the program at the Coliseum, where several thousand persons were present. A banquet at the Southern hotel in the evening completed the day's program.

HAY WILL REMAIN.

President Urges the Secretary Not to Resign, and Not in Vain.

Washington, Dec. 22.—In view of the repeated publications of late to the general effect that Secretary Hay is about to retire from the cabinet, a statement is given with full authority that Secretary Hay does not now contemplate retirement. This statement applies not only to the present, but to that indefinite period fixed by the conclusion of the negotiations necessary to the construction of an isthmian canal. Also it is stated with equal positiveness and authority that President Roosevelt has in the strongest terms expressed to Secretary Hay his earnest desire that he shall remain in the cabinet, of which he forms one of the principal props. Thus, according to the statement, the secretary's inclination and the president's desires run together and there is no foundation for the reports that Secretary Hay is to leave his post.

"RUSS" DENIES IT.

Is Not Opposing a Pension for Mrs. Benjamin Harrison.

Washington, Dec. 22. — Col. Russell B. Harrison, son of the late President Benjamin Harrison, was admitted to practice in the court of claims at its last session. Col. Harrison, in reply to an inquiry concerning the reason for his presence in Washington, said: "I have been here entirely on legal business. The report that I am opposing the granting of a pension to Mrs. Benjamin Harrison is absolutely without foundation. I have hesitated to make reference to this matter, even to deny the truth of the idle rumor earlier, simply from a disinclination to make reference to family matters."

EXPLOSION KILLED THREE.

Boiler Lets Go and Causes Death and Destruction.

Pittsburg, Dec. 22.—Three dead, one missing and twelve injured is the result of a terrific boiler explosion at the Black Diamond steel works of Park Brothers on Thirtieth street yesterday. Reuben Miller, Jr., superintendent of the plant states that the boilers were examined last week and pronounced in excellent condition. No known cause can be given for the explosion, but a thorough investigation is now in progress.

Fooled an Old Man.

Sioux City, Iowa, Dec. 22. — Patrick Warren of West Superior, an old man, slept in the police station. He is walking from Deadwood, S. D. "I was sent out by an employment agency," he said, "to work on a railroad. Three hundred and seventy-five men is the greatest number employed there, and over 3,000 have been shipped there by the agencies. Many have been forced to walk back home."

Imitates Carnegie.

Onawa, Iowa, Dec. 22.—John Addison Oliver, father of Judge John F. Oliver of the district court, yesterday proposed a free public library for Onawa, giving a building, two lots and $4,000 on condition that the town pay $1,000 yearly for its support.

Place for Rawlinson.

La Crosse, Wis., Dec. 22.—Charles H. Rawlinson of this city has been appointed commercial clerk in the office of State Treasurer Davidson at a salary of $1,200 a year. He is a well-known Republican.

Deer Season at Its Best.

Lead, S. D., Dec. 22.—The deer hunting season is at its height this month. Deer are plentiful within twenty-five miles of Lead, and one party returned yesterday bringing in five animals.

Wayward Son's Arrest.

Monticello, Minn., Dec. 22. — Ralph Bradford, aged twenty-two, and Samuel Longfellow, aged twenty-five, sons of respectable parents, are under arrest here charged with theft.

Freight Car Wrecked.

Nora Springs, Iowa, Dec. 22. — A freight wreck occurred here, caused by the breaking in two of the train. Four cars were wrecked and traffic was delayed. No one was hurt.

Timberman in Mine Is Killed.

Lead, S. D., Dec. 22.—William Price, timberman for the Homestake company, was killed yesterday on the 600-foot level. He was crushed by a boulder weighing a ton.

Seven Thousand for Loss of Leg.

Crookston, Minn., Dec. 22.—In the district court in the case of Frank Walker vs. the Grand Forks Lumber company, the jury rendered a verdict for $7,000. Walker sued for $10,000 for the loss of a leg while in the company's employ.

Bankrupt Arrested.

Madison, Wis., Dec. 22.—Max Levitan, the Monticello bankrupt, was arrested last evening by federal officers and lodged in jail here on the charge that he was about to leave the state to avoid examination.

DEMON WAS QUICK

KILLED THREE NEGROES IN A SALOON ROW AND THEN ESCAPED.

NEGROES ORRERED WHITES OUT

BUT THE NERVY EIGHTEEN-YEAR-OLD LAD TOOK TO SHOOTING INSTEAD.

NO EFFORT MADE TO CATCH HIM

SYMPATHY OF THE PEOPLE IS EVIDENTLY WITH THE NERVY LOY.

Welch, W. Va., Dec. 21.—Wayne Demon, an eighteen-year-old boy, shot three negroes to death in a saloon at the mining town of Davy, this county, last evening. Yesterday was pay day at the Davy mines and the negroes had begun their holiday celebration. Drunkenness was visible on every hand, and when about a dozen of the big blacks entered Eugene Dye's saloon on the leading street, revolvers in hand, and demanded that all the whites within retire, the trouble began. The bartender stepped into an adjoining room for his revolver and all the other whites save Demon made a run to get away. Demon, although being almost a total stranger in the town, was nervy, and refused to obey the demand to depart. Instead, he pulled his revolver and in a twinkling he had shot three of the negroes to death and the others were falling over themselves to get away. In the excitement, Demon, whose home is in Catlettsburg, Ky., left the saloon by a rear door, and up to a late hour last night had not been captured. In fact, but little effort is being made to apprehend him. He is an assistant bookkeeper for Cols, Crane & Co. of Cincinnati, who are engaged extensively in timbering in this county. Demon was waiting the arrival of a train to go to his home to spend the holidays.

BLEW OUT THE GAS.

Two North Dakotans Found Dead in a Chicago Hotel.

Chicago, Dec. 22.—John F. Weber and Stephen Hinsterger, two farmers from Valley City, N. D., were found dead from gas poisoning in a room of the St. James hotel yesterday. The bodies of the men lay side by side, and two gas jets in the room were turned on. It is supposed that they were unfamiliar with the use of gas, and that they blew out the jets. From papers found upon the men it was gathered that they were on their way to Miloway, Ont., from Valley City. Little was known about them at the hotel. They came there Thursday afternoon, engaged and paid for a room, and retired early. The police believe that one of the victims, ignorant as to the use of illuminating gas, blew it out before retiring.

SCHOOLS THAT AMBLE.

Puzzling Problem for Solution by Chicago School Board.

Chicago, Dec. 22. — Movable school buildings may be the expedient hit upon by the board of education in solving the problem of adapting school accommodations to the fluctuations in population in various parts of the city. Supt. Cooley, in his forthcoming annual report to the board, will recommend that it adopt a policy of erecting no new schools in localities in which the demand for accommodations has not become fixed and which the school population has become indefinite. In other cities experiments have been made with small frame structures which are movable. They contain from two to eight rooms, and can be removed to other cities as the population fluctuates.

SHIVERING IN CHICAGO.

Sub-Zero Weather and No Coal to Be Had.

Chicago, Dec. 22. — A crisis will be reached Sunday because of Chicago's coal famine if the cold weather continues. Frantic appeals were made for fuel by the largest merchants and manufacturers yesterday of the biggest dealers in the commodity. Elevators were actually closed in some of the skyscrapers, while tenants of some of the office buildings worked in their overcoats on account of lack of heat. Apartment building occupants suffered because of a shortage of steam, while many factories and industrial institutions perfected arrangements for closing their plants Monday, begging coal enough to keep the buildings warm until the famine period passed.

SHOT THREE MEN.

Culprit Fortifies Himself in a House and Defies Arrest.

Lawton, Okla., Dec. 22.—Three men were shot in a dispute near here yesterday. It is said the shooting was done by a man named Roberts, and that all three of the wounded men have died. Roberts is fortified in a house, defying arrest. The sheriff and two marshals have gone to the scene. The names of the dead men are not obtainable.

Both Were Killed.

Austin, Tex., Dec. 22. — When Constable J. W. Murray attempted to arrest F. M. Simcock, a dentist, at Burnett yesterday, the latter drew a revolver to resist. Simcock and the officer fired at the same moment and both men were killed.

Training School Burned.

Salt Lake, Utah, Dec. 22.—The new training school of the University of Utah, with its entire contents, has been burned. Loss, $50,000; insurance, $35,000. The fire originated from combustion of chemicals in the laboratory.

Killed by a Negro.

Bluefield, W. Va., Dec. 22.—Dayton H. Miller, secretary and treasurer of the Crow's Nest Coal and Coke company, was shot and killed by a negro at Toms Creek, Va. The negro may be lynched.

FROZEN STANDING UP.

Unknown Man Found Stiff in Death Leaning Against a Building.

Hibbing, Minn., Dec. 21. — As the night watchman at the Clark mine was attending to his duties he came upon a man leaning against the side of the power house. Giving him a gentle push and telling him to move on or he would freeze, the watchman was surprised to see the man fall and to discover that he was already frozen and dead. So far as can be learned no one here knows the man or had ever seen him before. A $10 bill was found in his pocket, but nothing by which he could be identified.

ESCAPE IN NIGHT CLOTHES.

Wisconsin Couple Suffer Terribly After Being Burned Out.

Grantsburg, Wis., Dec. 21.—At 4 a. m. Wednesday the home of Guy Griffin, in the extreme northern part of this county, forty miles northeast of here, was destroyed by fire. Griffin and his wife walked through snow and across a lake on the ice to their nearest neighbor, where they were received in a frozen and exhausted condition, both being in their night clothing and without shoes. Nothing was saved from the home, and even the animals in the corral near the house had a narrow escape.

INDIANS CONSUMPTIVE.

The Mille Lacs Reds All Have Tuberculosis.

Anoka, Dec. 21.—A lumberman who is a good authority states that the Indians on the Mille Lacs reservation are much more sickly than they were twenty years ago. He says they are dying rapidly, and in his opinion the prevalent disease is tuberculosis, brought on by the poor food they subsist on for months at a time, and unsanitary living. Practically every Indian, old or young, is suffering from a persistent, hacking cough.

COMPRESSED AIR CARS.

Minneapolis and Anoka Cars to Have Up-to-Date Equipment.

Anoka, Minn., Dec. 21.—The Minneapolis & Anoka Railway company, with trackage rights over the Twin City Rapid Transit company's tracks in Minneapolis, has closed a contract with the Rome Compressed Air Company of Rome, N. Y., for a complete compressing plant and eight air motor street cars. The line will probably be in operation next summer.

Moving Cautiously.

St. Paul, Minn.—It is semi-officially given out that the Minnesota Attorney General will not take any action concerning the so-called merger until after Christmas, and perhaps not until after New Years. He says no new legislation is needed and hence he wants to take time enough to investigate and ascertain what existing laws, if any, are in danger of being violated.

Favors Minnesota Plan.

Des Moines, Iowa, Dec. 21.—Judge O. S. Robinson of Sioux City, member of the state board of control, yesterday read before the state conference of heads of state institutions, an important paper in which he took advanced ground in favor of a law in Iowa similar to the Minnesota law providing for a state agent to investigate cases of dependents shipped into the state and those where it is claimed dependent persons belong in this state.

Aged Woman Missing.

Winona, Minn., Dec. 21. — Diligent search is being made for Mrs. Augusta Schutz, who disappeared from her home on East King street a short time since. It was supposed she had gone to the home of her son-in-law, Albert Beck, at Utica, but this proves to be erroneous. As she was seventy-one years old, fears for her safety are entertained. It is thought she may have wandered into the country and have been frozen to death.

Meetings Forbidden.

Winnebago City, Minn., Dec. 21.—At a meeting of the board of health all places of amusement, also churches, Sunday schools, day schools, lodges and public gatherings of whatever nature were forbidden until further notice because of prevalence of smallpox in this place. There are about a dozen cases in town.

La Crosse's Big Thirst.

La Crosse, Wis., Dec. 21. — Rev. Guido Bossard of the First Presbyterian church has spent considerable time figuring out what the people of La Crosse spend in a year and what for, and charges up $600,000 a year to whisky and beer drinking and $200,000 to churches and the cause of education.

Died at Ninety-Four.

Fargo, N. D., Dec. 21.—Mrs. Christopherson, the second eldest woman in Fargo, died of old age. She was ninety-four years old and had lived in Fargo for nearly a quarter of a century. She had two daughters, Mrs. Scott and Mrs. Anderson, in Fargo, and a son in Faribault, Minn.

Will Rely on Existing Laws.

St. Paul, Minn.—While there does not seem to be much doubt that there will be an extra session of the Minnesota Legislature this winter for considering the tax laws, the talk of calling it for anti-merger legislation is subsiding since the Attorney General has announced that he finds that present laws only need to be enforced to give the public all required protection.

Farmer Becomes Bankrupt.

Winona, Minn., Dec. 21.—George Alberts of Hayfield, Dodge county, a farmer, has filed a petition in bankruptcy here. He places his liabilities at $5,268.85, and assets at $1,168, of which $638 is claimed to be exempt.

Big Commission Awarded.

Deadwood, S. D., Dec. 21. —In the case of P. J. Miniter and W. J. Thornby against Frank A. Waters, suit for commission on a mining sale, the jury returned a verdict for the plaintiffs, awarding them $3,000 with interest.

Hibbing, Minn., Dec. 21. — Edward Nelson met instant death at Dent's lumber camp a few miles north of Hibbing. A tree which the men had just cut had fallen and lodged in an old dry stub. As they stood considering what to do the stub broke and the tree fell, striking Nelson on the head.

SCHLEY OBJECTS

FILES PROTEST AGAINST MAJORITY FINDINGS OF THE COURT.

ADMIRAL'S TESTIMONY IGNORED

AS WELL AS EVERY BIT OF EVIDENCE FAVORABLE TO HIS CASE.

SCHLEY'S RIGHTS TRAMPLED ON

ASKS TO BE HEARD IN CONNECTION WITH SAMPSON'S OBJECTIONS.

Washington, Dec. 20.—Late yesterday afternoon Admiral Schley, through his counsel, filed with the secretary of the navy his bill of exceptions to the majority findings of the court of inquiry, and also a letter asking to be allowed to be heard in connection with the objections to be filed by attorneys for Admiral Sampson to the individual opinion of Admiral Dewey. This action was taken after Mr. Rayner, Mr. Teague and Capt. Parker, of counsel, had held a consultation throughout the day with their client.

Secretary Long almost immediately after the receipt of the communications called Judge Advocate Lemly and the solicitor for the department, Mr. Hanna, into conference. At its conclusion the secretary said that he had no statement to make regarding any action that he might take in the premises. He, however, indicated to Mr. Teague, through the judge advocate, that he would not hear an oral argument by Mr. Rayner regarding but that he would receive a written statement. It is expected that counsel for Admiral Sampson would file their objections to the findings of Admiral Dewey in the case yesterday, but it is now stated that such objections may not be offered before Friday.

Admiral Schley objects to the approval of the findings of the court upon the ground that the opinion rendered and the report of facts made by the majority of the court are in conflict with the overwhelming weight of evidence, and that the majority of the court in their opinion have ignored the testimony of the applicant, and of the whole of the applicant's witnesses, and all that portion of the evidence given by witnesses for the government, which was favorable to the applicant, and have thus deprived him of rights guaranteed to him by the laws of the land and the constitution of the United States.

The bill of exceptions is quite lengthy. It reviews at length the findings of the court and notes exceptions to the conclusions on each point of the precept.

NOMINEES ON THE ANXIOUS SEAT.

Senate Committee Will Inquire Into Several Cases.

Washington, Dec. 20. — The senate committee on military affairs yesterday agreed to report favorably all the army nominations before it, except those to staff positions, concerning which questions have been raised. The exceptions which were not passed upon were the nominations of Capt. William Crozier, to be chief of the ordnance bureau, with the rank of brigadier general; Col. George L. Gillespie, to be chief of engineers, and Gen. George B. Davis, to be judge advocate general, and other nominations dependent upon these three. The nominations favorably reported included several hundred names. Among them is that of Gen. Funston, to be brigadier general; Brig. Gen. Lloyd Wheaton, U. S. A., to be major general; Col. J. M. Bell, Eighth cavalry, and Col. William H. Bisbee, Thirteenth infantry.

MAN SHOOTS HIS WIFE.

He Objects to Her Tongue-Lashing About His Drunken Habits.

New York, Dec. 20.—John B. Sands was held without bail in the Jefferson Market court yesterday to await the outcome of the injuries of his wife Mary, whom he did his best to kill Tuesday night by shooting her in the abdomen. The woman is in St. Vincent's hospital in a critical condition. The cause of the shooting was her refusal to keep silent when her husband came home drunk. She had scolded him before on such occasions, and he had repeatedly promised to "fix" her if she did not desist. All this was according to the rules. The man regarded it as his right to get drunk and the woman clung to her privilege of applying a tongue lashing to the offender.

HOLIDAY PLANS.

What the Northwestern Delegations Will Do During Recess.

Washington, Dec. 20. — Most of the Northwestern senators and representatives will spend the holiday recess at home. All the members from Minnesota except Senator Nelson and Representative Morris will leave for that state at once, to return early in January. Representatives, Tawney and Eddy left for St. Louis last night to attend the ceremonies incident to the breaking of ground for the world's fair on Friday. The former will deliver the principal address. Representatives Stevens, Fletcher and Heatwole go home to-day, while Representative McCleary will leave for Mankato the day after Christmas.

Escaped by Suicide.

Brookville, Ind., Dec. 20.—Albert H. King, one of the trio convicted of "fixing" a foot race, evaded his sentence of two to fourteen years at Michigan City by taking morphine while in jail. He died shortly afterward.

Guilty of Grand Larceny.

New York, Dec. 20.—John T. Hayden, lately a bookkeeper for Swift & Co. of Chicago, pleaded guilty to grand larceny yesterday and was sentenced to state prison for not less than one year nor more than five years.

TO FIGHT THE MERGER.

Action Will Be Commenced in the United States Supreme Court.

St. Paul, Dec. 20.—The action of the State of Minnesota against the Northern Securities company to prevent the combination of the Great Northern, the Northern Pacific and the Burlington railway lines will probably be brought in the United States supreme court as soon as the court convenes after its holiday recess. The action will be a petition for a bill of equity. This report came yesterday from Washington, and it is generally accepted as true. Attorney General Douglas refused to either deny or affirm the report.

SHIPPED AS HIDES.

Partridges Escape Detection Under the Above Label.

New Richmond, Wis., Dec. 20. — A shipment of partridges, billed to Chicago parties as hides, was seized at Cyloh, twelve miles east of New Richmond, on the Wisconsin Central, by Justice Goodrich. This is the fourth shipment of this kind made lately. The authorities became suspicious and decided upon an investigation, with the above results. The shipments were made by a stranger, who gave his name as Hawkins. He is not to be found.

EPIDEMIC CLOSES SCHOOLS.

Winnebago City Has Considerable Smallpox of a Light Type.

Winnebago City, Dec. 20.—There are a number of cases of smallpox in this city and surrounding country. By an order of the board of health the schools of Winnebago City were closed Monday until Jan. 2. About half a dozen families are under quarantine and it is hoped that this and other strict measures adopted by the health officials will prevent the further spread of the disease. In every instance the disease manifests itself in a very mild form.

TRAINS DELAYED.

Reported Collision of Passenger and Freight at Portage, Wis.

La Crosse, Wis., Dec. 20.—No. 57, a fast mail train on the Milwaukee road, due here at 5 o'clock, did not arrive until 1 p. m. yesterday owing to a wreck at Portage, Wis. It is reported among railroad men that a freight train ran into the mail train and that two coaches were burned as a result of the collision. No. 55, due here at 11 a. m., did not arrive until 2 o'clock, being delayed by the same accident. No loss of life is reported.

DIED ON THE COAST.

Daniel Pineo, Once of Litchfield and Later of Park Rapids.

Park Rapids, Minn., Dec. 20.—A dispatch received from Tacoma, Wash., announces the death of Daniel Pineo of this place. He went there some months ago in quest of health. He was sixty-five years old. For many years he was a prominent business man of Litchfield and was widely known by the early settlers of the state. He removed to Park Rapids a half dozen years ago.

LUMBER GOES UP.

Slight Advance Made by the Wisconsin Valley Association.

Wausau, Wis., Dec. 20. — A called meeting of the price list committee of the Wisconsin Valley Lumbermen's association, which is affiliated with the Mississippi Valley Lumbermen's association, was held here. A slight advance was made on certain grades.

Driven to Suicide by Debts.

Brainerd, Minn., Dec. 20.—Word was received here yesterday morning from Pequot that the body of Charles Anderson was found in the woods a short distance from that village. He is supposed to have committed suicide. Anderson was fifty-seven years of age. He leaves a wife and several small children. Financial embarrassment is supposed to have been the cause of his deed.

Call It Chickenpox.

Northfield, Minn., Dec. 20.—Dr. H. M. Bracken of the state board of health was here to investigate the disease reported as smallpox. The doctors have come to the agreement that the disease is chickenpox, and steps must be taken to prevent its spreading, as it has obtained a good foothold here. A dozen cases have been reported from one family, and five from another.

No Smallpox at Bowdon.

Bowdon, N. D., Dec. 20.—The report, printed under a Grand Forks date, that Bowdon is quarantined against smallpox, is not true, and probably arose from the fact that a railroad construction crew's camp twenty-five miles north of Bowdon, has been quarantened to prevent the men from bringing the disease to this town.

Convict Pardoned by Gov. Herried.

Pierre, S. D., Dec. 20. — On further showing on the part of the prison officials Gov. Herried granted a pardon to Duncan B. Hensel, sentenced from Minnehaha county for robbery. This is the case where the pardon was refused several days ago on account of an insufficient showing of the cause.

Another on the Northern Pacific.

Grafton, N. D., Dec. 20.—A light engine on the Northern Pacific, running to Grafton after water, crashed into the rear of a freight standing on the main line two miles north of the city. The engine and caboose were badly wrecked but the crews escaped without serious injury.

Black River Falls Man Killed.

Black River Falls, Wis., Dec. 20. — Jake Schwalbold was killed at Gordon yesterday. He was a well known citizen of this place and a prominent member of the K. P. lodge.

White's Secretary Resigns.

Valley City, N. D., Dec. 20. — C. W. Getchell, private secretary to Gov. White, has tendered his resignation to take effect Jan. 1. He will accept a responsible position in the First National bank of this city.

Rattan Works Burned.

Faribault, Minn., Dec. 20.—The Faribault Rattan works were burned to the ground here. Loss, $10,000; insurance, $8,000. The origin of the fire is unknown. Eighteen employes are thrown out of employment.

CONGRESS

RESUME OF THE WEEK'S PROCEEDINGS.

In the Senate.

Washington, Dec. 17.—An echo of the verdict of the court of inquiry in the case of Rear Admiral Schley was heard in the senate yesterday when Mr. Jones of Arkansas introduced a resolution extending the thanks of congress and of the American people to Admiral Schley and the officers and men under his command during the battle of July 3, 1898, off the harbor of Santiago, Cuba. In submitting the resolution Mr. Jones made no statement and it was referred without comment to the committee on naval affairs.

A resolution heretofore offered by Mr. Vest of Missouri instructing the committee on judiciary to inquire into the subject of anarchy and to report to the senate by bill or otherwise a constitutional method congress may legislate for the suppression of anarchy and for the control of anarchists was adopted. Little business except that of a routine character was transacted in open session, the senate devoting the greater part of the day to consideration of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty in executive session.

In the House.

Washington, Dec. 18. — The bill to provide temporary revenues for the Philippine islands was debated in the house yesterday and will be voted on to-day at 4 o'clock. It was the first debate of the session and was conducted calmly and without display of temper. Several lively exchanges and an impassioned speech by Mr. Dearmond of Missouri, who has just returned from a trip to the Philippines, in opposition to the retention of the islands were the features. Mr. Payne, the floor leader of the majority, opened the debate. Owing to the indisposition of Mr. Richardson the duty of opening for the minority devolved upon Mr. Swanson of Virginia. The other speakers were Mr. Grosvenor (Rep., Ohio) and Mr. Robertson (Dem., La.) for the bill and Messrs. Shaforth (Sil., Colo.), Dearmond (Dem., Mo.), Thayer (Dem., Mass.) and Patterson (Dem., Tenn.) against it. Mr. Robertson said he would support the bill because free trade with the islands and reciprocity with Cuba, which was threatened, would destroy the sugar interests of his state.

In the Senate.

While the senate was in executive session yesterday Senator Morgan made a motion to have his bill authorizing acquisition of right of way for the proposed isthmian canal across Costa Rica and Nicaragua the special order for 2 o'clock to-day, but the senate declined to make the order. Some senators expressed the opinion that all special legislation should be postponed until after the holidays on account of some senators, but it was suggested that Mr. Morgan might, if he so desired, move to take up the bill to-morrow. He indicated a purpose to pursue this course.

In the House.

Washington, Dec. 19.—The bill to provide revenue temporarily for the Philippine islands passed the house yesterday by a vote of 163 to 128. Five Republicans—Messrs. McCall of Massachusetts, Littlefield of Maine, Heatwole, Eddy and Stevens of Minnesota—voted with the Democrats against the bill, and three Democrats, Messrs. Robertson, Davey and Broussard of Louisiana, voted with the Republicans for it. Mr. Meyer, a Democrat of Louisiana, was paired in favor of the bill with Mr. Foster, an Illinois Democrat. Mr. Warner of Illinois, who voted against the Porto Rican bill last congress, voted for the Philippine measure yesterday. Mr. Crumpacker of Indiana, who also voted against the Porto Rican bill, was absent.

In the course of the debate yesterday the Democrats were several times taunted with their failure to present an alternative proposition for the pending measure, but just before the vote was taken on the passage of the bill the attitude of the minority was defined in a motion to recommit, offered by Mr. Richardson, the minority leader. It instructed the ways and means committee to amended so as to reduce the customs and internal revenue laws of the United States to a revenue basis and to extend them to the Philippines until the latter, with the aid of the United States, should be able to set up a stable, independent government. This proposition did not command a Republican vote and the three Louisiana Democrats above mentioned voted against it. Mr. Meyer of Louisiana was paired against it. The speakers yesterday were Messrs. Hepburn of Iowa and Dalzell of Pennsylvania, for the bill, and Messrs. Henry of Texas, Williams of Mississippi, McCall of Massachusetts, Greene of Pennsylvania and McClellan of New York against it. The bill passed yesterday imposes the Dingley rates on goods entering the United States from the Philippines and the rates established by the Philippine commission on goods entering the Philippines from the United States. It also provides for the collection of tonnage taxes on vessels plying between the United States and the Philippines and that foreign vessels may ply between these ports until Jan. 1, 1905. The duties and taxes collected under the provisions of the bill shall go into the Philippine treasury, to be expended for the use and benefit of the islands.

The Senate.

Among the bills introduced in the senate yesterday was two by Senator Nelson providing for industrial schools. The first of these authorizes the appropriation of money for the establishment of schools for the industrial education of the youth of the country in every county of over 5,000 population in each state of the Union. The second provides a system of education for the territories, including the recently acquired islands. For this system of schools $1,000,000 is suggested for the District of Columbia and $15,000,000 for Porto Rico and the Philippines and the territories.

Among other bills introduced was one by Senator Penrose, levying a duty of 25 per cent ad valorem on all importations of unmanufactured silver. A preamble to the bill declares it to be the purpose of the measure to protect the silver mining industry of the United States.

In the House.

Washington, Dec. 20. — Before the house adjourned yesterday over the holiday recess a special order was made for the consideration of the Nicaragua canal bill, beginning Tuesday, Jan. 7, and to continue until the bill is disposed of, the order not, however, to interfere with revenue or appropriation bills. The session of the house was brief, the major portion of the time being occupied by Mr. Dearmond of Missouri in making a personal explanation regarding reports circulated in his district concerning his course in the matter of the extension of the rural free delivery.

In the Senate.

In the absence of Mr. Frye of Maine, president pro tem., Mr. Perkins of California presided over yesterday's session of the senate. The bill temporarily to provide revenue for the Philippine islands, which was passed by the house Wednesday, was referred to the committee on Philippines.

A bill to increase the official bond of the United States marshal of Alaska in certain cases to $75,000 was introduced by Mr. Hoar, and passed without reference to committee. At 12:40 the senate, on motion of Mr. Hale, went into executive session.

At 1 p. m. the senate adjourned until Jan. 6, 1902.

GROUND BROKEN AT ST. LOUIS.

Work on the Site of the World's Fair Is Commenced.

St. Louis, Dec. 22.—The governors of four Louisiana Purchase states—Minnesota, Nebraska, Arkansas and Missouri—several members of congress and world's fair national commissioners and other invited guests, among them Gen. John C. Bates, commanding the department of the Missouri, and Col. John D. G. Oglesby, representing Gov. Yates of Illinois, were present and participated in the ceremonies attending the breaking of ground yesterday on the site of the world's fair in Forest Park. The exercises at the site, where the thermometer registered around zero, consisted of an invocation by Rev. Dr. S. J. Niccolls, addresses by the chairman of the committee on ceremonies, Corwin H. Spencer, and President David R. Francis, and the breaking of ground on the site of the Education building by the officials of the exposition company, municipal authorities and invited guests. Speaking by Gov. Francis, Congressman James A. Tawney of Minnesota and Gov. Jefferson Davis of Arkansas and music by Seymour's famous sixty was the program at the Coliseum, where several thousand persons were present. A banquet at the Southern hotel in the evening completed the day's program.

MOVEMENT TO SAVE ABORIGINES EVERYWHERE FROM THE LIQUOR ILL.

OVERTURES TO THE POWERS

FOREIGN GOVERNMENTS WILL BE ASKED TO TAKE ACTION.

SECRETARY HAY WILL HELP

SENATE RESOLUTION WILL BE COMMUNICATED TO ENGLAND.

Washington, Dec. 21. — Secretary Hay, in a letter to Dr. S. L. Baldwin, chairman of the native races deputation, which on Dec. 1 presented a great petition for a treaty to protect native races against intoxicants and opium, says:

"Your suggestion that I call the attention of the nations concerned to the resolution of the senate, adopted Jan. 4, 1901, as likely to indicate the concurrent opinion of the two branches of the treaty-making power, the senate and the executive, has my cordial acquiescence.

"In view of the circumstances that the former representations to the other powers were made by the British government, as well as by our own, I shall initiate in the proposed sense by communicating the senate resolution to the British government, with the suggestion that it be made the basis of concurrently reopening the question with the powers having influence of commerce in the Western Pacific or in any other uncivilized quarter, where the salutary principle of liquor restriction could be practically applied through the general enactment of similar laws by the several countries or through a conventional engagement between them."

The senate resolution referred to declares in favor of laws and treaties to prohibit sales of intoxicants and opium to "aboriginal races" everywhere.

KILLED RESISTING RED.

Indian Policeman Is Sent to the Pen for a Year.

Sioux Falls, S. D., Dec. 21. — For the first time in the history of the South Dakota Indian agencies an Indian policeman has been sent to the penitentiary for killing an Indian who was resisting arrest. The policeman's name is Antoine Ladieux, first lieutenant of the Indian police force at the Rosebud agency. He has for years been considered one of the most trustworthy policemen on the reservation. The crime was committed while the officer was striving to arrest some drunken Indians under his charge, who were engaged in hauling freight from Valentine, Neb., to the agency. The Indian resisted, and during the fight which ensued John Bull Walks Behind was killed. The case was tried at Valentine. The testimony was all taken through interpreters and indicated that John Bull Walks Behind was a drunken character who had caused the agency authorities considerable annoyance. But the evidence of the defense was not convincing, and the jury was out but a short time when it returned a verdict of manslaughter, with a strong recommendation for mercy. In view of this the defendant was sentenced to one year in the penitentiary.

RURAL PEOPLE PROFIT.

One Mill School Tax on Full Valuation Is Liked.

Black River Falls, Wis., Dec. 21. —There is no doubt that when the next Wisconsin state legislature meets that an effort will be made by the large cities to have the 1-mill tax law for support of common schools repealed. An effort was made last year, but it failed, being killed in the senate. Those desiring the repeal of the law could see that when the law was passed requiring all property in the state to be assessed at its full value that the 1-mill tax would double the tax, and that the rural districts would benefit at the expense of the large cities. This proved to be the result, and the people of the country and small towns are rejoicing over that result. Jackson county was assessed and paid into the state fund from this source about $3,500, while the apportionment to the schools of the county is $14,317, or a balance in favor of the county of $8,000. The share for the city schools will be about $15,000, as against less than $800 last year. Many of those who favored the new assessment law and opposed the repeal of the 1-mill tax law are greatly surprised over the result and some of them may be found on the other side next time.

BABIES DIE IN AGONY.

Pitiable Sights Among the Shivering, Hungry People in the West.

Guthrie, O. T., Dec. 21. — Every road leading into the new country is still lined with prospective settlers. Generally these are men in poor circumstances financially, who are moving with their families into this region to better their condition.

This is the class of people who have suffered untold agonies as the result of the recent cold wave. Without food and generally without money, and in a country sparsely settled, they have starved and frozen, in many cases death resulting among the children.

Men who have seen these people report the sights the most pitiable ever witnessed. The cold weather has also brought to light several cases of smallpox in every town and city in the two territories.

EXPOSURE KILLED THEM.

Two Patients Taken From Missouri Hospital Die and Others May.

Maryville, Mo., Dec. 21.—St. Joseph's hospital was destroyed by fire Thursday night, and two patients are dead, while several others are not expected to survive the shock. There are twenty-five persons in the institution. They were hastily carried from the burning building. Outdoors the temperature was 13 degrees below zero, and it was some time before all the sufferers were housed. An overheated furnace started the blaze.

WERE ASPHYXIATED.

Mystery in Death of Parsons Couple Is Cleared Up.

Parsons, Kan., Dec. 21.—The mystery surrounding the death of Col. John E. Bull and wife, whose dead bodies were found in their home here last night, was cleared yesterday at the coroner's inquest, evidence being given to show that the couple had been asphyxiated by natural gas. No marks of violence were found on the bodies. A. W. Bull of Piqua, a brother of Col. Bull, will arrive to-day to care for the remains.

THEATRICAL MANAGER IN LUCK.

Discovers That a Child Actress Is His Daughter, for Whom He Had Long Searched.

Milwaukee, Dec. 22.—Frank Dodge, a well known theatrical manager with "A Gambler's Daughter," has recognized in Baby Vavene, a child actress well known in Milwaukee, his daughter for whom he has sought in vain for nearly six years. After Vavene's birth his wife secured a divorce, but she died five years ago. After her death Vavene came to Milwaukee, where she has been under the care of relatives. Dodge visited the Academy of Music last night and recognized his daughter there. He will pay for her education, though she will remain in the care of relatives.

OVER SIXTY MILES AN HOUR.

Engineer of a Fast Mail Train Opens the Throttle and Makes Up for Last Time.

La Crosse, Wis., Dec. 22.—One of the fastest railroad records ever made in Wisconsin stands to the credit of the Milwaukee road fast mail which left St. Paul Thursday. On account of a small wreck near La Crosse the train was given the right of way south, and made the seventy-eight miles between La Crosse and Portage in seventy-four minutes. The engineer was told when he reached La Crosse, that he would have the right of way, and on leaving that city he opened the throttle wide. Shortly before reaching Portage his train made the speed of nearly eighty miles an hour. This rate of speed was maintained for about ten miles.

BATTLE WITH WOLVES.

Cook in a Lumber Camp Has a Running Fight With a Dozen Wolves.

Marinette, Wis., Dec. 22. — Claude Frackleton, cook for the Sawyer-Goodman company, was attacked by a pack of wolves at Floodwood, Mich., last night. For two miles he kept up a running fight with a dozen of the brutes, which did not cease to attack him until his cries on nearing camp brought some of the other men at the camp with guns, who drove the wolves back. Frackleton had been out to a party, and was returning when the wolves found his scent. He started to run for camp, but had not gone far when the brutes overtook him. He kept at the yelping pack with a club and killed one before aid came.

LAWYER "SASSES" THE COURT.

Judge Throws Him in the Bastile for Contempt and He Appeals.

Cando, N. D., Dec. 22.—At the trial of the case of Irene C. King against Mary D. Hanson, John M. Cochrane of Grand Forks, representing the defendant, found objection to the presiding judge, J. F. Cowan, stating the same in his characteristic, forceful way. The court fined Mr. Cochrane $100 for contempt and caused him to be taken to jail upon the latter's refusal to pay the fine. Mr. Cochrane remained in jail from 4 p. m. to 9 p. m., when bail was offered by D. F. McLaughlin. The case was appealed to the supreme court, and the outcome is eliciting much interest.

FOR PENNY POSTAGE.

Next Postmaster General Promises to Work for Reduction.

Milwaukee, Wis., Dec. 22.—In speaking of the postoffice department of the government, of which he is to be the head, beginning in January, Henry C. Payne yesterday intimated that he was an advocate of penny postage. He said that he intended to work diligently to bring about a reduction in postage. First the service would have to be made self-supporting, then the reduction of rates would be an easy matter.

LIQUOR FOR JURORS.

New Trial Granted Because of Charge of Illegal Indulgence.

Duluth, Dec. 22.—News reached Duluth last night that Bill Randolph, recently convicted of manslaughter in the first degree at Grand Rapids for killing one-armed Frank Sullivan, has been granted a new trial. Newly discovered evidence and the charge that liquor was used in the jury room during the consideration of the case, are the grounds given.

Receiver Appointed.

Sioux Falls, S. D., Dec. 22. — Judge Carland of the United States court yesterday appointed F. H. Hollister of this city receiver of the Germania Live Stock Insurance Company of Sioux Falls, whose charter was revoked a short time ago by the state commissioner of insurance for alleged illegal practices.

South Dakota Regents.

Brookings, S. D., Dec. 22.—The state regents, in session here yesterday, accepted the new horticulture and mechanical laboratories and say that the work of rebuilding the Aberdeen normal, destroyed by fire, will not be resumed until spring, as it would not be advisable to work during the cold weather.

Held for Burglary.

Deadwood, S. D., Dec. 22.—Fred Covert, charged with complicity in the robbery of S. T. Voorhees' store at Galena, has been bound over to the grand jury under $5,000 bonds. He was driving the rig in which the two men were riding who resisted arrest at the hands of Deputy Sheriff Patterson, and one of whom was killed.

Curfew and Library.

Sioux Falls, S. D., Dec. 22.—The city council of Milbank has appropriated $200 toward the maintenance of a free reading room. The provisions of the curfew ordinance have been modified to permit children to visit the reading room after 8 o'clock, provided that upon leaving the room they go directly home.

Alexander Moore No More.

Sauk Center, Minn., Dec. 22.—Alexander Moore, aged seventy-eight, died yesterday morning. He was the second merchant in Minneapolis proper and chairman of the first county board of commissioners of Hennepin county.

Died in Saloon Fire.

Pipestone, Minn., Dec. 22.—Fire started from an oil stove in the cellar of James Murphy's saloon yesterday afternoon and did some damage to the building. A drunken man known as "Old Joe," was suffocated.

BOERS WILL QUIT

FEELING THAT THE SOUTH AFRICAN WAR WILL SOON BE OVER.

SEEK BEST TERMS OBTAINABLE

MR. KRUGER WILL ABANDON HIS DEMAND FOR INDEPENDENCE.

LEADERS ARE TIRED OF STRIFE

BRITISH CAPTURE A TROUBLESOME AND ENERGETIC LEADER.

London, Dec. 19.—A dispatch to the Daily News from Heidelberg, South Africa, says:

"The feeling here is that the war will soon be over. A number of Boer prisoners say that hostilities will cease Dec. 22. This is taken to indicate that the meeting of the Boer leaders to discuss the situation, which was called for Dec. 15, has been adjourned for a week, when a final decision will be reached."

During the last few days most persistent reports emanating both from South Africa and from Boer headquarters in Europe, of an approaching crisis in South African affairs, have been current. It is alleged that Mr. Kruger will abandon his demand for independence and that the Boer leaders in the field are inclined to cease fighting and seek the best terms obtainable.

KRITZINGER CAUGHT.

Kitchener Reports the Capture of Wounded Boer Officer.

London, Dec. 19.—Under date of Belfast, Dec. 17, Gen. Kitchener reports to the war office as follows: "French reports that Kritzinger was captured while attempting to cross the blockhouse line near Hanover road. He was severely wounded." Gen. Kitchener's weekly report shows 31 Boers killed, 7 wounded, 372 prisoners and 48 surrenders. He details the positions of the British columns, adding that the week's progress has been very satisfactory.

The capture of Commandant Fritzinger, who has been styled "The Dewet of Cape Colony," is regarded as very important. He has been a troublesome and energetic invader of Cape Colony, and is credited with more barbarities than any other commandant except Scheipers. In a recent proclamation he called himself the chief commandant of Cape Colony.

DARING MAIL ROBBERY.

Driver of a Wagon Is Knocked Down and Relieved of Mail.

St. Louis, Dec. 19.—A daring robbery of a pouch of United States registered mail occurred at an early hour last night at the doors of the old postoffice building at Third and Olive streets. Oscar Kelling, driver of a mail wagon, was knocked down with the butt end of revolvers by three men as he was leaving the building and relieved of a sack of registered mail which he was taking outside. So cleverly had the robbery been planned that the robbers succeeded in escaping with their booty before Kelling could give the alarm. At the time the lobby of the branch postoffice was crowded with people and the sidewalk thronged with men returning home from business. The exact value of the contents of the lost sack is not known.

KING OF SIAM OUR GUEST.

Senator Frye Wants Him Invited to Visit the United States.

Washington, Dec. 19.—Senator Frye yesterday introduced a joint resolution authorizing the president to invite the King of Siam to visit the United States. It sets forth in a preamble the fact that the king of Siam has made known to our minister at Bangkok his desire to visit the United States, and the resolution provides that he shall be invited to become the guest of the nation while here. An appropriation for his majesty's suitable entertainment is provided, but the sum is left blank for the present.

WORKING FOR HARMONY.

Labor Leaders and Capital Will Make a Practical Test.

New York, Dec. 19.—The conference between the leaders of labor and capital closed yesterday with a decision to give the plan to harmonize their divergent interests a practical test. It was unanimously agreed that the working details of the scheme shall be perfected by an executive committee of thirty-six to be chosen in equal numbers from the ranks of organized labor, the great industrial and financial leaders and such of the public not identified with either of the other two interests.

Rockefeller Ailing.

Tarrytown, N. Y., Dec. 19.—John D. Rockefeller was here yesterday, so changed that his friends scarcely recognized him. His health has suffered greatly. He attends to business, though he looks very weak.

TURNED THE HOSE ON HIM.

Troublesome Prisoner Given a Four-Hour Shower Bath.

Marshalltown, Iowa, Dec. 19.—Sheriff Binegar of Poweshiek county was attacked by a prisoner in the jail at Montezuma and found it necessary to discharge a shotgun in the direction of his assailant to save his life. He did not aim at the prisoner but came uncomfortably close. This, however, did not seem to deter his assailant. The sheriff and his deputy attached a hose to the hydrant and for four hours played it upon the obstreperous prisoner before he would obey. The man is being held for attempted murder of a neighbor during a quarrel over $2. He is a farmer named Gasho and will no doubt get a long term.

KILLED IN COLLISION.

Mail Clerk Loses His Life and Engineer Is Injured.

Marshalltown, Iowa, Dec. 19. — Milwaukee Passenger No. 3 and freight No. 62 collided head-on at Potter, a small station five miles west of Tama. Mail Clerk J. E. Carpenter of Columbus Junction was instantly killed and Engineer Ben Giles of Perry was severely injured. Seven passengers were slightly hurt. The trains met on a curve just east of the station. The engineer of the freight says the air brakes refused to work.

MORE THAN THEY ASKED.

Carnegie, the Library Man, Gives $15,000 to Red Wing.

Red Wing, Minn., Dec. 19.—Andrew Carnegie, through his private secretary, James Bertram, has offered the city of Red Wing $15,000 for a public library building provided the city furnishes a site and $1,500 annually for maintenance. The city now expends $1,300 annually. The library board asked Carnegie for $12,500. The offer will be accepted gladly.

POLICE CHIEF ACQUITTED.

Judge Holds Indictment Defective and Directs the Verdict.

Duluth, Minn., Dec. 19. — The case against Chief of Police Crandall, charged with malfeasance in office for issuing an order permitting saloons to be open between 1 and 8 p. m. on Sundays, came to a sudden end after the jury had been drawn, the court holding the indictment bad, and directing a verdict of not guilty.

BLOW WAS FATAL.

A Sioux City Saloonkeeper Kills a Man With His Fist.

Sioux City, Iowa, Dec. 19. — Frank Cain, owner of the Eagle saloon, Monday night knocked down Pat Maloney, a butcher of Armour's, because he was trying to buy drinks from the bartender without paying. Maloney died later. Cain has been arrested, charged with murder.

Physical Culture for Insane.

Des Moines, Iowa, Dec. 19.—An innovation in insane hospital methods in the West is being tried at the asylum at Mount Pleasant by Dr. Applegate, the new superintendent. He has employed an instructor in physical exercise, who is giving all the female inmates, about 450 in number, daily exercise in the amusement hall. They are brought into the hall in relays of fifty, and those willing to do so are given daily exercises.

Did Not Get Damages.

Crookston, Minn., Dec. 19.—In district court in the case of Vosler vs. Renfranz, the jury gave a verdict in favor of the defendant. The suit was for $13,500 for malicious prosecution. Frank Armstrong was sentenced to five years in the state penitentiary for the theft of goods from an East Grand Forks business house last year. Armstrong was recently apprehended in Milwaukee.

Schoolboy Frozen.

Albert Lea, Minn., Dec. 19. — While going from school one of the late cold days the seven-year-old son of Mrs. Crowe, who resides in Hartland, became overcome by the cold and when picked up was supposed to be dead, but was revived and is likely to recover. He was terribly frozen and it is expected his hands will have to be amputated.

Iowa's Dead at Vicksburg.

Des Moines, Iowa, Dec. 19.—An appropriation of $150,000 is asked of the state by the Iowa Vicksburg commission for the erection of a monument to the memory of the Iowa soldiers who fell at the siege of Vicksburg and battles incident thereto, and the erection of monuments to mark the location of the Iowa regiments during the siege.

Department Store Fails.

Monroe, Wis., Dec. 19.—J. D. Treat, as court receiver, is in possession of Samuel Kellner's department store. Liabilities are estimated at between $40,000 and $50,000, with assets of $25,000. Action was taken on petition of Chicago creditors.

NOTES ON SCIENCE.

CURRENT NOTES OF DISCOVERY AND INVENTION.

Col. John Jacob Astor Has an Improved Steam Turbine—The Rose Flash Boiler—Water Bag for the Head—Getting Rid of Mosquitoes.

ASTOR'S NEW STEAM TURBINE.

Col. John Jacob Astor has designed a new steam turbine which it is expected will be an improvement over the famous Parsons engine. The Scientific American gives the following account of the engine:

"The Astor turbine is distinguished broadly from the best known existing forms by the fact that it has no stationary parts other than the journals and foundation frames which carry it, the casing of the turbine revolving as well as the shaft, but in an opposite direction. The general construction of the motor consists of one interior shaft which extends from the forward journal through the rear propeller. Upon this shaft is formed a series of spiral blades, which have a steady increase in diameter from the forward or admission end of the turbine to the rear exhaust end. The shaft and blades rotate within a flaring, funnel shaped casing, around the inner surface of which is formed another series of spiral blades, also increasing in diameter, whose twist is in the opposite direction to that of the blades on the shaft, the two set of blades or vanes being respectively right and left handed. The tubular casing is drawn down at the exhaust end to form a hollow shaft, which incloses the central shaft, and extends through the deadwood and the sternpost. The propellers are right and left handed to match the direction of the blades of the respective shafts to which they are keyed, the two propellers thus rotating in opposite directions.

"The casing increases in diameter at the proper rate to secure an even rate of expansion of the steam, which is conducted from the exhaust through a length of piping formed in the keel of the launch, the keel thus being made to serve the purpose of a condenser. The condensed steam collects in a well from which it is drawn by the boiler feed pump. Steam is admitted to the forward end of the turbine, and, striking on the two set of blades, the shaft is rotated to the right and the outer movable casing to the left, the respective propellers being, of course, driven in corresponding directions."

THE ROSE FLASH BOILER.

This boiler is simple in the extreme; is indestructible and is made of sections fastened together with nipples, more or less of these being used according to the power desired.

Each section is provided with numerous heat collecting flanges and the sections are placed above the fire horizontally, in a manner to afford numerous small chimneys for the escape of the spent gases.

The sections are hollow and each contains a diaphragm and an amount of heat collecting and storing material, which construction gives a very large outside heat collecting area.

The method of feeding the water to the boiler is claimed to be the most simple ever used, is entirely automatic and provides absolute safety.

A small quantity of water is carried in a closed tank in which is maintained an air pressure equal to the steam pressure desired, either by the pumping of the air for low or ordinary purposes or by pumping the water against an air cushion for high pressures. There is an open passage between this tank and the boiler, permitting the passage of the water in either direction.

The fuel supply is so arranged that at the pre-determined temperature, it is furnished to or withheld from the burner, and is entirely automatic in its operation, so that after the fire is once started, all that is necessary to operate the whole equipment of the automobile is to open or close the throttle valve on the engine.

With such an outfit, it is unnecessary to carry the tremendous steam pressures as are now being used on automobile boilers, as with this, temperature does not depend upon pressure. In the ordinary boiler, 285.3 pounds of steam pressure is required to furnish steam of a temperature of 417.5 degrees. With the device described, this same temperature or even a much higher one can be had with 50 pounds of steam, or in fact any pressure. With this boiler, all of the water used is turned into steam, and not wasted by blowing out in the exhaust, after fuel has been used to heat it.

APPLICATION OF ELECTRICITY.

Several interesting articles and data regarding the wide application which the electric motor has attained have been compiled by the Electrical World and Engineer. A special study has been made of the busy little state of Massachusetts, where it is shown that 6,318 motors are delivering nearly 30,000 horse power to an endless variety of industries. Just about half of all this is in Boston, which has 560,892 inhabitants, while the rest of the state has about 2,200,000, a striking evidence as to modern tendencies. The size of motors has increased from two and a half horse power in 1887, to four and a half in 1900. All this work is done from lighting and power circuits fed with current from central stations, and does not include isolated motor plants, which it is said would add many thousand horse-power to the total.

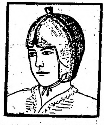
The plant in the Brooklyn Navy Yard, which of late has adopted electricity on a large scale, is described. It appears that the plant replacing steam in the carpenter's shops is giving the same power for about one-third of the total consumption and is saving in labor about $6.60 daily.

A large Canadian cement works to have a capacity of 2,000 barrels a day is to be operated by electric power.

While all such work may have much to do with the high price of copper, the fact comes out that aluminum for electrical work is coming into great vogue in this country. It is being used extensively for power transmission circuits and electric tramway feeders, and a switchboard is in use which is said to be the first to have aluminum bus bars.

WATER BAG FOR THE HEAD.

Did you ever hear of a water bag for the head? Here is one, and the inventor of it is a woman, Stella Rowe, of Cincinnati, Ohio. The bag is shaped like a hood, is tied under the chin of the wearer and has an opening at the top, into which water, hot or cold, is poured. If you happen to have a headache you will want ice water, but something else may be the trouble and hot water will serve the purpose better. It is an easy way of applying hot or cold compresses to the head, and, the bag being divided into compartments, only one or two of them may be filled, if preferred.



SILK FROM SPIDERS.

M. Cachet, a French savant, who has been experimenting with the object of finding spiders that would furnish silk for fabrics, with the expectation of being able to discover a number of species that would answer his purpose, it is stated, has met with disappointment, and that thus far the Madagascar spider seems to be the only one upon which any dependence can be placed. Attempts to use the cocoons of these he abandoned after a year's trial. At the factory in Paris the silk is taken directly from the spiders, which are placed in separate boxes on a shelf above the machine. The strands are conducted carefully by hand to the spindle, which twists them into a thread. Sometimes as many as thirty-six strands are required for one thread. When the silk of a spider is exhausted it is removed and specially fed for a new supply. The operation does not appear to affect their health.

GETTING RID OF MOSQUITOES.

It may be something of a consolation to germ-seeking Americans to know that theirs is not the only mosquito-bitten country on the face of the globe.

The Japanese, says the New York Herald, is as subject to stinging retorts from these pests as we are, and, though they long ago adopted the mosquito netting, no well-regulated Jap ever thinks of crawling under it without his mosquito lamp, trimmed and burning.

The lamp, which is usually of burnished metal, looks at first sight like a small bicycle lamp, except that it has a small handle, and the "bull's eye" and the "chimney" are open to the air.

When the little wick is afire, the Jap cautiously approaches his singing prey, and presto! he disappears like magic. He has been drawn into the lamp with the draught created by the heat and cremated.

PHOTOGRAPHS OF BIRDS.

An English naturalist, Mr. R. B. Lodge, has succeeded in making birds furnish him with their photographs while in the act of alighting on their nests. The birds experimented with were the purple heron and the spoonbill, but the process is applicable for many other species. It consists simply in fixing a camera near the nest, properly focused, with the shutter on the catch, and a string arranged in such a manner that the bird on reaching its nest cannot avoid setting off the catch. Such photographs are more than mere curiosities, as they help reveal the habits of the birds.—Youth's Companion.

Durability of Cypress Wood.

Sections of old water pipes of cypress that had been underground and in use for nearly a century were recently exhumed at New Orleans, and to the surprise of all the wood was perfectly preserved and as hard as when laid. They were part of the first water works system of the city, and it is thought the wood was from trees 100 years old when laid.

HER LITTLE OVERSIGHT.

A certain lawyer employs a stenographer who has the most wonderful collars and the most elaborate pompadour in all the business world. She has a personal theory of punctuation and her spelling is marked with an engaging originality, but she's so even-tempered that only an absurdly carping person would take notice of such eccentricities. One day she laid before her employer a neatly typed letter to a southern correspondent. Before signing it he glanced over it.

"See here," he said, "you've spelled sugar 'suggar.'"

The typewriter glanced at the sheet and smiled.

"Dear me," said she, "how careless of me! Why, I've left out the 'h.'"

HER SUCCESSFUL SCHEME.

"It seems to me," he remarked casually, "that you have succeeded in cutting down the household expenses a little recently."

"Yes," she replied, "I am saving something on the wages of the servant. You see I made a rule that the value of everything she broke should be deducted from her wages, and as matters now stand she will have to work four weeks for nothing to clear up her indebtedness."—Chicago Post.

WAS NOT.

Li Hung Chang visited Philadelphia on Sept. 3, 1896, when Charles F. Warwick was mayor. The procession started down Broad street. It was soon after this that Mayor Warwick, pointing to the crowds which lined the streets, said:

"Your Excellency, Philadelphia is famous for its beautiful women."

Li was quiet a few minutes and then made the famous reply:

"I have not seen any yet."

THOUGHT HE WAS SAFE.

Frank's grandmother had some fruit spread out in her yard to dry, and the boy couldn't resist the temptation to take some of it. A neighbor saw him and told his grandmother, who called the young man up for a lecture.

Analyzing a Meteor

Results of an Examination by a Government Expert.

Prof. George P. Merrill, curator of the department of geology of the National Museum, who is engaged in making a chemical analysis of the specimen known as Ardmore meteorite, has recently issued a statement concerning a stony meteorite which fell near Felix, Perry county, Ala., on May 15, 1900, says the Washington Times. This meteorite has many points of resemblance to the Ardmore meteorite, which latter stone contains an element so difficult of classification as to lead many scientists to believe that Prof. Merrill is on the point of discovering a new mineral. Prof. Merrill, however, does not share this belief, thinking that under further examination the baffling constituent will prove to be a known quantity. For the details concerning the fall of the Alabama meteor, as well as for securing the specimen itself, the National Museum is indebted to J. W. Coleman, who visited the locality and obtained the statements of eye witnesses. Prof. Merrill describes the general appearance of the state as follows: "So far as can be learned—a part of the information being obtained by Mr. Coleman from negroes—the stone at the time of the explosion broke into three pieces, the largest of which was the one brought to Mr. Sturdevant, and is said to have originally weighed about seven pounds, as already noted. Another small piece was found, but has disappeared, and the third, if such there was, was never found. The stone, as obtained by Mr. Coleman, was broken into five pieces, which weighed altogether 2,049 grams. It is about thirteen centimeters in its greatest length by nine in breadth, and about the same thickness, and was covered, except where broken, by a very thin black crust, nowhere more than half a millimeter in thickness. The color on the broken surfaces is dark smoky gray, almost black. It is very fine grained, with numerous small dark chondrules, not more than one or two millimeters in diameter at most, and with no metallic iron visible to the naked eye. The mass is quite soft and friable, and resembles in a general way the stones of Warrenton, Warren county, Mo., and Lance, France, more closely than those of any locality with which the author is acquainted. The color is, however, darker than is the Warren county stone, and the chondritic structure more pronounced than in that of Lance. It is, moreover, uniformly gray in color, and not speckled with white, as is the last named. Under the microscope the stone is seen at once to belong to the chondritic type, as is indeed evident on close inspection by the naked eye. The essential minerals are olivine, augite and enstatite, with troilite and native iron, the silicates occurring in the form of chondrules or associated in more or less fragmental particles, embedded in a dark, opaque or faintly translucent base, which is irresolvable, so far as the microscope is concerned. The structure is pronouncedly fragmental, and the stone belongs beyond question to the group of tuffs."

After a careful and minute investigation into the microscopic structure of the specimen Prof. Merrill determined the mineralogical composition to be as follows: Metal, 3.04 per cent; troilite, 4.76; chromite, 1.17; graphite, 0.36; soluble silicate (olivine in part), 72.60; insoluble silicate (enstatite and augite in part), 18.07.

RABBIT HUNTING AS SPORT

Ex-Australian Tells How It Is Carried On in the Antipodes

"If you want an exciting occupation, one that will give you plenty of exercise and will keep you busy all the time you are at it," said the ex-Australian, who is now a resident of Detroit, "just go to south Australia and hunt rabbits. They are the greatest pests with which a country was ever afflicted, and many fine farms have been ruined by their depredations. They breed so rapidly that extermination seems to be out of the question. The government pays a bounty of three pence a tail and six pence a scalp for rabbits, and regular parties are formed to hunt for them.

"As many as 600 rabbits have been found in one burrow. You can have cartridges to shoot all day from the same spot in some localities, and the rabbits will seemingly be as thick as ever at nightfall. They hatch every four weeks, and there are from twelve to sixteen in a hatching. The young ones are ready to hatch in two months' time.

"The popular way of hunting the rabbits is to herd them into a netting and then twist their necks. From 1,000 to 2,000 are rounded up in these expeditions.

"Another interesting phase of life in Australia is the hunting of the kangaroo. Staghounds are used for this purpose. The kangaroos cover a good deal of ground when pursued, but they are no judge of distance. Often when leaping they will land right in the middle of a wire fence, and then their capture is easy. They will fight like fiends when cornered, and I have seen a fierce battle between them and the hounds. Kangaroos weigh as high as 240 pounds. Under ordinary circumstances they are docile, and many families in Australia use them as pets, the same as Americans like to have dogs and cats around the premises."—Detroit Free Press.

RAILROADS IN AFRICA

SPREAD OF CIVILIZATION IN THE NORTHERN SAHARA

The railroad which France extended, some years ago, through western Algeria, from the seaport of Oran to the town of Ain-Safra, on the southern border of that colony, is now being steadily pushed southward into the desert. The road was built to Ain-Safra because that town occupies one of the numerous breaches in the southern mountain ranges leading to the Sahara and is therefore favorably situated for the extension of a railroad into the desert. Ain-Safra is 3,570 feet above the sea and lies on the Saharan slope, its oasis being watered by a perennial stream which flows east to the Wady Namus, whose waters flow straight south into the Sahara.

The railroad, therefore, has been pushed eastward along the valley of the stream that gives life to Ain-Safra; having reached the Wady Namus, track-laying has been extended southward through its valley. Stations have been established at the Arab towns of Tiut, Moghrar and Djemen bou Resg, where all trains stop. Six more stations will be established along the route.

The road is to push some hundreds of miles southwest to the oasis of Tuat, which is now in the possession of the French. Several postoffices have already been established in oases on the way to Tuat. Until within a few years only a few European travelers had penetrated to this isolated Mohammedan community. The natives raise good crops of wheat, barley, cotton and other articles which they require, including an abundant supply of vegetables. France is thus using the new railroad to establish its influence in parts of the northern Sahara, to which, five years ago, scarcely any European influence had penetrated.

Expense of Entertaining Royalty.

Entertaining royalty is an expensive operation. That little visit of the Czar to France has cost the republic a pretty penny. Special messengers were sent to invite him at a cost of $5,000, and $60,000 was spent in cleaning up Dunkirk, where he was to land, and putting it in a presentable shape. For electric crowns and things the government spend $10,000 besides what the people spent on decorations, and the government also erected triumphal arches at a cost of $50,000 and spent $5,000 for flags.

Then there were 5,000 picked troops to be got ready, besides the regular review troops. These picked troops were specially trained, drilled and quartered for over six weeks at a cost of $100,000, and 25 military bands were put down in the estimates at a cost for food and extra expenses of $100,000. The naval review held for the delectation of the Czar cost $250,000, the item for coal alone being $100,000. In saluting, powder to the value of $35,000 was burned and the cost of guarding the Czar was estimated at $40,000. On housing and feeding him and his suite the sum of $50,000 was spent, and there was an extra appropriation of $40,000 for "sundries."

The newest thing in boas is reported from Monte Carlo, where a Mrs. Richard De Bromeley Richards, an English woman, appears for her promenade with a live black and white ouistiti sitting on her shoulder, with its long and bushy tail turned snugly around her throat. An ouistiti is a small monkey, the principal part of which is the tail.

FOR WOMEN AND HOME

ITEMS OF INTEREST FOR MAIDS AND MATRONS.

Attractive Materials for Tea Gowns—Severe Styles Going Out of Fashion—Some Fetching Novelties for Fair Ones.

MATERIAL FOR TEA GOWNS.

Women, both old and young, are attractive in tea gowns. Now that the princess and empire effect are so much in vogue many of the most elaborate gowns are built on these lines, and they do service for afternoon frocks at home. These becoming toilets are built of a great variety of fabrics, and everything from crepe de chine and lace to broadcloth is employed for their construction. Panne is used perforated in some design and outlined with embroidery, a contrasting color used for the foundation. Broadcloth trimmed with fur and lace constitutes a beautiful tea gown. It is cut princess, the fabric of biscuit colored cloth, is outlined with sable, and a lace bolero is also edged with a narrow binding of the fur, which gives it a chic touch. A model of yellow panne is cut empire, a border of perforated design runs down one side of the front and about the bottom and shows a foundation of white satin at the bottom of the hem is a narrow band of mink. The short waist is finished with a folded belt of white liberty satin, which has sash ends in front, fringed, and it fastens with a large, old silver buckle, set with yellow topaz. The neck is cut V shape and finished with a deep shoulder collar of old lace. Dainty gowns are made of lace and ribbon and hung over foundations of silk the same color as the ribbon. Cashmere makes an attractive tea gown, and when the light shades are used it is well to bind the bottom with black silk or ribbon to keep it clean. A model that lends itself well to a cashmere negligee is laid in plaits in the back to form a yoke. Plaits also appear on the front, which is double-breasted and fasten with a shawl rever, which is faced with either silk or velvet. Both short and long jackets are also modish worn with silk petticoats of the same shade and same material if possible.

SEVERE STYLES GOING OUT.

The severe tailor made cloth gown does not predominate as in former years. This style is now relegated to the walking costumes, which are made short and are used in the morning and for shopping. The tailor finish is required on all gowns more than ever, but so much adornment in the way of fancy stitching, elaborate embroidery and intricate braiding is now fashionable that the old regulation "tailor-made" can scarcely be recognized in these rich and graceful "creations," which are suitable for the afternoon promenade and at all times when a carriage is used. This attractive tailor-made fall costume intended for street wear is of tan cheviot, elaborately stitched and braided. The Eton coat is made to close in front and is trimmed with a fancy braid. The collar is of tan panne velvet. The skirt is plain with stitched seams and has a circular flounce added with several rows of stitching. Corticelli stitching silk, size D, is a very good silk and is generally used by the largest dressmakers for this purpose.

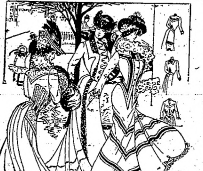
HINTS AS TO STAIR CARPETS.

When buying stair carpets always allow three-quarters to a yard over for each flight of stairs, and then when you lift the carpet the same parts do not come on the edge of the stairs. By remembering this plan and allowing the extra piece the carpets will last half as long again as they would otherwise do.



Suit of dark red broadcloth, trimmed with panne velvet the same shade.

Suit of tan cloth, with trimmings of golden brown uncut velvet; also trimmed with bands of the cloth stitched.

Black broadcloth suit, with band of black satin laid on bands of white cloth, set in and stiched. Gray feather boa and black hat, with trimmings of white.

SOME FETCHING NOVELTIES.

Next to velvets, satin-faced broadcloths rank in favor. Panne velvet, stitched, is much liked as a trimming for costumes of broadcloth. Whipcords, zibelines, camel's hair, worsted burlaps, Venetian cloth, mixed cheviots and serges are also used for street gowns. Louisine and novelty silks are taking the place of foulards for the fall season. The up-to-date girl has now replaced her summer shirt waists with one or two of velveteen. A pretty model is of black velveteen with embroidered polka dots in white. The edge of the diagonal flap down the front is stitched with white Corticelli stitching silk, which is put up on quarter ounce spools and comes in all colors to match the latest dress goods. The high stock is of velveteen with turn over collar and narrow tie of black taffeta stitched in white.

LACE-LORE.

Lace proper only dates back to the sixteenth century, and may be divided into two classes, needlepoint, and that which is produced by interweaving threads with bobbins on a pillow.

Needle point represents the transition phase between embroidery on fine linen and the making of lace as a separate and valuable fabric, in which both the ornament and the groundwork are produced by the worker.

The great impetus to lace-making in France, and the Low Countries was given by Colbert, the famous minister of Louis Quatorze, who realized that the prosperity of the country depended very much on the small paying industries that the lower and middle classes can produce in their own homes.

The Revolution checked the lace making trade, but Napoleon, with his empresses Josephine and Marie Louise, sought to revive it.

Chantilly lace, if genuine, never dates back further than the seventeenth century, and black silk chantilly is all of the eighteenth, and later.

Among the best known laces in England are Honiton, Northants, Bedford and Buckinghamshire varieties. Needlerun laces are occasionally made in small quantities in several counties.

This season Irish lace is in the ascendancy. The chief Irish laces are needlepoints of more or less beauty, principally made in convents, at Youghal, New Ross, and Kinmare; and after these Carrickmacross and Limerick, and the modern crochet and tatting.

The Old Dame School.

It is amusing in these school board days to come upon reminiscences of the old dame's schools. In my mother's little country parish the kindly old dame who taught the village children to read did not trouble herself much about the long words, says a writer in Good Words. When a word came that neither she nor her pupils could quite master, she would say: "Call it Nebuchadnezzar and pass on." But needlework was well taught in those days. One of the most beautiful workers I knew told me how, at the dame's school, to which she went as a child, she was set to hem round the crown of a baby's cap. (Busy mothers may, indeed, be thankful that these small articles of apparel are now obsolete.) To do this perfectly is no easy matter. Time after time the narrow hem, which refused to come even, was cut off, till at last the little circle was about the size of a penny; but the result of that teaching was admirable.

A Blacksmith's Story.

Goodland, Kans., Dec. 23.—N. E. Albertson, a local blacksmith, had almost decided to give up his shop altogether on account of Rheumatism, which had crippled him so that at times he could not use his hammer.

His shoulders and arms were so sore that he couldn't sleep at night. He had suffered for years, but was gradually getting worse, till at last he had about made up his mind to give up. But just then he heard of some wonderful cures of Rheumatism by Dodd's Kidney Pills, and thought he would try for a cure once more.

They cured him completely, and he has not a trace of Rheumatism left. The shop will not be given up, and Mr. Albertson may be seen there any day hard at work as if nothing had ever ailed him.

ABOUT MONUMENTAL BRASSES.

Practice of Having Effigies Made Originated About the Beginning of the Thirteenth Century

At the beginning of the thirteenth century it occurred to some one to preserve the likeness of his departed friend as well as the symbols of his rank and station. So effigies were introduced upon the surface of the slabs, and were carved flat; but ere fifty years had passed away the art of the sculptor produced magnificent monumental effigies. Knights and nobles he clad in armor, and abbots bless the spectators with their uplifted right hands; judges lie in their official garb; and merchants with emblems of their trade. At their feet lie animals, usually having some heraldic connection with the deceased, or symbolical of his work; e. g., a dragon is trodden down beneath the feet of a bishop, signifying the defeat of sin as the result of his ministry. The heads of effigies usually rest on cushions, which are sometimes supported by two angels.—Gentleman's Magazine.

The Cabinet Not Quite Easy.

While the relations between the president and members of his cabinet do not appear to be the least bit strained, it is not difficult to appreciate the fact that the same conditions do not exist in the cabinet room now which prevailed during the McKinley administration. There is no lack of friendly feeling or party loyalty, but there seems to be an indefinable something in the actions of the members of the cabinet which indicates an uneasiness, an unrest or an overcautiousness, which was not so perceptible six months ago. Under their former chief, members of the cabinet would enter the White House on cabinet days laughing and chatting together in the most free-and-easy manner. Now they approach the cabinet table solemn and deliberate, suggesting a group of previously-merry school boys trying to make a dignified impression on a new master.—Correspondence Charleston News and Courier.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of Testimonials.

Tommie's Reason.

"What are you going to be when you grow up?" asked Tommie's teacher.

"I'm going to be a school teacher," replied Tommie, promptly.

"That is a very worthy ambition," replied the teacher. "Why have you decided to be a school teacher?"

"Because," answered Tommie, "it must be an offul lot uv fun ter not have ter do nuthin' 'cept watch a lot uv us eezy marks work themselves ter deth."—Ohio State Journal.

First Submarine Cable.

The first submarine cable was laid across the English Channel about fifty years ago. It was also about the same time that Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, the world-renowned dyspepsia cure, was first introduced to the public. If you are a sufferer from this ailment, or from indigestion, flatulency, constipation, nervousness or insomnia, you should try it at once, if you would be well. The genuine must have our Private Die Stamp over the neck of the bottle.

A Little More Coal in England.

Coal, "good, household coal," seems to have been found in Kent, at last. A "core" brought up from the boring in Shakespeare Cliff showed large fragments of "good, bright bituminous household coal," and on another boring a second seam has been discovered. The experts are said to be delighted, and to believe that they have struck the deposit which runs down through Wales, under the channel, across France and into Westphalia. The pecuniary interests involved in such finds are so large that we always distrust first accounts, but in this instance the details given read true, and, of course, if they are true, and if the expense of working under the sea proves manageable, the event is of national importance. Coal on the spot is the grand need of the South, and every addition to our supply postpones the day when manufacturers must either put out their fires or rely exclusively upon electricity obtained from the river gorges, or, possibly, from the use of the tides, as a source of power.—Spectator.

THE NEWS,

By John W. Eastman.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY.

All who favor a better system of schools in Thief River Falls should not fail to attend the special school election Saturday evening and vote for the bonds. Nothing advertises a town better than good schools.

The best edition of a newspaper ever published in Red Lake county was the Christmas edition of the Courier. John E. King, the publisher, is a hustler, and is being given good support by the business men of Red Lake Falls.

The city of Thief River Falls, in the opinion of the News is making a great mistake in not sending a representative to Washington at once to confer with Secretary Hitchcock in regard to the matter of having an inspector sent here at once to make the treaty with the Indians for the ceeding of the land adjoining the city. A personal representative of the city would accomplish more than anything else possibly could.

Town Tales.

Percy Vibert was in the city last week.

Alex Thompson was up from Crookston last week.

L. G. Browning was down to Crookston last week.

Sex Bulman was down from the Red lake last week.

John Meyers has returned from his trip to Manitoba.

Gus Schmidt came up from Crookston last week.

John Sorum was in from Rollis the first of the week.

O. J. Knox went to St. Paul last Friday on business.

Rooms for rent over Jackson Bailey's hardware store.

Milton Forder came down from Rollis to spend Christmas.

Wm. Pelkey was in from Germantown the first of the week.

Wm. Wilson left Tuesday for Lake City to spend the holidays.

Will Kratka, of the Crookston Times, spent Christmas in the city.

N. K. Nelson, the well known Liner settler, was in the city Monday.

A. Stenseth left today for Crookston and Red Lake Falls on business.

Martin Olson, the hotel keeper of Germantown was in the city Monday.

Ben Hockings leaves in a short time for the west to look over the country.

Mons Kickhouse, the Red lake homesteader, is in the city for a few days.

F. G. Peterson arrived in the city the first of the week from Montana.

County Superintendent of Schools Jeffers was in the city last week.

O. J. Rollis was up to the town of Rollis the first of the week on business.

C. L. Dobner, James Meehan and Mayor Kratka left today for Crookston.

H. W. Lee has removed his office to the building east of the First State bank.

S. V. Bailey has been confined to his home by sickness during the past two weeks.

Mrs. F. H. and Miss Daisy Kratka have returned from their trip to Minneapolis.

A. Krauf was in from Moose River the first of the week renewing his acquaintance here.

Presiding Elder Dodds will preach at the M. E. Church morning and evening Sunday 29th.

James Meehan and Stenseth now have their office in the building formerly occupied by F. Hibner.

Dr. Grundy was up to East Valley last Saturday to attend to a case of small pox in that town.

Capt. Vining is down from his claim in the Red lake country to spend the holidays with his family.

Santa Claus left the largest part of his load with us for distribution and we are glad to wait on all our customers and give each one his share. Come early in the morning because the rest of the day our time is too much taken up to wait on everybody.

Our Jewelry department has many fine Xmas gifts.

The New Drug Store.

John Vorachek, accompanied by his wife and daughter, left the first of the week for Conway, N. D., to spend the holidays.

A seven pound daughter was born to Mr. and Mrs. Fred G. Wells, of Crookston, former residents of this city, Dec. 20th.

John Hanson, who has been the efficient tinner for Jackson & Bailey, left the first of the week for Colorado for his health.

Rev. W. Allen Sterling was in the city to spend Sunday. He left Tuesday for Beltrami where his home will be in the future.

Chris Amundson arrived in the city last Friday from his claim in the Red lake county and departed again from St. Paul the first of the week.

L. G. Browning, United States commissioner for the district of Minnesota, is prepared to give attention to homestead filings and take final proof.

The issue in the next campaign in Polk county will be whether or not the judge of probate's office will be removed from the basement to the ground floor.

J. M. Clark was in the city last week and purchased 240 acres of land of the Northern Real Estate and Mortgage company. He will remove here in the spring.

Henry Sierts, John Philipp, Louis Hanson, E. J. Peterson and Hans Verdick were among those who represented Germantown in in Thief River Falls Monday.

Leo Kulinski, who will be Mayor Kratka's chief of police, has sent to Chicago for a uniform. Leo is determined to be one of the finest if clothes will do it.

While at work in his office at Red Lake Falls last Wednesday, Judge of Probate Knight suffered an attack of paralysis. His recovery, however, is only a matter of time.

W. C. Smiley left today for Crookston and Grand Forks where he will circulate a petition to congress asking that a government dam be built at the outlet of the Red lake.

The ball to be given by the Library society New Years eve promises to be the social event of the season. At present a large number of tickets have been sold and the attendance will be large.

Postmater Richardson put in a new section of lock boxes in the postoffice the first of the week which greatly adds to the convenience of the office. The office now has a total of 163 lock boxes.

Attorney Hibner, having become convinced that Municipal Judge Tarrant would not give him a fair show, has removed to Fargo, N. D. He promises to return in four years from now, however.

K. J. Weeks on Tuesday purchased of Ben Hockings the house and lot north of Stebbins' drug store and a house and lot south of the Cleveland hotel. Mr. Weeks will build a business block upon the property north of Stebbins in the spring.

County Commissioner Hanson was down to Red Lake Falls the first of the week to attend a meeting of the county commissioner. The meeting was for the purpose of making a special tax levy to pay a portion of the Polk county indebtedness.

They have been having some very hotly contested cases for claims in the town of Rollis, and a great deal of feeling exists among the people up there. Milton Forder, of Rollis, is acting as attorney for the contestants, while the contestees have employed Judge Grindeland of Warren. All of last week was consumed in taking testimony.

The city schools closed last Friday for a two weeks vacation and the teachers are spending their vacations at the following places: Miss Frank at Warren, Miss McMurchie at Fargo, N. D., Prof. Tisdale at St. Thomas, N. D., Miss Livingston and Miss Phillips at Minneapolis, Miss McGrath at Winona, Miss Miller at Long Prairie, Miss Curran at Eau Clair, Wis., Supt. Wilson and Miss Wilson at St. Paul and Lake City.

For a good turnout go to Joe Ryson's livery stable.

"A Swindel" is the name that appears over the office door of a struggling lawyer in the city of Stratford, Ont. A friend of the unfortunate gentleman suggested the advisability of his writing out his first name in full, thinking that Arthur or Andrew Swindle, as the case might be, would sound better and look better than the significant "A. Swindler." When the lawyer, with tears in his eyes, whispered to him that his name was Adam, the friend understood and was silent.

The City Drug and Jewelry Store wish all a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year.

NEW SCHOOL

People Vote Bonds for an $18000 Building.

Men and women to the number of 298 gathered at the city hall last Saturday evening between the hours of 7:30 and 8:30 o'clock, and voted to bond Independent School District No. 18 to the amount of $18000 for the purpose of building an eight-room brick school house on block 65 of the original townsite of Thief River Falls. The vote was 200 bonds to 90 against eight of the ballots being thrown out for defects by the judges.

The election was quite a spirited one, and the friends of the high school feel that they won a great victory. The crowd in the room was so large that people were pushed up against the stove, knocking it over. This had the result of filling the room with smoke, but nothing serious happened. It was generally understood that it required a two-thirds majority to vote bonds. This however was wrong as only a majority is needed to vote school bonds, although the proposition carried by more than two-thirds majority.

Locked Horns in Death Embrace.

Blackduck Times: This week two deer were found by Mr. Hodgman, close to J. D. Durrin's place near Mizpah. The two big bucks had been fighting, and their horns were locked. One deer was dead when found, and the other was dying. A third deer had horned one of the two that was fighting, causing its death. The bucks were six and seven years old.

An Oklahoma paper tells of a farmer who went to town and thought he would attend the opera. He went up to the ticket window and planking down a $5 gold piece asked for a good seat. The show was the "Forty Thieves." The ticket agent shoved out a ticket and a dollar in change. Picking up the dollar the farmer started out of the building. "Hold on!" called the ticket seller, "you've forgotten your ticket." "Keep it, dern yer," replied the farmer, "I don't care to see the other thirty-nine.

A NEW DEAL.

Tribal Relations With the Indians to Be Stopped.

A special to the Pioneer Press from Washington says that William A. Jones, commissioner of Indian affairs, is to inaugurate an inquiry which is the first step in the direction of putting into effect his policy, recently announced, designed to make the Indians of the United States self-supporting. Commissioner Jones has frequently expressed the opinion that the present Indian policy has many serious defects, and it contains nothing to impress upon the mind of the red man that he must think act and work for himself.

In accordance with the idea, a circular letter was addressed to Indian officials in various parts of the United States, copies of which were sent to the agencies in Wisconsin, Minnesota and the Dakotas calling for data as to the number of Indians on the various reservations living on allotments, and who in the opinion of the officials, are sufficiently advanced in civilization to administer their own affairs. This information is to be utilized by the commissioner of Indian affairs in making a readjustment of the land and financial matters of the Indian tribes.

It is the first step in the direction of abandoning cash annuities. It is proposed that the tribal funds shall be dissolved as such, and that the money in the United States treasury to the credit of the various tribes shall be transferred to the individual members. At present, moneys to the credit of the Indians in the treasury are the common property of the tribe. The commissioner proposes that these funds shall be credited to the individuals, and when each person is considered competent to manage his own affairs that his share shall be paid to him, and the annual annuity thus discontinued. Further, that money or allotments belonging to a deceased Indian shall be the property of his heirs, instead of going to the tribe, as under present conditions. This policy is designed to break up the tribal relations, and Commissioner Jones is confident it will accomplish that purpose.

21 YEARS.

Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Robbecke Celebrate an Anniversary.

Last Saturday evening was the twenty-first anniversary of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Robbecke and a number of friends commemorated the event with them that evening. Card playing and dancing was the amusement and a bountiful lunch was served.

Mr. and Mrs. Robbecke are among the first settlers of this section, coming here before the townsite of Thief River Falls was platted, and they are held in very high esteem by a large circle of friends. The guests presented them with a handsome divan.

Creameries Pay.

Inasmuch as the farmers west of here are interested in starting a creamery they also may be interested in knowing how these institutions pay. The following taken from the Granada Journal explains itself.

"Don't kick the cow even if feed is high. Here is an item that should interest those prone to complain. For the month of November from the milk of 18 cows J. P. Jenson received a creamery check for $72.15, about $3.50 per day, and J. P. says that the calves pay for the feed that the cows eat. Mr. Wordleman cashed in $55 and Fred Garrison and Wm. Oliver's cows paid nearly $5 per head for November."

To Sell Farm Machinery.

William A. Murphy, of Red Lake Falls, who for a number of years has been employed in this section as a collector for the Plano Machine company, has decided to engage in business for himself in Thief River Falls. He has rented the Bauman building of Wiley Tindolph and will sell all kinds of farm machinery. As Thief River Falls is surrounded by a good farming county, this business has always been a profitable one here.

To Be a Banker.

Horace Bagley will in a short time sever his connection with the law firm of Bagley & Mabey and go to Bottineau county, N. D., where in connection with his uncle he will engage in banking. Mr. Bagley has made a large number of friends since coming to this city and all will regret his departure.

A BIG TIME.

Public Installation of Officers Next Thursday.

The members of the Modern Woodmen of America and the Royal Neighbors in Thief River Falls are making preparations for a public installation of offices on next Thursday evening, Jan. 9. The installation will be followed by a grand dance, and it is the intention to make it the event of the season. Deputy Supreme Oracle Josie Briggs will in install the Royal Neighbor offices, while District Deputy Mickelson, of this city, will install the Woodmen.

BIG MEETING.

W. C. Smiley Is Doing Some Good Work.

W. C. Smiley, secretary of the Thief River Falls Commercial Club, held a big meeting in Crookston Saturday evening which was attended by all the leading business men, and resolutions were passed favoring the construction of a dam at the outlet of the Red lake. Grand Forks, Red Lake Falls and St. Hilaire also have been visited by Mr. Smiley and all the prominent business men signed his petition.

A GOOD THING.

Farmers Want Sanders Ditch Extended North

A number of farmers living in the town of Norden and Numedal are extremely anxious to have the St. Hilaire—Sanders ditch, which was built two years ago extended further north and have petitioned the county commissioners to that effect. This ditch is one of the best in the county and has done a great deal of good. If it is extended further north it usefulness will be further increased.

DALY KILLED

Was Well Known in Thief River Falls.

The following dispatch taken from the St. Paul Dispatch will be of interest to Thief River Falls people.

Grand Rapids, Wis., Dec. 30.—John Daly, the wealthy lumberman of this city, who was seriously injured in a runaway at Dancy yesterday morning, died at his home here last night without regaining consciousness.

Mr. Daly is perhaps one of the best known lumbermen of Northern Wisconsin and Michigan, having been engaged in the business for fully thirty-five years, and has always been engaged in the many business enterprises of this part of the state. He was a member of the Grand Rapids Lumber company of this city, and a heavy stockholder in many of the paper and pulp mills located in the Wisconsin river valley.

Mr. Daly was at one time a stockholder in Thief River Falls Lumber company and has been in Thief River Falls a number of times. He was a business partner of John O'Day.

WAR OF THE RACES

TWO MEN KILLED IN A GENERAL FIGHT BETWEEN WHITES AND BLACKS.

PEACEMAKER MEETS HIS DEATH

WHITE MAN ADVISED NEGROES TO QUIT FIGHTING AND WAS SHOT.

QUARREL ABOUT A CRAP GAME

QUICK ACTION OF CITIZENS PREVENTS A SERIOUS RACE RIOT.

Birmingham, Ala., Dec. 28.—In a general fight between white men and negroes at Childersburg yesterday afternoon a white man and his son were killed, while a white boy and one negro were wounded. The negroes are now in jail at Talladega.

The trouble grew out of a crap game, the negroes having quarreled over the winnings. Tom Holley shot at one of the party, when J. Bird, a white man, came up and advised the negroes to stop fighting. Holley, becoming angered at the interference, fired on Bird, mortally wounding him. Bird's two sons rushed to his side, and one of them shot the negro Holley, inflicting a fatal wound. By this time the negroes were firing on both boys and they began to seek shelter. Reuben Bird went to his father, who was dying, and was ordered by George Woods, a negro, to run. The boy begged to remain by his father, and on failure to move, was shot dead. Charner Woods, father of George Woods, then shot the elder Bird again. George Bird was shot in the legs while escaping. A large crowd of whites quickly gathered and surrounding the negroes, captured them all and took them to Talladega. For a while it seemed as if a race riot would result, but the quick action of conservative citizens prevented an outbreak.

WIRELESS FOR THE NAVY.

Marconi's System Will Be Tried on Warships.

Washington, Dec. 28.—The navy department has taken the initial steps toward the adoption of wireless telegraphy as a means of signalling between warships at sea. To this end Admiral Bradford, of the bureau of equipments, has asked that the armored cruisers of the Pennsylvania class have their masts and rigging so arranged that the wireless system can be introduced. This will necessitate the lengthening of the masts of the ships and the insulation of the metal rigging by the use of hemp covering for halyards. It is intended to get test sets of instruments of the various wireless systems now being operated. These include the Marconi system. Thus far, however, the navy department has not adopted definitely any system, but the construction of the new ships is regarded as a preliminary to the adoption of a system whenever its practicability is established fully. The British navy already has a number of its ships equipped with the wireless system, but this is the first move on the part of the American navy to make use of the wireless plan.

MYSTERIOUS ROBBERY.

Diamond Chain Valued at $3,500 Is Missing.

Washington, Dec. 28.—A mysterious robbery of a diamond chain valued at $3,500, of which either the Adams Express company or Shaw & Berry, a local jewelry firm which shipped it to New York, are probably the victims, occurred some time between Sunday afternoon and yesterday forenoon. The jewelry was dispatched from here to Joseph Frankel & Sons, 68 Nassau street, New York. When delivered there was no evidence that the seal had been tampered with and the package was not opened in New York until yesterday, when the chain was found missing. The stolen gems numbered 200 and were set in a platinum lorgnette chain fifty-four inches long. The package was made up by the local firm under the personal supervision of the proprietors and duly registered. Detectives here and in New York are working on the case. It is supposed that the package was opened by some one acquainted with its contents, the chain removed and the package then restored to its original appearance.

WILL GRIN AND BEAR IT.

Lieut. Gen. Miles Will Do Nothing to Continue Controversy.

Washington, Dec. 28.—Lieut. Gen. Miles resumed his duties in command of the army at his office in the war department yesterday. It is said that he has decided to accept the situation with the best possible grace and will say or do nothing to continue the controversy. So far as known the incident will cause no decided change in his prearranged plans, official or social, for the future.

GASOLINE YACHT WRECKED.

Sons of Thomas A. Edison Thought to Have Perished.

Norfolk, Va., Dec. 28.—It was reported from Beaufort, S. C., yesterday that the gasoline yacht Ouananiche, in which the two sons of Thomas A. Edison, the inventor, and the wife of one of them, with several friends, recently passed through Norfolk en route to Florida waters, has been wrecked on Cedar island, near Beaufort. No particulars came with the report.

FIGHTING FILIPINOS.

Another Severe Engagement With the Enemy at Batangas.

Washington, Dec. 28.—The war department is advised by Gen. Chaffee at Manila that Company E, Twenty-first regiment of infantry, had a desperate hand-to-hand encounter within a gorge six miles south of San Jose, Batangas, Dec. 23. Twenty-two of the enemy were killed. Patrick A. Connelly received an ugly bolo wound in the left cheek; Private Carney received six bolo cuts in the neck and shoulders.

STATE TEACHERS MEET.

Minnesota Educational Association in Session.

St. Paul, Dec. 28.—The thirty-ninth annual convention of the Minnesota Educational association opened in St. Paul yesterday morning at 10 o'clock with a general session in the Central Presbyterian church. The principal address of the morning was that of Gov. S. R. Van Sant on "Education and Patriotism." Supt. J. A. Van Dyke, the president of the association, also delivered an address, and he was followed by Supt. Lafayette Bliss of Waseca, Dr. D. L. Kiehle of the state university and Mrs. E. H. Penolotre of the Minnesota Federation of Women's clubs, all of whom read papers. The afternoon session, which was resumed at 2 o'clock, at Central Presbyterian church, was devoted to papers and addresses by prominent educators, including an address on "Equitable Taxation and School Revenues" by Miss Haley; followed by a discussion by Hon. John Lind, and papers by Prof. Maria L. Sanford of the state university, and Hon. A. T. Ankeny, president of the state normal school board.

LEAPS TO HIS DEATH.

Printer Frightened by a Fire Makes a Fatal Jump.

St. Paul, Dec. 28.—John E. Dempsey, a printer, while frightened by fire, leaped from a fourth floor window of the Washburn building, on Fifth street near Wabash, last evening and received injuries from which he died at 10 o'clock at St. Joseph's hospital, where he had been removed immediately after the accident. The fire started on the second floor in the tailor shop of J. Fox at 6 o'clock, and in a very short time the entire building was filled with smoke. The tenants scrambled out of the building in great haste, scores taking the fire escapes. No one else was injured. The damage by fire is estimated at about $400.

CLAM FISHING THROUGH ICE.

Beds Near Winona to Be Worked During the Winter.

Winona, Minn., Dec. 28.—Clammers in this vicinity who have been taking a rest from their work since the middle of November are now preparing to undertake winter clam digging through the ice. For this purpose long poles, with a scoop shovel at one end are used. This shovel is pushed through a hole in the ice and shoved along the river bottom until the scoop is filled. Then it is raised up to the level of the ice until nearly in a horizontal position and slowly pulled through the opening in the ice. There is a good clam bed just above the Northwestern drawbridge, which will be worked in this manner.

Rates to Be Reduced.

St. Paul, Dec. 27.—It is officially announced that new rate sheets are being prepared for the transcontinental roads which will show a marked reduction in freight rates for the Northwest. This work has been in process for some time, and has no connection with the recent railroad agitation, but is in accord with the general policy for several years past of making a reduction as business warrants.

BLOWN FROM THE TRAIN.

Freight Conductor Meets a Horrible Death.

Missoula, Mont., Dec. 28.—Conductor Charles King was killed last night just across the line in Idaho. Conductor King, who had charge of a freight train, was blown from his train by a fierce storm raging while trying to reach the caboose. King had been helping a brakeman, and had started to the rear of the train when the accident occurred.

PEACEMAKER KILLED.

Paroled Convict Stabs Des Moines Man to the Heart.

Des Moines, Iowa, Dec. 28.—Charles Johnson, bartender in an East side saloon, undertook to act as peacemaker in a fight in his saloon and was stabbed just below the heart by William Smith. Johnson died later and Smith is in jail. Smith is on parole, having been sent to the penitentiary for burglary some years ago.

PRESIDENT IS PLEASED.

Gov. Shaw's Acceptance of Cabinet Office Delights Him.

Des Moines, Iowa, Dec. 28.—Gov. Shaw last night received the following message from President Roosevelt, the first he has received direct from the president regarding his appointment:

"I am delighted that you have consented to accept portfolio of secretary of treasury. Have written."

Cigar Factory Burns.

Cannon Falls, Minn., Dec. 28.—Gilbertson's cigar factory was gutted by fire. The factory was on the second floor over Johnson & Swanson's merchant tailoring establishment. The latter's goods were mostly saved, though in a damaged condition. The building was insured.

South Dakota Goes Slow.

St. Paul, Dec. 27.—Gov. Herreid of South Dakota has declined to attend the meeting of Governors at Helena, Montana, to consider the railroad merger matter. He says: "Nothing has occurred as yet, and probably nothing can occur, at least for some time, that will in any respect affect or disturb the rates and facilities enjoyed by the public in the State of South Dakota."

Yard Man Killed.

Boone, Iowa, Dec. 28.—Shortly before midnight Yard Walker W. L. Wilcox was thrown under an engine and instantly killed. He slipped from an engine directly in front of another locomotive which was passing.

Declined by Reese.

Des Moines, Iowa, Dec. 28.—John P. Reese of Albia, president of the United Mineworkers of Iowa, has declined the position of commissioner tendered by the Association of Iowa Mine Owners and will stand for re-election.

Iowa Receivership.

Ottumwa, Iowa, Dec. 28.—George F. Hall, president of the Ottumwa Building and Loan association, has made application for the appointment of a receiver for the company, alleging that present laws are too great a handicap. The company's assets are estimated at $38,000; liabilities, $45,000.

HAVOC PLAYED BY STORM.

Train and Telegraph Service Badly Interrupted.

Salt Lake, Utah, Dec. 28.—Sleet and snow storms, accompanied by wind, which at some points almost reached the velocity of a hurricane, have played havoc with train and telegraphic services from the Northwest. In the mountains west of Missoula, Mont., the snow and sleet was blinding. The storm is still raging in the mountains, all trains are more or less delayed, while telegraph service is completely prostrated. Spokane, Wash., so far as telegraphic service is concerned, is completely cut off from the outside world. At Butte, Mont., the storm came from the west out of a clear sky, the snow, driven by a fierce wind, being so thick that it was impossible to see across the streets, apparently extending clear through to the coast. Seattle, Tacoma and other points reported terrific wind and marine disasters are feared. The storm appears to be gradually working south. High winds are reported from Utah points and every indication points to a severe blizzard in the intermountain region.

MUCH DAMAGE BY STORM.

Oregon Coast Is Whipped by a Raging Blizzard.

Astoria, Or., Dec. 28.—The worst storm of the winter prevailed along the coast Wednesday night and yesterday doing much damage to property. During the night two of the three barges used by the contractors at the Sylvia Degrasse reef broke from their moorings and were driven against the railroad trestle in East Astoria. One of the barges was completely destroyed and the other was sadly damaged. The railroad track was also damaged. During the day shipping was tied up.

HOWLING ELEMENTS.

Helena Is Engulfed in a Sudden Unexpected Blizzard.

Helena, Mont., Dec. 28.—A storm struck Helena yesterday morning with a suddenness that was startling. An apparently calm, warm morning was soon transformed into a howling blizzard. The snow descended rapidly, while the wind raged. The storm lasted almost an hour and afterward there was a high wind. During the storm the wind attained a velocity of forty-five miles an hour. The storm came from the northwest and was general over Western and Central Montana.

DEATH TO SIX.

Disturbers of a Church Meeting Try to "Clean Out the Leggs."

Piketon, Ohio, Dec. 28.—Six men were fatally wounded in a general fight at a small country church at Pike postoffice. A series of religious meetings were in progress at the church, and the building was filled when Charles and Orrin Day appeared, slightly intoxicated, and announced that they had "come to clean out the Leggs," a family with which the Days had had frequent quarrels. A general fight resulted in the church and around it. Terrified women and children sought safety from revolvers and knives by jumping out of the windows. Only the minister, Mr. Rowe, remained. At the close six men lay fatally hurt—Orrin and Chas. Day, Wesley Legg, Joseph Williams, John Currant and Lebanon Williams. Many others were slightly injured.

GRUESOME FIND.

Decomposed Body Discovered in a Church Steeple.

Birmingham, Ala., Dec. 28.—The decomposed body of a man was found in the steeple of Mount Zion A. M. E. church on the Gate City car line about three miles from this city by two hunters yesterday afternoon. Owing to the condition of the body the coroner cannot say whether it is that of a white man or a negro. The dead man was well dressed, and by his side was a large knife. The body lay on three blankets and it is a mystery how it got into the steeple, as the only entrance is an eighteen-inch hole in the belfry. The hunters had gone in the church to get out of the rain and detected the body by the odor.

PHILIPPINE CURRENCY.

Ratio Between Mexican Silver and American Gold Dollar.

Manila, Dec. 28.—It was publicly announced yesterday that the ratio for the first quarter of 1902 will be $2.10 Mexican silver to one American gold dollar. Gen. Wright, the acting civil governor, says that this is the only solution of the matter the Philippine commission thought possible. He hopes for early action by congress on the matter. Gen. Wright considers the situation in those parts of the Philippines where military operations are being carried on, improving. He has the greatest confidence in Gen. Chaffee's ability to end the insurrection in the islands, and says that perfect harmony prevails between the civil and military authorities.

ALGER RECOVERING.

Critical Period in His Illness Is Past.

Detroit, Mich., Dec. 28.—Dr. Howard W. Longyear, one of the attending surgeons on Gen. R. A. Alger, said last night that the critical period in the general's illness had passed and that his recovery was practically certain so far as he could determine at present.

SEWELL WEAKER.

Little Hope That the Senator Will Last Much Longer.

Camden, N. J., Dec. 28.—The physicians attending United States Senator W. J. Sewell gave out the information last night that their patient was much weaker. Unless there is some improvement shown soon they believe the senator will not live much longer.

COURT DEFIED.

Denver Mining Exchange Continues Doing Business.

Denver, Dec. 28.—The Denver mining exchange held the usual call for the purchase and sale of mining stocks in defiance of the order given by Sheriff Jones, acting under instructions from Judge Johnson, that it suspend operations pending investigation by the grand jury as to the legality of its transactions. The pool rooms and bucket shops are also doing business as usual.

J. J. HILL MAKES A STATEMENT

EXPLAINS THE PURPOSE OF FORMING NORTHERN SECURITIES COMPANY.

MERGER WILL BENEFIT NORTHWEST

EACH COMPANY WILL BE OPERATED SEPERATELY AS HERETOFORE.

WILL PREVENT UNION PACIFIC

GETTING CONTROL OF THE NORTHERN PACIFIC AND DIVERTING TRADE SOUTH.

President James J. Hill yesterday issued the following statement regarding the merger of the Great Northern, the Northern Pacific and the Burlington railroads under the Northern Securities company, and explaining the purpose of forming the securities company:

I have been absent from Minnesota for more than two months and during that time there has arisen a wide discussion throughout the state of what has been generally called a consolidation or a merger of the Northern Pacific and Great Northern railways, and in this discussion statements have been made which are so widely different from the facts that I feel called upon to make a conservative statement of just what has been done in the past and what will be done in the future.

When the Northern Pacific failed and the banking house of J. P. Morgan & Co. reorganized it, myself and friends were holders of a large amount of that company's securities. After the reorganization was completed we bought about $26,000,000 of Northern Pacific stock, both common and preferred. Some of this stock was afterward sold by individuals, but a large amount has been held from that time to the present.

About a year ago the Union Pacific company bought the Huntington and other interests in the Northern Pacific and at the same time made an effort to buy the control of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy.

With these lines in the hands of the Union Pacific interests both the Northern Pacific and Great Northern would be of the States of Nebraska, Kansas, Missouri, South Dakota, Iowa, Illinois and Wisconsin, except by using other lines of railway, some of which were in the market for sale and might at any time pass under the control of or be combined with the Union Pacific interests.

We then, with the Northern Pacific, made proposals to the directors of the Burlington to buy their entire property. When this transaction was about being closed the people who represented the Union Pacific company, and who had previously tried to buy the Burlington, asked to be allowed to share with us in the purchase of that company; this proposal we refused for the reason that it would defeat our object in buying the Burlington, and further it was against the law of several of the states in which the largest mileage of the Burlington was located.

At that time, against the opposition of the more southerly lines, both the Northern Pacific and Great Northern had put into effect a low colonization rate and were carrying daily thousands of people into the Northwest, many of whom were coming from Kansas and Nebraska, along the lines of the Union Pacific.

This movement was at its height in the month of April and after we had closed the purchase of the Burlington the Union Pacific people undertook the boldest effort that ever was made in this country and bought over sixty millions of the stock of the Northern Pacific in the markets of Europe and the United States. I was in New York at the time and after Messrs. Morgan & Co. were aware of the action of the Union Pacific people it was found that together we held about 26,000,000 of Northern Pacific common stock and, inasmuch as the common stock, by right of a contract made with the preferred stockholders when the company was reorganized and the stock issued, had the privilege of stock at par on the first day of January in any year until 1917, Messrs. Morgan & Co. then bought in London and New York about 16,000,000 of the common stock of the Northern Pacific; at the same time the Union Pacific interests, having already so large an investment, bid the stock up until there was the largest stock corner ever known; the common stock in three or four days went up to $1,000 per share.

I explained to my friends how that, with control of the Northern Pacific, the Union Pacific would control the entire Northwest and of the West from Mexico to the Canadian line, except for the Great Northern. So great was the effort to get this control that one of my friends in London, who owned 2,000,000 of Northern Pacific common, was offered and refused $14,000,000 for his stock. The result was that Messrs. Morgan & Co. and ourselves owned 42,000,000 out of 80,000,000 of the Northern Pacific common, with the privilege of paying off the 75,000,000 of Northern Pacific preferred. The Union Pacific people owned 37,000,000 of the common and about 42,000,000 of the preferred, which was a clear majority of all the stock of the Northern Pacific, and claimed the exclusive control of the Northern Pacific railway and through that ownership a control of one-half the Burlington.

When it was known that these preferred shares could and would be paid off, and before the annual election, mutual negotiations resulted in Mr. Morgan giving them a representative in the Northern Pacific board. At the same time I was elected a member of the Northern Pacific board. When I was advised of my election I notified them that I as a director of the Northern Pacific and Great Northern at the same time and I resigned after the first meeting of the board.

Several of the gentlemen who have long been interested in the Great Northern railway and its predecessor the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba company and who have always been among its largest shareholders, but not the holders of a majority of its stock, whose ages are from seventy to eighty-six years, have desired to combine their individual holdings in corporate form, and in that way secure permanent protection for their interests and a continuation of the policy and management which has done so much for the development of the Northwest and the enhancement of their own property in the Northwest and elsewhere. Out of this desire has grown the Northern Securities company.

It became necessary (in order to prevent the Northern Pacific from passing under the control of the Union Pacific interests and with it the joint control of the Burlington) to pay off the seventy-five millions of Northern Pacific preferred. The enormous amount of cash required for this purpose from a comparatively small number of men made it necessary for them in a large and permanent manner, through the medium of a corporation, and the Northern Securities company afforded them the means of accomplishing this object without the necessity of creating a separate company to finance the transaction for the Northern Pacific; while, at the same time, the credit of the Northern Securities company would be much stronger, as it would also hold a considerable amount of Great Northern and other securities.

The Northern Securities company is organized to deal in high-class securities, to hold the same for the benefit of its shareholders and to advance the interests of the corporations whose securities it owns. Its powers do not include the operation of railways, banking, mining nor the buying or selling of securities or properties for others on commission; it is purely an investment company and the object of its creation was simply to enable those who hold its stock to continue their respective interests in association together and to prevent such interests from being scattered by death or otherwise; to provide against such attacks as had been made upon the Northern [illegible] only object in buying control of the Northern Pacific was to benefit their southern properties by restraining the growth of the country between Lake Superior and Puget Sound, and by turning away from the Northern lines the which must follow the placing on the Pacific ocean of the largest ships in the world.

The foregoing is a brief and absolutely correct statement of the whole subject and its truth can easily be verified by the State of Minnesota or any other state or person having sufficient interest to investigate the facts, which are all matters of record.

Now as to the effect of what has been done upon the public interests of the country, let me ask a few question which I want every candid and honest man to answer for himself:

Did the Union Pacific people with their railway lines extending from Omaha and New Orleans to California and Oregon, through the several states in the Middle West and South, purchase a majority of the stock of the Northern Pacific company for the purpose of aiding that company and increasing the growth and prosperity of the Northern country, or was it for the purpose of restricting such growth and aiding the development of their enormous interests hundreds of miles to the south?

Did they purchase the Northern Pacific, and with it an equal share in the Burlington, for the purpose of building up the Asiatic trade between the northern zone, lying between St. Paul and Minneapolis and the Pacific coast, or to and control the Oriental trade for their own railway lines through their own seaports and over their ownships?

In defeating their control of the Northern Pacific and Burlington and retaining it in the hands of those who had built it up and with it the entire Northwest, did we injure or benefit the people of the Northwest?

Did I, by inducing my friends to hold their Northern Pacific common stock and act jointly with Messrs. Morgan & Co. when this stock was selling at $500 and $1,000 a share and thus prevent the Union Pacific from controlling the Northwest, injure or benefit every interest, agricultural, business and otherwise of the entire country between Lake Superior and the Pacific coast?

Had we sold our $20,000,000 of Northern Pacific, even at $300 a share, amounting to $60,000,000, or $40,000,000 more than its present value and transferred to the Union Pacific control the entire country between Canada and Mexico, what law of Minnesota would we have violated? Could we not have legally put the money in our pockets and let the country learn what it was to be dominated by a parallel and competing railroad?

Why did Gov. Van Sant sit still from May until November while a majority of the stock of the Northern Pacific company was controlled by a parallel and competing railroad company, to which the law is clearly opposed, and wait until myself and friends have by our efforts and with our own money not as a rival parallel or competing railroad, but doing what we clearly have the right to do as individuals or working together for greater permanency and security as a financial corporation?

Has there ever been a case in the history of this country when men have dropped their money profit and stood firmly by the interests of the communities which had grown up with their own and largely by their own efforts and capital?

The public is interested in having a good railway service and at fair and reasonable rates. The past is gone and speaks for itself. I can speak for the future, and I have no hesitation whatever in saying that the increased volume of traffic, both through and local, will enable the companies to reduce their rates in proportion to the volume of such traffic, and that in the near future the public will have a chance to see for itself this feature of what I have said. The development of the country will increase with greater increase in population between Minnesota and the Pacific.

No merger or consolidation of the Northern Pacific and Great Northern is contemplated. Each company will be operated separately in the future as in the past.

I greatly dislike to discuss my business in the newspapers, but during my absence an attack has been made upon myself and friends which has been persistently supported by both political and rival interests. All I ask is fair play, and let time determine whether the public will be benefited or injured by what we have done and will continue to do.

IMPOSED ON HER.

Duluth Woman Made an Innocent Tool of Smugglers.

Duluth, Dec. 28.—Among the federal prisoners that recently escaped from the prison at Leavenworth was one W. F. Peaslee, and it is just learned that he is a prisoner of considerable interest to Northern Minnesota people, as well as Texas people, in which state he was convicted of smuggling and sentenced to one year and a half imprisonment.

Peaslee, up to a few years ago, was a locomotive engineer in the employ of the Northern Pacific, and lived with his family at Brainerd. They moved to Del Rio, Tex., where he and his wife became quite wealthy, smuggling Mexican drawnwork and selling it in the United States. Del Rio is close to the Mexican border, and Mr. Peaslee, who continued to follow the occupation of locomotive engineer, was engaged in running between that place and some point in Mexico, and into Texas under the seat of his cab. A well-known Duluth woman, Mrs. D. S. Forgy, was imposed upon by the Peaslees, whom she had known at Brainerd. Mrs. Peaslee, whose part of the smuggling operations was to dispose of the drawnwork, sent Mrs. Forgy a consignment of it with a request that she sell what she could of it and send the balance to an address which she gave of a person in Iowa. The request was made on the ground of old acquaintance, and Mrs. Forgy, who is connected with the millinery business in Duluth, was in a position where she could offer it without special effort.

Special Agent C. S. Crain of the treasury department came to Duluth and interviewed Port Collector L. M. Willcuts about a year ago in connection with the smuggling of Mexican drawnwork. He said that some of the stuff had been Traced to Duluth.

As soon as Mr. Willcuts heard the name of Mrs. Forgy mentioned as having received it he immediately said there must be some mistake. The subsequent investigation disclosed that Mrs. Peaslee had imposed on her old acquaintance. Mrs. Forgy was profoundly surprised, for the Peaslees had always borne a good reputation. Mrs. Forgy in a few days, unexpectedly, as before, received another consignment of the Mexican drawnwork from Mrs. Peaslee, which she turned over to Port Collector Willcuts with the correspondence. The Peaslees were immediately arrested, and both were convicted at Del Rio of smuggling.

Mrs. Peaslee was allowed to pay a fine in lieu of imprisonment on account of her children, but her husband was sent to the federal prison at Leavenworth. He had the good sense to return to the prison after going a short distance. Mrs. Forgy made two trips to Texas to testify for the government against the Peaslees, but until now nobody outside of a few of her intimate friends knew of her mission. While she very naturally felt much mortified to have unwittingly been made the agency of a smuggler, her friends consider it a good joke at her expense and nothing that she should take to heart.

NOW ENGLAND ASKS.

Chamberlain Requests Australia to Send a Thousand Men.

London, Dec. 28.—Telegrams received here from South Africa still refer to the probable decision of the Boers to surrender, but a dispatch to the Daily News from Volksrust to-day declares that the Boers are determined to continue the war and that their recent conferences have been with the object of planning a summer campaign.

A dispatch to the Daily Mail from Sydney announces that Joseph Chamberlain, the colonial secretary, has telegraphed to the Rt. Hon. E. Barton, the prime minister of the commonwealth of Australia, to the effect that the British government would be glad of 1,000 men for service in South Africa. This will be the first federal contingent to go to South Africa, Premier Barton having previously declined to offer men unless the government asked for them.

TORN BY HIS HOGS

FARMER IS NEARLY RIPPED TO SHREDS BY THE VICIOUS BRUTES.

FIERCE FIGHT FOR HIS LIFE

WHILE FEEDING THE ANIMALS THEY TURN ON HIM WITH GREAT FEROCITY.

IS BADLY TORN AND LACERATED

FOUND BY MEMBERS OF HIS FAMILY BLEEDING FROM MANY WOUNDS.

Winona, Minn., Dec. 28.—Eugene D. Logan of Ridgeway lies in the hospital in this city suffering from serious injuries received from vicious hogs. He had a fierce conflict, and only for the great fight he put up for his life he would have been torn to shreds.

On Christmas day Mr. Logan went out to care for his stock as usual. In order to properly feed the hogs it was necessary for him to enter the pen and distribute the feed in the troughs. He had no sooner entered the pen than the animals attacked him with great ferocity. He tried to fight them off, but could not do so, and it was only with the greatest effort that he was able to keep his feet. The maddened animals bit and tore at his knees and limbs, and when he reached the fence surrounding the pen he was

Bleeding From Many Wounds

He had just strength enough to drag himself over the fence, where he fell exhausted, and where he was found a short time afterward by some of the members of his family. He was brought to this city for treatment. An examination showed that his limbs were frightfully torn and lacerated. One kneecap was almost torn from its place. His wounds were properly dressed and he is now resting comfortably in the hospital. His injuries are such that only time will effect a complete cure.

Mr. Logan is one of the prominent farmers of this county. He has a large farm in Pleasant Hill, and has just purchased another near by for $15,000.

GOV. ROGERS DEAD.

Washington's Chief Executive Passes Away.

Olympia, Wash., Dec. 28.—Gov. John R. Rogers died in this city at 8 o'clock last night.

Gov. Rogers was taken sick Friday evening with a cold which developed into pneumonia. On Sunday his condition was such as to alarm his friends, but on Monday afternoon the governor was much better and it was thought the danger had been passed. A consultation of physicians was held and it developed the fact that the patient was progressing as well as could be expected. Tuesday it was announced that the governor was suffering from lobar pneumonia. The disease was then located in the middle lobe of the right lung. It was impossible to say until Wednesday was passed whether the disease would spread. Favorable symptoms continued but early yesterday the governor was suddenly taken worse, dying at 8 o'clock last night.

HILL'S NEW BOATS.

Work on Two of the Ocean Steamships Has Been Postponed.

New London, Dec. 28.—The statement that James J. Hill's new ocean steamship would be delayed in the building refers to the vessels that will be constructed after those nearly completed are launched. Both of the two mammoth steamships building here will be launched next June. It is stated, however, that the construction of the two larger steamships for the same company have been postponed, and work will not be commenced immediately, as was anticipated.

TORNADO IN ITALY.

Building Demolished and Many People Injured.

Rome, Dec. 28.—A tornado swept over Naples yesterday, causing considerable damage. A woman was killed and thirty-six were injured. Many buildings in the surrounding country were demolished and a considerable amount of railroad property was destroyed. The troops were called upon to assist in clearing away the debris. The River Arno has overflowed its banks and the waters have caused considerable damage at Florence and at Pisa.

CLANDESTINE MASONS.

Grand Master of New York Warns the Craft Against Them.

Albany, N. Y., Dec. 28.—Grand Master Charles W. Meade of the grand lodge of Free and Accepted Masons of the State of New York addressed a letter yesterday to the lodges within his jurisdiction warning them against clandestine and spurious lodges which he learns are about to be established in the jurisdiction. He therefore counsels the craft to exercise great care in the admission of visitors.

Express Strikes a Freight.

Cincinnati, Dec. 28.—Unable to see the flagman's signal on account of the fog, the engineer of the south-bound Chicago express on the Cincinnati, Hamilton & Dayton road was unable to stop his train at Hartwell yesterday until it had struck a freight crossing the track and demolished three freight cars. Four passengers and two trainmen on the express were injured.

Railway Mail Service Change.

Deadwood, S. D., Dec. 28.—The headquarters of the Long Pine-Deadwood division of the railway mail service will be removed from Long Pine, Neb., to Deadwood the first of the year. It will then be Deadwood-Long Pine division. The five mail clerks on the run will lie over here instead of at Long Pine.

Quadruple Drowning.

Bridgewater, N. S., Dec. 28.—Four boys while skating broke through the ice and were drowned.

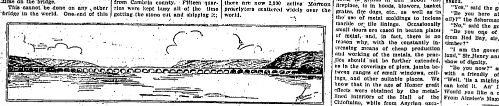
Largest Stone Bridge in the World

At Rockville, a few miles from the capital of Pennsylvania, can be seen a stone bridge that is five times longer than any other stone bridge in the world. It has just been erected by the Pennsylvania Railroad company, to replace an iron bridge of two tracks. This bridge contains four tracks, and permits two passenger and two freight trains to pass each other at the same time on the bridge.

This cannot be done on any other bridge in the world. One end of this bridge rests in Dauphin county and the other end in Perry county. The Susquehanna river flows under it all of the time, and in stormy weather the muddy waters of the Juniata often find their way there, also. There are in all forty-eight piers and forty-eight arches.

The bridge is fifty feet wide, and is made of a light-colored stone brought from Cambria county. Fifteen quarries were kept busy all of the time getting the stone cut and shipping it; there are 1,000,000 cubic yards of stone in the bridge, and it cost $1,000,000. Three hundred men worked on it constantly from April 1, 1900, until the present time, when it is practically completed, with the exception of the laying of the tracks, which will not be done until next spring.

It is stated upon good authority that there are now 2,000 active Mormon proselyters scattered widely over the world.



GREAT POET'S MONUMENT

A monument in Carrara marble in commemoration of Heinrich Heine has been inaugurated in Montmartre cemetery, France, where his remains repose. The monument, which is due to the initiative of the late Empress Elizabeth of Austria, is the work of the Danish sculptor Hasselriis, and was recently exhibited in Vienna. The sculptor has represented Heine during the latter years of his life. It is Heine the Parisian. The head is slightly inclined forward. The eyes are closed, as if in meditation. Immediately below the bust is a butterfly, the antique symbol of immortality. The pedestal bears a lyre entwined with a wreath of roses. On the reverse of the pedestal is a laurel wreath chiseled with the words, "Dem undenken Heine's, das freisinnige Wien" ("In commemoration of Heine from liberal-minded Vienna"). On the front of the base of the pedestal is the inscription:

HEINRICH HEINE.
Frau Heine.

The following verses from a poem published by Heine in 1869 are inscribed on the tumular slab:

Wo wird einst des Wandermuden
Letzte Ruhestatte sein?
Unter Palmen in dem Suden?
Unter Linden an dem Rhein?

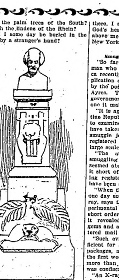
Werd'ich wo in einer Wuste
Eingescharrt von fremder Hand?
Oder ruh'ich an der Kuste
Eines Meeres in dem Sand?

Immerhin! Mich wird umgeben
Gotteshimmel, dort wie hier,
Und als Todtenlampen schweben
Nachts die Sterne uber mir.

The lines may be roughly translated as follows:

Where will some day be the last resting place of the wearied wanderer? Under the palm trees of the South? Beneath the lindens of the Rhein?

Shall I some day be buried in the desert by a stranger's hand?



The Heine Monument.

Or shall I rest in the sand of the seashore?

It matters not! Whether here or there, I shall always be encircled by God's heaven, and at night the stars above me will be my funeral lamps.—New York Tribune.

Smugglers Trapped by X-Ray.

"So far as I have heard," said a man who got back from South America recently, "the newest practical application of the X-rays has been made by the postoffice authorities at Buenos Ayres. They have turned it into a government detective, and a valuable one it makes, too.

"It is against the law in the Argentine Republic to open registered mail to examine the contents, and jewelers have taken advantage of the fact to smuggle jewels into the country in registered letters and packages on a large scale.

"The authorities knew that the smuggling was being done, but there seemed absolutely no way of stopping it short of repealing the law concerning registered mail, and that would have been difficult.

"When they were at their wits' ends one day somebody thought of the X-ray, says the New York Sun. An experimental apparatus was installed in short order, and just as was expected, it revealed watches, chains, rings, gems and all sorts of jewelry in registered mail in astonishing quantities.

"Such evidence was, of course, sufficient for a court order to open the packages, and during a single one of the first weeks that the plan was tried more than $20,000 worth of property was confiscated.

"An X-ray machine is now a feature of every postoffice in the country that receives foreign mail, and registered-letter smuggling is as dead as Moses."

The heart that sings, wings itself to heaven.

FLORIDA MONSTER SLAIN

An enormous reptile, more like the mythical dragon than a land serpent, has been killed by a hunter in the lower Everglades.

For one hundred years it has not only been a tradition among the Seminole Indians, who inhabited the borders of Lake Okechobee, but it is stated as fact within the knowledge of some of the Indians now living that an immense serpent made its home in the Everglades and has carried off at least two Indians.

Recently, Buster Ferrel, one of the boldest and most noted hunters in Okechobee, who for twenty years has made the border of the lake and the Everglades his home, on one of his periodical expeditions into one of these lonesome wilds, noted what he supposed to be the pathway of an immense alligator. For several days he visited the locality for the purpose of killing the saurian, but was unsuccessful in finding him. He studied some plan to outwit it. A large cypress stood near its pathway and he concluded the best thing for him to do would be to climb this tree and take a stand for his "gatorship." He accordingly prepared himself and took a position in the tree.

For two days he stood on watch with his rifle ready, but without the desired success. On the third day, before he had been on his perch an hour, he was almost paralyzed by what looked to him like an immense serpent gliding along the supposed alligator track. He estimated it to be anywhere from twenty to thirty feet long and fully ten to twelve inches in diameter where the head joined the body, and as large around as a barrel ten feet farther back.

The snake stopped within easy reach of his gun, and raised its head to take a precautionary view of his surroundings. As it did, Ferrel opened fire on it, shooting at its head. Taken by surprise the serpent dashed into the marsh at railroad speed, while Ferrel kept up fire on it until he had emptied the magazine of his rifle, but failed to stop it. About four days afterwards he ventured back into the neighborhood to see how things were, and about a mile from where he first saw the snake he saw a large flock of buzzards, and went to see what they were after, and there he found the creature dead and its body so badly torn by the buzzards that it was impossible to save the skin. He, however, secured its head. It is truly a frightful looking object, fully ten inches from jaw to jaw, with ugly, razor-like teeth.

He described the animal as a dark color on the back, with dingy white beneath, and with feelers around its mouth similar to catfish. He has now gone back into the swamp with the intention of securing the skeleton and bringing it back, after which he will send it to the Smithsonian Institution in Washington. Scientists who have investigated the matter are convinced that the animal is not a land serpent.

DECORATIONS IN METALS.

Modern Designs Include Small Objects to Ornament Drawing-Rooms.

Nothing probably is more marked at the present time than the tendency to introduce the metals into interior decoration, copper being at present a favorite. The extension of the electric light has created a demand for light hand-wrought fittings in metal, from which the use of that material has been extended to fire screens, stands, or trays, flower and lamp standards, and to all the hundred and one small objects that crowd the modern drawing room, says the Architectural Record. So far as the architect is concerned, he is affected by the increased use of metal in the furniture of doors, in the fittings of all kinds of windows, in grilles in and about the fireplace, is in hoods, blowers, basket grates, fire dogs, etc., as well as in the use of metal moldings to inclose marble or tile linings. Occasionally small doors are cased in beaten plates of metal, and, in fact, there is no reason why, with the constantly increasing means of cheap production and working of the metals, the practice should not be further extended, as in the coverings of piers, jambs between ranges of small windows, ceilings, and other suitable places. We know that in the age of Homer great effects were obtained by the metal-lined interiors of the Hall of the Chieftains, while from Asyrian excavations have been recovered wonderful specimens of metal applied to doors. Metal used for casing purposes in the present day requires to be very thin, and is best mounted on a thin wooden foundation.

BEAVER-TAIL SOUP.

Michigan Lumber Camp Delicacy That Pleased a Marylander.

"Although I am a Marylander, and an eastern shore one at that," said Chauncey F. Raynor, "and consequently know what good things to eat are, I want to tell you that I'll have to take off my hat to the lumber camp cook of the upper Michigan peninsula as the discoverer, fabricator, and dispenser of a dish that knocks the eastern shore cuisine silly. And that rare lumber camp dish is beaver-tail soup.

"I was with Colonel Park of Columbus, Ohio, deer hunting in the Rainy lake region of Michigan one fall. We lived at a lumber camp boarding shanty. There were signs of beaver at the upper end of the lake, and a trapper succeeded in trapping one of the wily dam builders. When the beaver was brought into camp the cook went nearly wild. And so did the lumbermen when they heard the news. All because they had been trying to trap a beaver for weeks—not for its fur but for its tail, as they were pining, they said, for beaver-tail soup. The cook took that broad appendage of the beaver, mailed like an armadillo, took from it the underlying bone and meat, and from it made such a soup as never came from any other stock at the beck of the most expert and scientific chef that ever put a kettle on. We could do the samething, and perhaps better, on the eastern shore, but we lack one thing. We haven't got the beavers to yield us their tails."—New York Sun.

Preparing the Impromptu.

Great orators have generally refused to speak on the spur of the moment on important themes. Demosthenes, the king of orators, would never speak in a public meeting without previous thorough preparation. Daniel Webster when once pressed to speak on a subject of great importance, refused, saying that he was very busy, and had no time to master it. When a friend urged that a few words from him would do much to awaken public attention to the subject, he replied: "If there be so much weight in my words it is because I do not allow myself to speak on any subject until my mind is imbued with it." On one occasion, Webster made a remarkable speech without notes before the Phi Beta Kappa Society at Harvard university, when a book was presented to him. After he had gone, a manuscript copy of his eloquent "impromptu" address, carefully written, was found in the book, which he had forgotten to take away.—Saturday Evening Post.

Unlucky Thirteen.

A curious incident occurred in connection with the royal journey from Balmoral to the South. The Duke of Athol traveled from Dunkeld to Perth with the intention of awaiting the arrival of the royal train. In consequence of a delay on the Highland railway the train by which his grace traveled was detained, and the Duke did not reach Perth until a few minutes after the royal party. Their majesties had by this time sat down to dinner in the Station hotel and the Marquis of Breadalbane had been asked to dine. As soon as the Marquis was made aware of the Duke's arrival he informed his majesty, and suggested that his grace should also join them. Some of the ladies, however, pointed out the fact that the Duke would make the party one of thirteen. The Marquis of Breadalbane promptly offered to sacrifice himself, and with his majesty's permission retired, the Duke of Athol taking his place.—London Express.

How the Governor Was Received.

When the governor of Newfoundland, Sir Henry McCallum, K. C. M. G., went ashore at a small harbor on the east coast he was met at the landing place by a grizzled old fisherman, who sought to make the stranger welcome, whoever he might be.

"Be you comin' ashore, sir?" he asked.

"Yes," said the governor.

"Be you here about the ile (oil)?" the fisherman pursued.

"No," said the governor.

"Be you one of Sam Lewis' men from Red Bay, sir, come about the timber?"

"I am the governor of Newfoundland," Sir Henry announced with some show of dignity.

"Be you now?" said the fisherman, with a friendly offer of his hand. "Well, 'tis a mighty good job—if you can hold it. An' I hopes you will. Would you like a cup o' tea, sir?"—From Ainslee's Magazine.

Not His Fault at All.

They were quite newly married and she was much too young to understand that a man takes little interest in shopping expeditions.

She had left his side to look into a window in which were exhibited some winter mantles which were "just lovely!" When she returned she took the arm which seemed to be half grudgingly proffered, and sobbed:

"You—don't even lo—look at anything. I want you to—to see. You do—don't care how I am dressed. You no longer lo—love me. You haven't even ker—kissed me for a whole day, and you—"

SATISFIED WITH THE ATTITUDE THIS GOVERNMENT WILL ASSUME.

La Guayra, Venez., Dec. 29—The German cruiser Vineta yesterday anchored off this port. The event caused great excitement, as it was taken for granted that the arrival of the vessel meant that Germany's threatened naval demonstration was on.

An interesting incident occurred early in the day. When the Venezuelan health officer went alongside the Vineta at 6 o'clock in the morning he was not allowed to board her. The Venezuelan officials immediately interpreted the action of the German officers to mean that the cruiser had visited La Guayra on warlike business in connection with the claims of German citizens. But at 8 o'clock a German officer called on the authorities and explained that the refusal to allow the health officer to board the Vineta was due to the fact that he went alongside the cruiser at too early an hour.

Naval Demonstration.

Washington, Dec. 29.—The gathering of German warships in the vicinity of Venezuela and the presence in the same locality of many American, British, French and other foreign warships, is directing attention to the imminence of the naval demonstration Germany is about to make against Venezuela. Thus far the German government has not made known the exact details of her proposed move, the official communications to the United States being confined to an inquiry as to the attitude of this government on the question of a demonstration in view of the purpose on the part of Germany not to acquire any permanent foothold in Venezuela. The answer of this government was entirely satisfactory to the German authorities who since have proceeded with the execution of their plans for coercing Venezuela. It is said to be probable that the first move by Germany will be the establishment of a blockade of Venezuelan ports so as to prevent the introduction of food products into Venezuela, and thus starve the besieged into submission. Venezuela, it is said, is entirely dependent on the outside world for its supply of corn, which is a staple among the Venezuelans. The Germans are expected to occupy one or more of the main ports of Venezuela, probably La Guayra and Maracaibo. In this connection most positive assurances have been given to the United States government that the occupation is to be temporary and only for such length of time as will permit the collection of the debt due to Germans, thus disposing of the report that there is any ulterior purpose to establish a German coaling station on Venezuelan soil.

HARTSOUGH CONVICTED.

Sheridan Liveryman Found Guilty of Manslaughter.

Sheridan, Wyo., Dec. 29.—Lew Hartsough, who shot and killed Frank McLaughlin last month, was convicted of manslaughter. Hartsough is a liveryman, while McLaughlin was a well known mining operator whose family lives at Paterson, N. J. The men had differences and Hartsough claimed his life was threatened.

Fierce Storm in California.

Los Angeles, Cal., Dec. 29.—A windstorm of unusual force and destruction raged yesterday all over the Southern part of California. The storm is what is locally known as a "Santa Ana," and carried with it fine dust from the desert to the east that filled the air and obscured the vision at a distance of a hundred yards. Reports from surrounding towns report much damage wrought by the wind to oranges and some damage to small buildings.

First Conviction Under New Law.

Lincoln, Neb., Dec. 29.—The first conviction under the kidnapping and intimidation law passed last winter was secured yesterday when C. H. Hunt was given one year in the penitentiary. Hunt threatened a neighbor's family and demanded that $200 be buried in a vacant lot. A can of nails was buried instead and officers set to watch. Hunt's arrest and conviction followed.

Steamers' Cargo on Fire.

Seattle, Wash., Dec. 29.—The steamer Shinaro Maru, which returned on Thursday evening to Port Townsend with her cargo on fire, arrived here yesterday, where her 107 passengers were landed and her hold filled with water. Capt. Cope thinks that most of the cargo can be saved.

Wessels Is Coming.

Amsterdam, Dec. 29.—As the result of conference between a clergyman, the Rev. Mr. Brockhuysen, and the Boer leaders here, it has been decided to send C. M. Wessels to the United States in January bearing a letter from Mr. Kruger to President Roosevelt.

Wife in Hospital—Husband in Jail.

Clinton, Iowa, Dec. 29.—Mrs. Bernard McGovern of Lincoln township, this county, lies in a serious condition in the hospital as a result of an assault made upon her by her husband while intoxicated. McGovern is in jail.

Frank Peavey Ill.

Chicago, Dec. 29.—Frank H. Peavey of Minneapolis, who was reported to be ill with pneumonia, was much improved yesterday. His son George denied that his father had pneumonia. He said it was simply the grip.

"DIVINE HEALER" HAS FALLEN.

Schlatter, Without Whiskers or Drawing Power, Emerges From Prison.

Wilkesbarre, Pa., Dec. 28. — "Divine Healer" Francis Schlatter, shorn of his hair, is like Samson. He has lost his drawing power. The healer arrived here two days ago, having recently been released after a three months term in Blackwell's island. There the prison regulations had compelled the keepers to shave off his luxuriant beard and to crop the hair which hung twenty-two inches down his back.

Disgraced, and with his chief beauty gone, also his wife missing and proceedings for a divorce filed against him, he came to this city and advertised a meeting. His name, well known, attracted people, but when they beheld a thin, sallow faced, hollow cheeked man with close cut hair and a draggling moustache, their faith in the healer fled and the few who underwent the laying on of hands experienced no benefit.

Schlatter says that he can enter the spirit world as readily as before but that it is necessary for the sick and the maimed to have faith before they can be cured and they have no faith in him without his long hair and beard.

"They used to think I looked like Christ," he said, "and that gave them faith. Now with my hair gone and my wife gone, and the lawyers' notification of divorce proceedings just received, I am a broken man."

DIDN'T KNOW SHE WAS FREE.

Negro Woman Who Was a Slave Until Five Weeks Ago.

Lincoln, Neb., Dec. 28.—Mary Stewart, a colored woman of seventy-four years, who says she had been a slave all her life until five weeks ago, arrived here today in search of a son who was sold out of her arms a mere pickaninny in Kentucky forty-four years ago. The old woman says she was bought when a girl of ten and has belonged ever since to a family named Stewart, living in the mountains of Carroll county, Ky., and that she had never heard until recently that all of the slaves had been made free by President Lincoln. The Stewarts lived away from the scenes of war, and although she heard that a conflict was being waged, the fact that it was to free the people of her race was carefully concealed from her. Her old master and mistress died a few years ago and their son decided some months ago to remove to Western Kansas. He brought the old woman as far west as Kansas City, where he practically abandoned her. She was sent from here to-night to Omaha. The truthfulness of her remarkable story is vouched for by the church people here and at Beatrice, who have aided her in her journey.

GHASTLY CHRISTMAS BOX.

Indiana Farmer Receives the Body of a Dead Woman.

Crawfordsville, Ind., Dec. 28. — The citizens in and about Bowers, a small place near this city, are greatly excited because of a ghastly Christmas box sent to Charles Campbell, a farmer. Mr. Campbell has been on a visit in Dakota for some weeks and before he left home he instructed his two small boys to open the Christmas box he expected to send them. On Christmas day a box was delivered at the Campbell home. His sons opened the box and were horrified to find it contained the body of a woman. The limbs and arms had been severed close to the body to allow the ghastly object to be crowded into the box. The body was taken from the box and hung up in the barn, where it was viewed by scores of people. As soon as the health officers heard of it they ordered the body cut down pending an investigation. It was learned that the body belonged to Dr. Campbell of Lafayette, who procured it at a medical college at Indianapolis and was shipping it home for dissection. He was able to convince the officials that everything was regular. Dr. Campbell secured the body and took it to Lafayette.

"RED'S" DESIRE.

Anarchist Would Kill Roosevelt, but Attacks His Wife Instead.

New York, Dec. 28. — Rudolf Grossman, editor of the Austro-Hungarian Gazette, was arrested yesterday, charged with assaulting his wife with a knife. Mrs. Grossman declared her husband to be an anarchist and said that he repeatedly told her he would consider himself highly honored if he could but do to President Roosevelt what Czolgosz did to President McKinley. She alleges that her husband on Dec. 8 addressed a meeting of anarchists in this city, where he was introduced to Emma Goldman.

OVATION FOR SCHLEY.

Hero of Santiago Attends a Washington Theater.

Washington, Dec. 28.—Admiral Schley and ex-Secretary of the Navy Herbert occupied a box at the new National theater last night to witness James K. Hackett and company in "Don Caesar's Return." It was the first time the admiral had been in a public place here since the verdict of the court of inquiry. The house was crowded, and when the admiral appeared he was given an ovation, the applause lasting several minutes.

FOUGHT FOR HIS LIFE.

Mine Superintendent Thrown Down a Shaft 500 Feet Deep.

Cripple Creek, Dec. 28.—Martin Gleason, fifty years of age, superintendent of the Wild Horse, Dalton and Deadwood mines, was found dead yesterday at the bottom of the Kalamazoo shaft, 500 feet below the surface of the ground. The body was horribly mangled. The ground around the mouth of the shaft bore marks of a struggle, and it is evident that Gleason was murdered, although no motive for the crime is known.

CAPT. LEARY DEAD.

Former Naval Commander at Guam Passes Away.

Washington, Dec. 28.—The secretary of the navy has received a dispatch from Admiral Johnson, commanding the Boston navy yard, announcing the death of Capt. Richard P. Leary at the marine hospital at Chelsea, Mass., of heart disease. Leary for a long time was governor of Guam, being succeeded by Commander Schroeder.

Memorial to McKinley.

Lincoln, Neb., Dec. 28.—The city of Lincoln, acting through a committee, last evening gave the order for a set of chiming bells to be erected as a memorial to William McKinley in a local church. The price, $6,000, was raised by voluntary subscription following a movement begun shortly after the death of the late president.

HER FATE KNOWN

NELLIE CROPSEY'S BODY IS FOUND IN THE PASQUOTANT RIVER.

WEEKS OF MYSTERY ARE ENDED

WAS HIT ON THE LEFT TEMPLE AND THROWN INTO THE RIVER.

GIRL'S LOVER IS SUSPECTED

MAINTAINS STOLID INDIFFERENCE AND INSISTS ON HIS INNOCENCE.

Elizabeth City, N. C., Dec. 29.—Five weeks of mystery and speculation as to the fate of Miss Nellie Cropsey terminated yesterday at 10 o'clock when the body of the missing girl was found floating in the river opposite her father's home. The body was discovered by J. D. Stillman, a fisherman. Upon discovering the floating object was the body of a young girl he immediately notified the coroner. When found the body was floating face downward. All the wearing apparel was intact with the exception of the rubbers which Nell wore on the night of her disappearance. With the exception of some slight discoloration of the face the body was in a state of good preservation and little decomposed.

Coroner Fearing summoned a jury of prominent men and called in three of the best physicians of the city to make a thorough and exhaustive autopsy to learn if there was any signs of violence on the body. The jury late last night brought in a verdict that Miss Cropsey came to her death by being stricken a blow on the left temple and being drowned in the Pasquotank river.

James Wilcox, the suspected lover, who, in pursuance of advice from his father and lawyer, had left town and was stopping at a country house in Pasquotank county, was sent for and brought to Elizabeth City at 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon. There was no apparent change in his expression, and when questioned about the case answered in monosyllables and wore the look of stolid indifference he has assumed all along. He maintains not only innocence but ignorance of the causes which led to Miss Cropsey's death.

GOODNOW WILL COLLECT.

Wil Act as Provisional Fiscal Agent of the United States.

New York, Dec. 29.—A Washington special to the Tribune says: After a meeting of the cabinet yesterday Secretary Gage decided to recommend to the state department that Consul General Goodnow be appointed provisional fiscal agent of the United States with authority to accept the amortization and interest payments of the Chinese indemnity from the doyen of the diplomatic corps at Pekin. No action will be taken relative to the appointment of a permanent fiscal agent until after officials have advised with Gov. Taft, who is expected in Washington in a few weeks. By an agreement among the president and the cabinet it was decided to leave the selection of a fiscal agent to relieve America's portion of the Chinese indemnity to Secretaries Hay, Gage and Root.

WILSON REMAINS.

Emphatic Denial of the Latest Cabinet Rumor.

Washington, Dec. 29.—The most positive denials are given of the story published yesterday that E. D. Coburn, secretary of the state board of agriculture of Kansas, is to succeed Secretary Wilson. When the fact that Gov. Shaw had accepted the tender of the treasury portfolio was made public the announcement was made that Secretary Wilson would remain in the cabinet, and yesterday the same statement was reiterated at the White House in the most emphatic manner. The president is anxious that Secretary Wilson should remain, and Secretary Wilson himself has informed the president that he will be glad to do so.

HAVOC BY FLOOD.

Hundreds of Thousands of Dollars' Worth of Damage Done.

Vancouver, B. C., Dec. 29.—Several hundred thousand dollars damage was done by floods after Wednesday night's storm in the delta of the Frazer. The Labrador cannery was swept away and the Alliance and North Arm canneries were badly damaged. Damage was done to the salmon pack in other canneries and packing houses of Richmon Colonial and Cleeve. The town of Steveston is under four feet of water.

Road Work Discontinued.

Black Duck, Minn., Dec. 29.—Railroad operations have been brought to a close owing to severe weather. Work will not be resumed on the new railroad until spring. Black Duck has experienced a phenomenal growth since the building of the railroad. The village now has an estimated population of 1,000.

Lifer Pardoned.

Sioux City, Iowa, Dec. 29.—James P. Johnson, sentenced for life from here for murdering his brother in cold blood in 1885, has been released on suspension of sentence by Gov. Shaw. The release was secured by Representative James Barrett on his agreement to take Johnson into his home.

Incident Is Closed.

New York, Dec. 29. — "The Maclay incident is now closed as far as the Brooklyn navy yard is concerned," said Rear Admiral Albert Barker in an interview. "Maclay has been notified of his removal and is out of the service."

Wireless Worked All Right.

Halifax, N. S., Dec. 29.—The steamer Lake Ontario, now here, was fitted up with wireless telegraphy apparatus before leaving England and she easily communicated with the lighthouses on the [illegible] coast thirty miles away.

WIFE'S MURDER STORY.

Traveled From Iowa to Helena in a Buggy With a Man She Alleges Is Murderer.

Helena, Mont., Dec. 29.—The Helena police are investigating a story told by Mrs. Mary Hansen, which involves the alleged murder of her husband at Belvidere, Ill., eight years ago by Charles Buell. The woman and Buell came to this city a few weeks ago from Iowa, making the trip overland in a buggy. Yesterday the woman had Buell arrested for ill treatment, and to the county attorney stated that while living with her husband at Belvidere, Ill., Buell and Hansen went hunting together. Neither returned. According to the woman's story, her husband was drowned by Buell. Mrs. Hansen joined the Salvation Army a few days ago, and upon the advice of the captain of the Army, it is said, confessed the story to the county attorney.

TALES OUT OF SCHOOL.

Telephone Girl Considered It Her Duty to Tell of a Conversation Over the Wires.

Racine, Wis., Dec. 29.—A sensational divorce case is said to be brewing which will soon be brought into court. The indirect cause of the suit is a telephone girl who told tales out of school. The central girl thought it her duty to notify the wife, who resides near her home, of what she heard the truant husband say over the wire. Detectives were employed by the wife and they succeeded in finding damaging evidence against the husband.

INSANE MAN CUTS HIS THROAT.

His Weapon Is a Small piece of Maple Stovewood.

Osceola, Wis., Dec. 29. — Yesterday forenoon Sheriff Johnson arrested a man named Elegreen, who resided with Mr. Gronquist near Deer lake and took him to Balsam Lake to be examined as to his sanity. Later Elegreen became violently insane. He secured a small piece of maple stovewood and cut his throat from ear to ear and died in a few minutes. Elegreen was a bachelor forty-five years old. It is reported that some one borrowed $1,100 from Elegreen and was unable to pay it back and that this caused him to lose his mind.

SEWING MACHINE INSPECTOR.

Remarkable Graft Is Successfully Worked in Dakota.

Sioux Falls, S. D., Dec. 29.—A smooth swindler is traveling over the state with a "graft" new to this region. He claims to be state inspector of sewing machines, and produces a bogus appointment purporting to have been issued by Gov. Herried. He states that the law requires all sewing machines to be inspected. His charge is from 25 to 50 cents for each inspection, and he is said to be making good money.

The garrison, consisting of 430 men, fought from 6 a. m. until 11:30 p. m. At 8 p. m. the garrison received reinforcements numbering 200 men. The battle started on the outskirts of the city, and ended at Caracoli, nine miles from Honda. Bayonets and machetes were used. The government forces were victorious. Four hundred men were killed during the battle.

TO PLEASE ARGENTINA.

Chile Consents to a Rectification in the Protocol.

Buenos Ayres, Dec. 29.—It was generally admitted last evening that the difficulties between Argentina and Chile had been ended. It is true that a word in the protocol was changed before the text of the document was made public at Santiago, but Senor Portela, the Argentine minister, protested against the alteration and the Chilean foreign minister promptly ordered a rectification to be made. The report that a revolution has broken out here is untrue.

EXPELLED FROM AUSTRIA.

Titled Gamblers Are Ordered by the Emperor to Leave the Country.

Vienna, Dec. 28. — Emperor Francis Joseph has ordered the expulsion from Austria of the principals in the baccarat game of Dec. 21, when at the Vienna Jockey club Count Potoicki lost $500,000 during three hours' playing, Count Pallavicini winning most of the money. Counts John and Joseph Potoicki have retired to Russia. Gambling for large amounts of money is illegal in Austria.

TWO MORE SHOT.

Cornered Burglars at Glyndon Open Fire on Citizens' Posse.

Glyndon, Minn., Dec. 27.—C. G. Tracy & Co.'s store was entered by burglars again Tuesday night about midnight. A person passing the store noticed two men trying the windows. He notified Mr. Tracy, who soon appeared on the scene, finding the men inside. Tracy watched the window and sent his son for the marshal, who soon appeared, accompanied by several others. In the meantime the men had left the building after doing some shooting, and started to run. A posse was organized and, with a team, started in pursuit. About half a mile west of town the men were overhauled and ordered to throw up their hands. Instead, they opened fire with their revolvers. R. B. Webb, one of the posse, sustained a bad wound in the leg, and one of the robbers received a charge of chicken shot in his face. They were captured and taken to Moorhead, where they will be given a hearing.

VERDICT IS DIRECTED.

Judge Tells Jury That George Strohm Is Not Guilty.

Deadwood, S. D., Dec. 27. — George Strohm was released in circuit court yesterday. Judge Moore directed that a verdict of not guilty be brought in by the jury. Strohm was under indictment for perjury at the trial of Herbert D. Caddy. He was tried last summer and found guilty. Sentence was suspended and a new trial was granted. This is the end of the prosecutions for perjury arising out of the Caddy trial. Three of the defendents in these prosecutions are serving penitentiary sentences.

JUROR BECOMES INSANE.

Leaves the Court Room and Attacks Members of His Family.

Grundy Center, Iowa, Dec. 27.—Mr. Putney, a young man about twenty-five years old, went violently insane during the progress of a trial of Stuck vs. Grundy Center, in the district court, he being a juror trying the case. He went home from court, and after breaking dishes, windows, etc., attacked his wife and children, and then crossed the road to where his mother lived and choked her. He life was saved only by her other son who appeared on the scene. Putney fought the officers, and it took several men to subdue him.

ON THE WARPATH

PAWNEE INDIANS EAT BUFFALO MEAT AND BECOME VERY UGLY.

INDULGE IN A BUFFALO DANCE

THEY CLAIM THAT VAST HERDS OF BUFFALO ARE COMING BACK.

WHITE PEOPLE ARE ALARMED

INDIANS ORDER THEM TO VACATE THEIR RANCHES AT ONCE.

Guthrie, Okla., Dec. 27.—The Pawnee Indians are on the warpath. An immense buffalo bull was so injured in transferring from the Santa Fe stock yards to Pawnee Bill's ranch, south of Guthrie, that he had to be killed. The meat was given by Maj. Lillie to the Indians for a buffalo dance. The In*dians have been dancing and pow-wow*ing ever since. They claim the vast herds of buffalo are coming back to this country and many of the Indians have notified the white lessees to vacate their ranches at once, as they wish to lay the fences low so the buffalo will have full sway of the country. The white people in the remote parts of the reservation are coming to Pawnee, and report that the Indians are acting in a threatening manner toward them. Pawnee Bill has placed mounted guards around his buffalo ranch, as the Indians are camping in the timber west of there and in sight of the herd, and from their suspicious actions, he thinks they intend to liberate the herd.

The United States Indian agent at that point has been notified and has made a report to the commissioner of Indian affairs at Washington.

EIGHT LIVES LOST.

Schooner Liza H. Parkhurst Founders in a Gale.

Gloucester, Mass., Dec. 27. — Eight men are believed to have lost their lives in the foundering of the schooner Eliza H. Parkhurst of this port, which was posted yesterday by its owners as missing. The Parkhurst, commanded by Capt. John D. McKinnon, sailed from the Bay of Islands, New Foundland, Nov. 24, for this port, with a crew of six men and one passenger, Lawrence McDonald of this city. The boat carried a cargo of herring. A gale sprang up Nov. 25, and in it the Parkhurst is believed to have foundered.

DOWAGER MAY GIVE UP POWER.

China's Ruler May Delegate Authority to Emperor.

Pekin, Dec. 27. — The continued reports of the empress dowager's intention to relinquish control of the government have recently gained considerable credence among the foreigners here, although the Chinese, who for some time have been much concerned regarding the attitude of the ministers, who are desirous of a solution of all unsettled questions, do not believe that she would voluntarily surrender power, or if she did surrender it, that the relinquishment would be sincere. Great preparations are being made at Paoting-fu for the reception of the court. The fact that the empress dowager will stop over at Paoting-fu supports the confident assertion that the emperor will return to Pekin first.

WAR MERELY POSTPONED.

Chile and Argentina Sign a Protocol.

Santiago, Chile, Dec. 27.—Senor Portela, Argentine minister to Chile, has postponed his departure, and it is announced that a protocol was signed yesterday establishing a modus vivendi between the two countries. The general opinion is that the questions at issue will be solved soon, to the great satisfaction of the whole country.

-o-

Buenos Ayres, Dec. 27. — The newspapers say the new protocol between Chile and Argentina dispels the immediate danger of war, but that the remedy is not permanent. The armies of the two countries are, meanwhile, continuing their warlike preparations.

AN ITALIAN SCANDAL.

Maid of the Late Countess Castiglione Is Arrested.

Rome, Dec. 27.—Angelica Vergozzola, who was lady's maid to the late Countess Castiglione, has been arrested at Spezzia. Her residence was searched by the police and voluminous private correspondence between Countess Castiglione and Napoleon, King Victor Emmanuel and Cavour was discovered. The letters are of great historic interest, revealing many secrets. An ivory crucifix worth 15,000 francs, choice Sevres vases and costly jewels were also found. Other arrests are imminent.

COMPULSORY PURCHASE.

Rumored That Ireland Will Be Saddled With One.

London, Dec. 27. — The Daily News gives it as a rumor that the government is preparing an Irish land bill providing an equivalent to compulsory purchase. It is believed that the measure provides that the tenant may buy at seventeen and the landlord sell at twenty years' purchase, the state providing the payment of the three years difference.

LIFE'S CHORD IS SEVERED.

Senator Sewell's Death Occurs After an Illness of Two Years.

Camden, N. J., Dec. 29—United States Senator William J. Sewell died at his home here at 9:30 a. m. yesterday. He suffered from diabetis, complicated with stomach and heart trouble. Senator Sewell's illness had extended over a period of two years, but his condition was not considered serious until about a year ago. His constant attention to the duties devolving upon him in his official capacity resulted, in 1899, in a collapse. A trip to Europe was beneficial, and he soon recovered sufficiently to resume his duties. Toward the end of the last session of congress he developed a complication of diseases and, acting on the advice of his physicians, again visited various health resorts in Europe. Upon his return, his condition showing no improvement, Senator Sewell went to Asheville, N. C., where he remained two months. He returned to his home about four weeks ago, and for a few days a slight improvement in his condition was noted. During the past two weeks he has failed steadily and he sank into unconsciousness before he died. Senator Sewell was born in Ireland in 1835.

DEPEW TAKES FIRST STEP.

Civil Ceremony of His Marriage to Miss Palmer.

Nice, Dec. 29.—The civil ceremony of the marriage of Senator Chauncey M. Depew and Miss May Palmer took place yesterday afternoon in the United States consulate. The bride's witnesses were James Gordon Bennett and Count de Sers. Among others present were Mrs. Palmer, Countess de Sers and Baroness von Andre. Senator Depew was in excellent health. The bride was charmingly dressed. The bride being a Catholic, there will be two religious ceremonies. The first will take place at Notre Dame and the second at the Episcopal church at 11 o'clock in the morning and at noon today, respectively, when ten bluejackets from the United States cruiser Albany will form a guard of honor.

DOWN A MOUNTAIN.

Freight Train Runs Away and Four Trainmen Are Killed.

Scranton, Pa., Dec. 29.—An Ontario & Western coal train ran away on the heavy eighty-foot grade going down the mountain on the Scranton division east of Poyntelle, Wayne county, yesterday. Near Preston Park, in passing a switch frog it jumped the track and plunged down a hill for nearly one hundred feet. The engine and forty gondola cars, all loaded, were piled in a mass. Four trainmen were killed. The track was covered with sleet and snow and the air brakes were ineffective. The train dashed down the mountain at terrible speed, passing Winwood at an estimated rate of eighty miles an hour.

YOUTH AFTER NOTORIETY.

With Shackles on He will Attempt to Tour the World.

Chicago, Dec. 29. — William Croft, twenty-two years old, will try to make a trip around the world with his feet shackled and his left arm locked by a handcuff to a strap around his waist. Croft expects to make the trip without money, supporting himself as he goes along by doing what work he can with his right arm. Croft will go to New York, Liverpool, Haver, Rotterdam, through Denmark, Finland, Russia, to the Black sea; from there to Port Said, Ceylon; Australia, Japan, China and then return to the United States by way of San Francisco. Croft is the son of Dr. Ernest Frederick Croft, Nottinghill, London.

OFFICIALS IN A FIX.

Imprisoned Below the Street for Seven Hours.

Chicago, Dec. 29.—Five men were imprisoned for seven hours below the surface of the intersection of Franklin and Washington streets yesterday. They were A. G. Wheeler, president of the Illinois Telephone and Telegraph company; John T. Fanning, secretary of the Fanning Manufacturing company; George W. Jackson, John J. Corbett and William Newman, contractors. The party was making an inspection of the tunnel of the telephone company and failed to make their signals for the elevator heard by those on the surface. They were finally rescued. None of them was seriously harmed by his experience.

BEEF INSTEAD OF BOOKS.

A London Labor Leader's Comment on Carnegie's Gifts.

Chicago, Dec. 29.—"Carnegie ought to buy beef instead of books. If he had given his workmen more wages in the past he would never have so much money to give away now, and his former employes would be in a better condition." This is the tribute paid to Mr. Carnegie by Ben Tillett, president of the London Dockers' union, who is in this country at present as fraternal delegate to the recent convention of the American Federation of Labor. Mr. Tillett spoke at Hull house last night to an audience composed principally of trade unionists.

Demented From Overwork.

Lexington, Ky., Dec. 29.—S. L. Myers, a prominent insurance agent who wandered away from home ten days ago and was caught twice and escaped, was captured and returned home yesterday. Recollection of all incidents since he left is a complete blank. He is still in a partially demented condition, caused by overwork.

DEWET'S REVENGE

BOER COMMANDER GIVES THE BRITISH A VERY LIVELY SHAKE-UP.

BRITISH CASUALTIES ARE HEAVY

WITH CONSIDERABLE FORCE THE BRITISH CAMP IS RUSHED AT NIGHT.

DEWET TRIES BRITISH TACTICS

AND TAKES REVENGE FOR RECENT SUCCESSES OF THE BRITISH.

London, Dec. 28. — Gen. Dewet has taken revenge for the recent successes of the British in rushing laagers at night, and has captured a British camp in the eastern part of the Orange River Colony by the use of tactics similar to those employed by the British. The scene of the reverse is within one of the areas of the Boers' main resistance, where Gen. Dewet has frequently foiled the British commanders. The following brief dispatch from Gen. Kitchener, dated at Johannesburg, Dec. 26, tells all that it as present known of the affair:

"Rundle reports that Col. Firman's camp at Zeefontein was successfully rushed on the night of Dec. 24 by a considerable force of Boers under Dewet. I fear the casualties are many. Firman's column consisted of the Thirty-fourth, Thirty-fifth, Thirty-sixth and Fifty-third companies of Imperial yeomanry, one gun of the Seventy-ninth and one pompom. They were guarding the head of the blockhouse line from Harrismith to Bethlehem. The First and Second Imperial Light Horse have gone in pursuit of the Boers."

BOERS WITH BRITISH.

Corps of Burghers Giving Lord Kitchener Valuable Assistance.

Pretoria, Dec. 28.—The formation of a new burgher corps, to be known as National Scouts, has aroused great interest among the surrendered burghers. In view of numerous meetings and applications, Gen. Lord Kitchener has authorized the creation of fresh wings to operate in the Southern and Eastern Transvaal, under prominent Boer leaders placed by the burghers themselves. It is stated that much of the recent success of the British is due to the cooperation of Celliers and Cronje's commandos, acting under Gen. Bruce Hamilton.

MACLAY DIES HARD.

He Strenuously Objects to Losing His "Special Laborer" Position.

New York, Dec. 28.—Edgar Stanton Maclay, who refused to resign as special laborer in the office of the general storekeeper of the navy yard, was summarily discharged yesterday. Maclay went to the navy yard as usual yesterday and prepared to resume his duties. Pay Director Putnam went to Maclay's desk, read him the telegram of dismissal received from Washington the previous day and told him that he was dismissed. Maclay left the yard immediately. He said he would return at the usual hour to-day, prepared to go to work.

-o-

Washington, Dec. 28.—The civil service commission yesterday notified Edgar S. Maclay, the historian recently employed in the Brooklyn navy yard, that his removal from his position was not in "violation of the civil service act." This notification is contained in a letter written to Mr. Maclay by President Proctor of the commission and is in reply to an inquiry from him.

ANOTHER PLACE FOR NOYES.

Cape Nome Jurist Will Not Be Returned to His Post.

Washington, Dec. 28.—The president has settled the scandals growing out of the administration of justice at Cape Nome by ordering that Judge Noyes be restrained from returning to his judicial duties at that great Arctic gold mining camp. The department of justice will endeavor to find another place for Noyes.

Merchant Shot to Death.

Columbus, Ga., Dec. 28. — Joseph Fincher, a prominent merchant and planter, was shot to death at 6 o'clock Wednesday night near Crawford Alta, twelve miles west of here. Uriah Porter, a neighbor, is charged with the killing. It is said Porter and Fincher were not on good terms and that Porter openly threatened to kill Fincher.

Fresh Complications.

New York, Dec. 28.—Another complication has arisen between France and Venezuela, says the Port of Spain correspondent of the Herald. This new grievance arises from the seizure of the properties of Senor Manuel A. Matos, an alleged leader of the new Venezuelan revolution, and a man of wealth.

Absconder Arrested.

New York, Dec. 28.—A. J. Ayres, a young messenger of the Union Bank of Brooklyn, who disappeared recently with $2,000 of the bank's money, was arrested yesterday in Montreal.

Damaged by Fire.

Omaha, Dec. 28.—Fire yesterday in the pharmaceutical department of the Cudahy Packing company's plant did $35,000 or $40,000 damage before it was gotten under control.

Trenton Anniversary.

Trenton, N. J., Dec. 28.—The 125th anniversary of the battle of Trenton was elaborately celebrated here. The auspicious weather had the effect of bringing out a large crowd of strangers and local people, who lined the streets along which the sham battle and the subsequent parade took place.

Collapse of a Crane.

Chicago, Dec. 28.—Three men were killed and three seriously injured by the breaking of a huge crane at the plant of the American Bridge company.

NEWS IN BRIEF.

Overflow From the Wires in a Condensed Form.

Dewitt Clinton House died at his home in Kansas City, aged seventy-four years. He was one of the oldest and best known traveling men in the United States.

There is a large and ever increasing number of thoughtful and well informed people in Great Britain who express the serious belief that if radical changes do not come about in the near future, the United Kingdom will be relegated to the third position in the ranks of the world's trade and commerce. This statement is made by United States Consul Boyle at Liverpool, in his annual report.

THOSE LYNCHINGS.

Italians Want Uncle Sam to Get Hold of Mob Men.

Washington, Dec. 27. — The Italian government has been renewing its efforts of late with the authorities in Washington to have our federal statutes so extended as to protect foreigners in cases arising within the jurisdiction of states, thus giving a federal remedy for lynchings and like affrays directed against Italians, such as have occurred in Louisiana, Colorado and Mississippi. It is the exchange of views in this connection which recently brought on the discussion in the Italian senate, when Baron Fava interpolated the Italian premier as to the progress of an adjustment.

SANTA CLAUS ABLAZE.

His Whiskers Caught Fire and He Was Seriously Burned.

Chicago, Dec. 27.—Frank Weinschinka was severely burned while playing Santa Claus at his home, 3759 Wentworth avenue, last night. He was removed to the Provident hospital by the police. He dressed up to resemble Santa Claus, and, entering the parlor of his home, started to bedeck the tree with presents. After finishing the work of hanging the presents he lighted the candles. In doing so his whiskers became ignited. He was seriously burned.

PANIC IN A STORE.

Belated Shoppers, Frightened by Fire, Trample Upon Each Other.

Omaha, Dec. 27.—A veritable panic took place in J. L. Brandeis & Son's Boston store while the great building was crowded to the doors with holiday shoppers. Fire broke out in the display windows and smoke soon filled the building. There was instantly a crush to escape from the building. Many persons were knocked down and trampled upon. The house fire brigade turned several streams on the blaze, which was soon under control.

MILLION DOLLAR FIRE.

Warehouses in Merida, Yucatan, Are Consumed.

Mexico City, Dec. 27.—Word reaches here from Merida, Yucatan, that a great fire has been raging at Progresso, starting in the warehouses of Eshanove Bros., and spreading to the warehouse of Gabriel Escalante and the consignment department of the Merida railway. Some 10,000 bales of henequin were exposed to the flames and it is believed much of it has been destroyed. The loss is estimated at a million dollars.

FATHER FOLLOWS SON.

Second Murder the Result of a Newspaper Article.

Pine Bluff, Ark., Dec. 27. — Moses Solmeson, a merchant, last night shot and killed George Stubblefield. The killing, which is alleged to have been done in self-defense, grew out of a newspaper article written several months ago by Meyer Solmeson, brother of Moses Solmeson, which resulted in Meyer killing Carl Stubblefield, the son of the victim of yesterday's shooting.

Survey Schedule Was False.

Guthrie, Okla., Dec. 26. — Acting on [illegible] secretary of the interior government officials have stopped all building and improvement operations at McAlester, Ind. T., until a schedule of values of all property has been prepared by the townsite committee. A former survey schedule was found to be false and the secretary of the interior took a hand.

Rickerby's Folly

By TOM GALLON

CHAPTER VIII. (Continued.)

"Well, there's nothing ghostly about that, is there?" asked Gilbert Rickerby. "Now, you shall hear all that I can tell about myself. In this matter I am absolutely alone, and I am beset by such troubles as fall to the lot of few men. Look at me; take these hands of flesh into your own, if you will; hear the voice in which I speak to you; and then hear me say that I am dead and buried. Yes, it's true: I stand to-night in the house in which I was born—the house in which my mother died; yet I stand as the very ghost of myself—without a name—without the right to any name on earth. Look at me, and tell me if any man ever had such a fate as mine?"

George Reeks was quite unequal to the situation; he opened his mouth feebly once or twice, as if to speak, but said nothing. At last, finding his mouth open, and deeming it better to take advantage of the circumstance, he absent-mindedly, put the neck of the flask into it and took another pull.

"I want to trust you, Mr. Reeks; I believe I can. I might, it is true, go out into the world to-night, declare who I am, and expose the scoundrel who has brought this misery upon me; but I cannot do that. In doing that it would involve the name of one who is very, very dear to me—one who is helpless, and who can say nothing in her own defense or in mine."

"The—the young girl—I should say the young lady?" broke in Mr. Reeks.

"The young lady of whom you have already heard, and of whom mention was made in the diary you have read. But for her, I should not be in hiding here an hour longer; I would tear this man—this Nugent Leathwood—out into the sight of all men, and show him for what I believe him to be. Listen; you shall hear everything I have to tell."

Mr. Reeks, in the most absent-minded fashion, took another pull at the flask, but still kept his eyes fixed on Gilbert Rickerby. Gilbert, for his part, continued to pace about the floor in his excitement, although he spoke always in a subdued voice.

"I needn't tell you anything about my early life; suffice it to say that I was born here, the only child of a most unhappy marriage. In all my early years I remember, after my mother's death, but one bright thing in them—a girl. God knows I needed some brightness, something to lift away from me the appalling silence and somberness of this place. I found it in her. We were little more than children; but we clung to each other, as people of riper years might have done; trusted each other; were all in all to each other. Then, four years ago, my father discovered our secret meetings, drove me from the house, and sent her away."

"That was hard, very hard," murmured Mr. Reeks, in deep sympathy.

"I went abroad," continued Gilbert, moving about the room in a restless fashion, and speaking almost as though he had no listener, "and saw nothing more of her. But we corresponded regularly, through a medium known only to ourselves. Then, quite suddenly, I had a letter concerning her from a cousin of mine—this man, Nugent Leathwood, whom you have seen to-night. After I left home this man had been high in my father's favor, and was supposed to exercise a sort of guardianship over the property, which my father, in his dying hour, had left to me. Well, this man wrote me that he had seen my girlish sweetheart, often and often; that a love-story had begun to be spelled out between them; that she repented the promise she had made to me; and that, now that she was of an age to know her own mind, she had turned to him—Leathwood—as to the one love of her life."

"And you believed him?"

"What else could I do? I suppose I ought to have written to the girl and asked for her version of the matter. But you must remember, Mr. Reeks, that I was a soured and disappointed man; that my childhood and my young manhood had been most unhappy; that I had wandered the earth alone, and had learned to distrust almost everyone I met. I clung to this girl alone of all the world. Now, it seemed, even she was to disappoint me—to turn from me in the hour when most I needed her."

"Well—and may I ask what happened then?" asked Mr. Reeks.

"I believed his story, and for a time I did nothing. Wavering about the matter, I determined, at last, after nearly two years had passed, to go home—back to England. I must tell you that, immediately before receiving the letter from Leathwood, I had written to him, telling him that I was coming to England to see my promised wife; on that, his letter followed. Then I changed my plans; and, after wandering aimlessly for a long time, made up my mind to go back. Perhaps I hungered for a sight of the old place where I had known her, and where we had whispered together; perhaps I had doubts of the real truth of the story. At all events, I came back to England."

"And came to No. 2, Little Pond street, Camden Town?" said Mr. Reeks, feeling that he had got the matter aright at last.

"Yes; I came to your house with my servant, James Holden, and took your vacant rooms. I had a reason for taking an obscure lodging like that—a reason for hiding myself. I had determined that my stay in England should be a short one. I had really come to perform a Quixotic action, but one which I regarded as a matter of justice."

"I remember you said something about that in the diary I took the liberty of reading last night," said Mr. Reeks, nodding slowly.

"Yes; I remember I wrote something about it before I went out that night. I had kept a diary for years—a mere vehicle for my own unhappy thoughts. But I swear to you that on that night I went out with the kindliest, the best, the truest hopes and desires a man may carry in his breast. For the first time in my life I was going to do a great and good thing; I was going to make two people happy."

"Very laudable, I am sure," commented Mr. Reeks.

"I pictured to myself this girl, whom I had loved, and love still, as being somewhat unhappy at the thought of the wrong she felt she had done me; I pictured the man as being remorseful, too. And I meant that night to put them both at their ease; to cry to them, 'I will not stand in the way of your happiness; I will not bind any woman to a promise made when she was too young to know what it involved. I will join your hands; more than that, I will enrich you both with what would have been hers had she married me; and I set out that night to do it."

"Without saying a word to anybody, and taking your servant with you?" supplemented the little man.

"Yes; that was the beginning of everything; that was the one fatal mistake I made," said Gilbert Rickerby, with a mournful shake of the head. "At the last moment I changed my mind. I had dealt in mystery all my life; had wandered, a mysterious, unknown man since I was a boy, and I wanted, for this last time, to be mysterious still. I took my servant with me that night in order that he might spy out the land, as it were; in order that he might say to this cousin of mine: 'My master will not put in an appearance yet; he sends me, in his place, to tell you that he is really here, to bring you the good news he has traveled so far to tell.' So I gave my servant a card of mine, and put in his possession a sum of £500 as an earnest of what I meant to do, and to show him that the man did not come with a mere idle tale."

"Well, what happened then?" asked Mr. Reeks, leaning forward, in his eagerness to know more.

"The servant never returned; and, a day or so afterwards, Nugent Leathwood advertised for me, demanding to know why I had not kept the appointment made. More than that, Nugent Leathwood claimed the body of another man—an utter stranger to me—as Gilbert Rickerby; and that man I saw come from this house on the night he met his death in the street. I followed the body of the stranger side by side with Nugent Leathwood to the grave; I stood by while that body was buried, under my name."

"But how is it that Leathwood did not recognize you?" asked Reeks, bewildered.

"He had never seen me," replied Gilbert. "We had merely corresponded by letter; that was one reason for my sending the servant before me, because I felt that Leathwood might think that I had gone in person and might blurt out in that first moment his real feelings about the matter."

"But the servant—what of him?"

"Dead—murdered, apparently at the very hour he entered the house. The £500 you were to have, Mr. Reeks, was taken from the body of James Holden."

The brain of the little man began to reel again; he started form his seat, and came forward, tremblingly, towards Gilbert. "But I don't understand," he gasped. "How do you know all this?"

"Because I have found the poor fellow's body in this very house—in the room above where we are now—don't start; he's past hurting you, or anyone. That's a matter about which I want your help. I must stay here—hidden—for the present; and that body must be got rid of."

If ever Mr. Reeks had wished himself safely back in Little Pond street, even though a cloud of brokers and duns were hovering about the house, it was surely at that moment. For Mr. Reeks, despite his mistakes and the impecunious condition in which he usually lived, was, before all things, a law-abiding citizen; and the disposal, for however good a reason, of the body of a murdered man, is not a thing to be lightly undertaken. He drew back, protesting, feebly, with his hands.

"Indeed, Mr. Rickerby, I do assure you that I have a most serious objection to having anything to do with the matter. Whatever I might be disposed to do, if I stood alone (I am generally considered a bold and reckless man), I am bound to remember Mrs. R. Mrs. R. has no one to protect her in the event of anything happening—in the legal sense—to me; I must, really, decline."

"My dear Mr. Reeks, I feel sure that when I tell you that I am not the only one involved in the matter, you will be willing to help me. There is in this house the young girl about whom I have spoken. She is very ill—mentally ill; but she is kept a close prisoner in the other part of the house. I cannot tell whether her imprisonment is forced upon her, or whether she lives there voluntarily; in any case, she is not in a fit state to judge of the matter."

"But what is the matter with her?" asked Mr. Reeks.

"She came here, as far as I can learn, on the very night that I crept into the house," replied Gilbert. "She must have been informed of my supposed death; I fear"—he ground his teeth in helpless rage as he thought of it—"I fear that she must have been offered some insult, probably at the hands of that villain, my cousin. At any rate, she fled from him, and found her way in here—wandered about in the darkness all night, and stumbled, accidentally, upon me. You may imagine what she must have felt, in coming suddenly, in the twilight of this place, upon the figure of a man she knew—or thought she knew—was dead. She rushed away from me; she was discovered by a faithful old servant, who waits upon me in secret; and was by her taken back to the room in the other house which had been prepared for her. There she lies, in a high fever—and delirious. And all these things have been brought about—directly or indirectly—by the man who murdered poor James Holden."

"It's horrible!" ejaculated Mr. Reeks. "But I cannot understand the murder of the servant; it wasn't for the money—or why should Leathwood be so anxious to give it to me?"

"No—it wasn't for the money," said Gilbert, slowly. "It was because he took the servant for the master; because he thought that the man who went there at the appointed time, and with my card in his hand, was the man who had promised to be there at that hour—Gilbert Rickerby. Doubtless he still believes that the man he killed was Gilbert Rickerby."

"I see. And I think I understand why he followed that stranger to the grave and buried him as Gilbert Rickerby. It was to cover his own crime."

"Exactly," responded Gilbert. "The man was someone, probably, known only to Leathwood; he may have seen the crime, and, lying near death in the hospital, the name of the man he supposed to have been murdered was always on his lips; more than that, he had the card I gave to Holden clenched tightly in his hand. He may have picked it up in the room where the murder was committed."

Mr. George Reeks sat for a long time in silence, his chin resting on the knuckles of his right hand, deep in thought. Gilbert Rickerby watched him anxiously. From time to time the little man shook his head, doubtfully; once or twice he nodded it, slowly.

"Come," said Gilbert, at last, "I am quite sure you will help me in this. I want to get rid of this dreadful thing in the house to-night."

"To-night!" Mr. Reeks sat upright, with the remains of his scanty hair bristling. Had there been a reasonable prospect of delay the little man would probably have been willing to promise anything, on the chance of getting out of it when it came to a matter of performance. But to be expected to tackle dead bodies on the instant was more than disconcerting.

"Certainly; why not?" exclaimed Gilbert, stopping, impatiently, before him. "The fact of the matter is this: I do not know who committed the murder, although I have a shrewd suspicion that it was my cousin; and I have determined to lie hidden here as long as possible, until I can solve the mystery. More than that, I want to know if what my cousin said about the girl was true; if she loved him, as he asserted, what should be his reason for putting me out of the way? Yes; that body must be got rid of to-night."

At this moment, Gilbert observed, to his surprise, that Mr. Reeks was sitting perfectly still, with one hand raised, listening intently: drawing, instinctively, nearer to him, Gilbert whispered, hurriedly: "What is it? What do you hear?"

"Someone is coming, slowly and quietly, toward that door," whispered Mr. Reeks, pointing to a door which stood at the farther end of the room.

Without a word, Gilbert Rickerby crept, cautiously, across the room and stood close against the door, listening. In an instant he was back again; as he passed the table, on which a lighted candle stood, he blew it out; the room was in darkness at once. Mr. Reeks felt a strong hand grip his arm, and heard the voice of Gilbert Rickerby in his ear:

"This way—quietly!"

Gilbert Rickerby appeared to open another door, almost immediately behind where they stood; and Mr. Reeks felt himself drawn through and stumbling on a stairway. Then the whisper at his ear again:

"Hush! Whoever it is, is in the room now; they've brought a light with them. Keep still; I am going to peep out."

The door was opened a very little way, and Mr. Reeks could see the big form of Gilbert Rickerby standing close against the aperture. Then, in a moment, the door was shut; and Gilbert Rickerby was leaning against the wall beside him, breathing heavily, and gasping as though he had received a blow.

"What is it? What's the matter?" whispered Mr. Reeks, eagerly.

"It's the girl!" came the whispered reply. "She has found her way here again! Oh! if I might only speak to her!"

Very cautiously, he opened the door a very little way and peered out. Mr. Reeks, drawn up close against the wall, could see nothing; but when a voice came from the room he could hear it distinctly. It was the voice of the girl, and she called, clearly, distinctly, and without fear:

"Gilbert! Gilbert!"

A moment's hesitation, and then Gilbert opened the door—squeezing Mr. Reeks most unceremoniously behind it—and passed out into the room. Mr. Reeks, peering through the cracks where the hinges were, saw the girl, who held a candle in her hand, advance fearlessly towards the young man. She set the candle on the table and held out her hands towards him. And, oh, the look upon her face! The little man could not have withdrawn his eyes, however much he had wanted to do so.

"Gilbert—my love!" cried the sweet, girlish voice. "You don't know what a long journey I have come to meet you. So—let me hold your hands. Do you know what place this is where we meet again?"

Mr. Reeks, peering through the crack, saw Gilbert take the girl's hands in his; heard him speak. "No, dear Olive," said the young man, "what place is it?"

"They told me you were dead, dear Gilbert," she said. "That must be true; because I have come through such strange dreams and visions to reach you. But I have found you at last—my dear, my dear!" She crept closer to him and hung about his neck. "I have found you, Gilbert—in the World of Dreams!"

CHAPTER IX.

Ursula Has a Vision.

Of all the strange people who wandered like shadows, in the house known as Rickerby's Folly, perhaps the strangest and most unhappy was the woman who had journeyed with Anthony Taggett and his wife to the house on the night which first saw the coming of Olive Mallory to it, the woman Nugent Leathwood had addressed as "Ursula," and who had known him before that time as Gilbert Rickerby. As it had been his one wish merely to keep so undesirable a visitor quiet, for a time, at least, and as, moreover, she resolutely refused to leave the place, he had consented to her remaining there, and had arranged that she should occupy one of the many rooms which had remained for so long a time untenanted.

In an unhappy hour this woman, Ursula Sewell, with all her life opening out before her with what seemed the brightest promise, had met Nugent Leathwood in Bristol. After that it had been an old story, with scarcely even the dignity of a new setting. The man—the better to deceive the woman—had taken the name that was at that time most prominently in his thoughts, that of Gilbert Rickerby. The woman, for her part, had loved him, as only such a passionate creature could love; had believed all he had said and all his promises. Only when it was too late did she realize that she had sacrificed all that a woman should hold most dear to a man who was worthless and whose promises were mere empty words. Then the supposed Gilbert Rickerby had gone away, leaving Ursula Sewell to mourn over the wreck of all her hopes and to bear her shame alone. From that time, although her love for the man never changed and never abated, there grew up in her mind a fierce resentment against the man and a strong resolve to find him. That she succeeded in doing this has already been told; but her position now seemed worse even than before.

Nugent Leathwood refused to have anything to do with her. She could never find him alone; if she wanted to speak with him, he always arranged that old Cornelius should be present. She kept to her own room as much as possible, and scarcely touched the food Cornelius brought to her.

"Gels—gels—gels!" he snarled, one morning, as he set a tray down on the table. "Can't think what they was born into the world for—I can't. The best of men loses their 'eads over 'em. I wonder 'ow long you mean to stop 'ere?"

"I shall stop here just as long as it suits me to do so," she retorted. "I'm not likely to be influenced in my comings and goings by your opinion."

"Ay—I daresay not," was the reply. "But I'll 'ave you know that Mr. Cornelius Veevers 'as a word to say about most things in this 'ouse. An' you ain't the only gel in it; don't forget that."

She faced round upon him with blazing eyes. "What do you mean? How dare you—!"

"Aha; I thought that would stir you up a little, my gel," she said, chuckling. "It's only luck, my dear, merely luck—a matter of one go down, t'other come up; you've gone down, and t'other gel 'as come up. W'y don't yer take it sensible-like, an' go about yer business? W'en I was a young feller I was a rare gay dog, I promise you; many a time I've loved and rode away—or walked away—it's all the same thing. Oh—a gay dog I was!"

If Mr. Veevers had ever been "a gay dog," as he suggested, it must have been such a very long time before that he might well have left the remembrance of it buried among forgotten things. Certainly, he looked anything but a gay dog then, as he went shuffling out of the room, wagging his wicked old head from side to side, and grin-grinning maliciously.

But his words had had an effect on Ursula—had stabbed afresh the wound which rankled at all times so bitterly. She walked the room, after the old man had gone, like a caged wild beast—muttering to herself and twisting her hands ruthlessly in the bosom of her dress, as though she would have torn her heart out.

"I won't stand it! I won't stay here another hour, in the same house with that baby-faced girl!" Then another mood seized her, and she stopped, pondering deeply. "Yet why should I go? If any woman has the right to be here, surely, I am the one. No—no; that would be madness—to go away and leave the field to her. I daresay he thinks that he will shake me off somehow—but he won't—I'll swear he won't!"

She knew that Olive Mallory had been ill; but the thought of that woke no tenderness in her; she knew that, to all intents and purposes, the girl was alone and unprotected in that house; even that did not move her. She could not get beyond the thought that this girl was her rival; that but for her, Nugent Lethwood might have kept that old promise of his and atoned for his treachery. Certainly, she knew nothing definite about the girl being there, or for what purpose she had originally come; her jealousy was merely instinctive, and had been fed by the sarcastic and sneering remarks of old Cornelius.

She had only seen the girl once, when Olive had been brought back into that inhabited part of the house by Jemima—brought back in a half-fainting condition, and muttering strange things; she had seen only, for her torment, that the girl was very beautiful. But now, after what Cornelius had said, a desperate desire to see the girl came upon her. She wanted to know what this rival of hers was doing, and where she was, and who was with her. She felt she could not rest; she must know all that was being done.

She waited until long after nightfall, when there would be less chance of encountering anyone about the house; and then set off in search of the room where the girl lay.

Save for those two rooms wherein lights shone at night, the house was always in darkness; no gleam from gas jet or lamp dispelled the shadows in the long and gloomy passages. Ursula Sewell remembered, however, the part of the house towards which she had seen the girl taken; she set out for it, creeping along as quietly as possible, and listening intently for any chance sound which might suggest that anyone was following or observing her. Going on in this cautious fashion, she had come to the end of a corridor, near the top of the house, out of which doors opened on either side; the faint light which came through a window at the end, showed her where the doorways were.

Then, suddenly, one of the doors at the far end of this corridor opened, and the faint light was increased by the light of a candle. Watching eagerly, Ursula saw come from the door first a candlestick, and then an arm; all very slowly; then, following the arm, the figure of the girl she sought. She drew back round the corner at the end of the passage and peered out.

Very slowly, Olive Malory came on down the corridor, with the light held before her, and with her eyes staring straight ahead. She seemed, to the listening woman, to say something to herself as she walked—speaking always in a quiet, low voice, that had a curious ring of happiness in it. As she passed the watcher, apparently quite unconscious of that watcher's presence, her face looked white and unearthly in the light thrown upon it from the candle; and Ursula shrank back, awed in spite of herself. But the great thing for her to discover was where this girl was going, at the dead hour of night, and what mischief was on foot.

As Olive went, sowly and steadily down the stairs, Ursula Sewell crept after her—making of herself nothing but a mere shadow, against the background of the other shadows she passed. Once the girl stopped, as if undecided where to go; but that was at the door of the room into which she had been taken on the night of her arrival. She only hesitated there a moment, and then, passing her hand across her brow, as though to clear away some doubt which hung upon her, went on rapidly. Evidently she was now perfectly certain of her way. With a little laugh of happy excitement and satisfaction, she pulled open a low door in the thick wall and passed quickly through. The door swung after her, leaving Ursula in the dense darkness.

A curious feeling of dread had swept over the woman who had felt so bold and resourceful a few moments before. She was of the kind that would have fought with any earthly tangible thing for her rights or on account of her wrongs; but this was a matter beyond her. She had heard uncanny whispers about that deserted second house, wherein ghosts of long-dead, unhappy folk wandered and wailed through the night, and she knew, instinctively, that the girl had gone straight into it. Possibly, with the desire to frighten her, Ursula had been told where the door led to, and had been ready to avoid it, in consequence, like the plague. But now this young girl, new-risen from a bed of fever and delirium, had gone, unhesitatingly, straight into it. And the woman who had tracked her so far, hesitated to follow.

After a few moments curiosity gained the master over any feeling of mere dread; she fumbled about the wall in the darkness, until she found the handle, pulled open the door, and passed through. As she advanced into the darkness, along a narrow passage, the walls of which she could feel on either side with her outstretched hands, she heard the faint thud of the door, as it closed back into its place behind her; while in front, to guide her, was a long streak of light, evidently coming through another door partially open. Beyond, where the light was, she heard the sound of voices.

On and on, step by step, she crept nearer to the door, until, with her face pressed close against the wall where the crack of light was, she could see into the room. And this is what she saw and heard:

(To Be Continued.)

No Concern of His.

A Frenchman and an Englishman were one day occupying a first-class smoking carriage on an English train. The Frenchman was at the other end, looking toward the direction of his fellow traveler; the Englishman was at the other end looking toward his own window and turning his back to the Frenchman.

The latter was wondering if his mute companion was not going to give him a chance to open his mouth and say something. The Englishman dropped some ashes from his cigar on his trousers. The good Frenchman thought that, at last, his chance had come.

"Excuse me, sir," he said, "you have dropped some ashes on your—"

"Oh," coolly replied the Englishman, "for the last ten minutes I have seen a box of matches on fire in your back pocket, and I did not interfere with you."—Cassell's Journal.

"That Infernal Piano".

An Englishman, who was a friend of the Gladstone family, was asked, long ago, what he thought of Mr. Herbert Gladstone's political prospects.

"Herbert," he said, "might do remarkably well. I have no doubt, having heard him speak, that he could do very well, indeed. But one thing stands in the way—that piano. If only he would give up that piano, that infernal piano."

Mr. Herbert Gladstone has been faithful to his piano, and it is said that what has not hindered him in his political life has been a considerable advantage to him in another field.—New York Times.

Too Much for the Judge.

An old Maryland colored man was summoned to court by a controversy over the ownership of a mule.

"Who bought the mule?" demanded the judge.

"Clem Smif en Ah each bought half ob him, sah," responded the old man.

"Where is Smith now?"

"He ain't never cum down yit, sah. He went to curry his half when his half was in a bad humor. Now Clem's chillun wants to get deh fatheh's half awty from my half, en deh half am dess half—"

"Stop!" roared the judge. "Dismiss the case."—Chicago News.

How Should He Know?

While sitting in my Morris chair, last night, Marie, my wife's maid servant, came up from behind me and put her hands over my eyes.

"Guess who it is, monsieur?" she cried, gaily.

"My darling wife," I faltered.

"Monsieur is a good guesser," cried Marie, "and monsieur shall have a kiss from his darling wife."

As I explained to my wife, later, how was I to know that it was Marie? Was I not blindfolded so that I could not see?—Indianapolis Star.

A Gentle Hint.

"Do you always preach without notes?" inquired the new vestryman.

"Yes," replied the old minister.

"Don't you think you might do better if you preached with notes?"

"Undoubtedly I would if they were five or ten-dollar notes."—Philadelphia Press.

Checkmated.

No; she would not be his wife.

"Have a care!" he hissed, and his eyes held a vengeful glitter. "If you refuse me I shall become great and famous."

"You dare not!" cried the beautiful girl, her voice rising to a shriek. "If you do, I shall get rich publishing your love-letters!"

For a moment he stood looking at her balefully. Then he turned and slunk away.—Cassell's Journal.

Never Touched Him.

"They say she's just crazy to marry him."

"She is, indeed. She's continually throwing herself at his head; and, the strangest part of it is, he never suspects it."

"Oh, that's not so strange. Women are notoriously poor throwers, you know."—Philadelphia Press.

THE BEET SUGAR INDUSTRY.

A most important article, giving Messrs. Oxnard's and Cutting's views on the Beet Sugar industry in this country, appeared on the editorial page of the New York Evening Post of December 12th, 1901, and as every household in the land is interested in sugar the article will be of universal interest.

"The Evening Post bids the heartiest welcome to every American industry that can stand on its own bottom and make its way without leaning on the poor rates. Among these self-supporting industries, we are glad to know, is the production of beet sugar. At all events, it was such two years ago. We publish elsewhere a letter written in 1899, and signed by Mr. Oxnard and Mr. Cutting, the chiefs of this industry on the eastern side of the Rocky Mountains, showing that this was the happy condition of the trade at that time. If parties masquerading as beet sugar producers are besieging the President and Congress at this moment, and pretending that they will be ruined if Cuban sugar is admitted for six months at half the present rates of duty, their false pretences ought to be exposed.

"The letter of Messrs. Oxnard and Cutting was probably written for the purpose of inducing the farmers of the Mississippi valley to go more largely into the cultivation of beets for the sugar factories. This was a laudable motive for telling the truth and showing the large profits which awaited both the beet-grower and the manufacturer if the industry were perseveringly and intelligently prosecuted. To this end it was pointed out that farmers could clear $65 per acre by cultivating beets, and might even make $100. But in order to assure the cultivator that he would not be exposed to reverses by possible changes in the tariff, they proceeded to show that the industry stood in no need of protection.

"The beet sugar industry, these gentlemen say, 'stands on as firm a basis as any business in the country.' They point out the fact—a very important one—that their product comes out as a finished article, refined and granulated. It is not, like cane-sugar grown in the West India Islands, a black and offensive paste, which must be carried in wagons to the seaboard and thence by ships to the United States, where, after another handling, it is put through a costly refinery, and then shipped by rail to the consumer, who may possibly be in Nebraska alongside a beet sugar factory which turns out the refined and granulated article at one fell swoop. Indeed, the advantages of the producer of beet sugar for supplying the domestic consumption are very great. We have no doubt that Messrs. Oxnard and Cutting are within bounds when they say that 'sugar can be produced here cheaper than it can be in Europe.' The reasons for this are that—

"'The sugar industry is, after all, merely an agricultural one. We can undersell Europe in all other crops, and sugar is no exception.'

"It follows as naturally as the making of flour from wheat. If we can produce wheat cheaper than Europe, then naturally we can produce flour cheaper, as we do.

"But the writers of the letter do not depend upon a-priori reasoning to prove that they can make sugar at a profit without tariff protection. They point to the fact that under the McKinley tariff of 1890, when sugar was free of duty, the price of the article was 4 cents per pound. Yet a net profit of $3 per ton was made by the beet-sugar factories under those conditions, not counting any bounty on the home production of sugar. They boast that they made this profit while working under absolute free trade, and they have a right to be proud of this result of their skill and industry. Many beet-sugar factories had been started in bygone years, back in the sixties and seventies of the nineteenth century, and had failed because the projectors did not understand the business. Since then great progress has been made, both here and abroad, in the cultivation and manipulation of the beet. What was impossible thirty years ago is now entirely feasible. The industry is already on a solid and enduring basis. There are factories in the United States, these gentlemen tell us in their letter, capable of using 350,000 tons of beets per annum at a profit of $3 per ton, and this would make a profit of $1,050,000 as the income to be earned under absolute free trade.

"It must be plain to readers of this letter, signed by the captains of the beet-sugar industry, that the people in Washington who are declaiming against the temporary measure which the President of the United States urges for the relief of the Cuban people, are either grossly ignorant of the subject, or are practising gross deception. The tenable ground for them is to say: 'Other people are having protection that they do not need, and therefore we ought to have more than we need.' This would be consistent with the letter of Messrs. Oxnard and Cutting, but nothing else is so."

Watah on the Nevis.

The Nevis is a small volcanic island in the Carribean Sea. There is a stone conduit leading down from an extinct crater, carrying a fine stream of watah—the red-hottest, stinkingest sulphur-watah you ever saw—into an extinct hotel. Said hotel was built about 145 years ago and destroyed about 85 years ago, leaving on an agglomeration of stone ruins. I am offered this ruin—with watah—for $1,500. Dirt cheap! A rheumatic, who had spent $4,376 on physicians warranted to cure, went to the Nevis and was well in ten days. About all that remains of the hotel is the bath. Our paternal government should buy that hole and send its invalids there. The watah comes straight from hell. It smells, tastes and feels of hell. When you drink that watah you can't drink whisky. Hence.—New York Press.

NEW USE FOR ZEBRAS

To Replace Horses in African Transport Service

The British war department has determined upon introducing zebras into the army in Africa for military purposes to take the places of horses and mules of which there is an ever increasing shortage. Experiments which have been made with these animals show that they can be utilized to-day as satisfactorily as they have been in the past by the Abyssinian and others. They will fill the existing needs of the British transport and cavalry services in a way that it would otherwise seem impossible to meet them. It is extremely probable that in the breeding stations to be established in Mashonaland and Somaliland a hybrid animal will be produced for the purpose of cavalry mounts by crossbreeding, with English hunting stock, it having been proved by experiments that good results can be obtained in this manner.

The imperial zebra, sometimes found as tall as fifteen hands, is a result of breeding, the largest average for any of the native African breeds not being over thirteen hands. Zebra and zebra hybrids have been bred in Europe for over a century and are quite common for harness purposes. In their tame state they are docile and industrious, some of them also being quite fleet, although they do not equal the horse for speed.

Both in his gait and attitudes as in his mode of fighting the zebra differs from the horse.

When reconnoitring, he moves at the trot, holding his head high and flexing his fetlocks.

When running away he canters or gallops, with his head hanging down in a line with his stretched neck. When charging he often carries his head a little to one side, so that he is ready to seize his opponent by the leg.

While the home of the horse was undoubtedly in America, its ancestors having reached Asia across the Behring strait and found a suitable home among the Himalayas, Somaliland was probably the original home of the striped, dun-colored ancestors of the zebras, and in the Somaliland zebra of to-day the principal plan of marking has been preserved almost unaltered.

How a Gusher Flows

Opening of a New Oil Well in Texas.

A man who is interested in one of the biggest gushers in the Beaumont oil fields of Texas thus describes how one of the big wells starts:

"We knew some time before the gusher was brought in that what we hoped for was coming. The drillers were prepared for it and had removed their tools from the deep hole. If they had not done that everything in the well would have been thrown into the air. We could hear the throbbings of a great force below. The noise was like the puff of a monster engine, dying away and then growing louder than before. The puffs soon increased to a mighty roar, and we knew that the climax would come soon. I was standing near the well with my watch in my hand. It was exactly 10:25 o'clock on the morning of October 25 when the first substance was thrown out. First there was only sand, as it is called in California, or oil rock, as they term it in Pennsylvania. Then came a lot of perfect oyster shells, showing that at an unknown time the waters and an oyster bed had been there. It is the more remarkable on account of the fact that the oyster shells were thrown from a depth of 1,000 feet below the level of the sea. After the shells came mud and fragments that had been made by the drilling. We next saw soapstone, and this was followed by a strong flow of gas. Suddenly the action of the gusher died down, but only for a few moments. The same disturbing process was repeated, and then came the oil, shooting out almost horizontally a distance of 250 feet. The pipe was quickly changed to an upright position, and the column of oil, passing through an eight-inch pipe, was 275 feet high. We let the gusher have its own way for five minutes, to test it thoroughly, and then the two valves in the pipe were turned and the flow stopped."

SPANISH GYPSIES SEEK A HOME

If there is any city in the United States that would like to have a suburban colony of [illegible] "real" gypsies—about 4,000 of them—now is the time to bid. They are not of the type of roving vagabonds, "horse swappers" and chicken thieves, against whom Americans lock their stables and hen roosts, but genuine, blue-blooded gypsies fresh from the cave homes of the mountains of Granada, Spain.

Queen Stella, the "inspired" leader of the Gonzalez tribe of Spanish gypsies, is in Columbus, Ohio, on a tour of America in search of a future home for her band. Society folk, club folk, and college folk seem to take her at her word, notwithstanding that Queen Stella has no aversion to making a few honest dollars, offering a few choice Egyptian medical secrets for sale.

"I scorn the vagabonds who roam over America and call themselves gypsies. Our people at Granada do not beg, trade horses, or steal," declares the sprightly little queen. "We live in caves and in a climate where everything grows without care, and we are an indolent people, given to singing, dancing and delving into the mysteries of the occult sciences. I am looking for a future home for my people and have adopted this method of traveling over America in the hope of finding some suitable place for colonization.

"We must locate near some large city, into which we may go to sing, dance and practice our arts for a livelihood. But I never go to any city of my own accord. That city must invite me.

"No, I am not a real queen. The Gonzalez have no ruler and recognize none except God. But they have their leader, and I am she. The leader becomes such by sheer force of her recognized inspiration. The gypsy recognizes inspiration as essentially feminine, hence the sex of their leaders. I only call myself queen because the people of this country would not appreciate what leadership means with us under any other name than queen."

LIFE AT GIBRALTAR.

Interesting Description of the Picturesque Old Fortress.

The incoming steamer anchors in the bay half a mile from shore, passengers are taken off in boats, and before entering the city they pass a rigid examination by the police, who ask a number of pertinent questions. The name, nationality, occupation and mission of the stranger in Gibraltar are entered in a book.

He receives a card, which entitles him to the hospitality of the rock for twenty-four hours. If he desires to stay longer a bond of $50 for good behavior will secure him immunity from molestation for not more than thirty to sixty days. This permission, however, can, with the proper kind of influence, be renewed many times.

The town is quaint, picturesque and quiet, with its 19,000 people, mostly English and Spanish, though the number of different nationalities represented makes it one of the most cosmopolitan places in the world—Jews, Turks, Levantines, the natives of Gibraltar, called "Rock Scorpions," Africans and refugees from all nations, jolting each other in the three badly built irritatingly narrow streets of the town.

The garrison numbers about 6,000 persons, making the population of the rock about 25,000. The soldiers are, for the most part, regulars brought home from foreign service for rest and recuperation. The governor of the rock lives in the government house, formerly an old convent.

Everything is done by military rule; the hours of the day are announced by gun fire, the morning gun followed by the bugle reveille wakens the inhabitants from their slumbers, and the bugle blast that follows the evening gun, telling the soldiers to turn in, has become a signal for the civilian to go home and go to bed. The average daily number entering the garrison for the purpose of trading and of bringing supplies is 30,000, the great proportion of these daily visitors being Spaniards.

The town contains forty-two schools and three good libraries. The dwellings are small, ill-ventilated, badly drained and not over clean. They are very crowded, as 16,000 people live in one square mile of low houses.

There are no springs of pure water, the great dependence being on rain water collected in cisterns or on water brought from the mainland and sold by pedlers. Prices are high, almost as high as the Sugar Loaf—the peak of the rock.—J. Ronald Wallingford in Ledger Monthly.

Gold in Kansas Shale.

Professor Ernst Fahrig, chief of laboratories of the Philadelphia Commercial Museum, gives the result of a test made by him of the shale found in Ellis and Trego counties of Kansas, which is believed to contain gold in paying quantities. The test comprises three mill runs, in which gold was secured to the amount of $2.35, $2.56 and $3.07, respectively, by the electrolytic process. Prof. Fahrig visited the shale fields and gathered the sample lots which were used in the above tests. He makes an official certificate of the above tests, and states that he has no doubt of the existence of gold in the great body of these shale lands, and the ore can be profitably worked upon a yield of $2 per ton.

ANIMALS THAT TRAVEL.

Opossums Flocking to New York from South—Migrations of Squirrels.

According to men who have hunted and trapped in the mountains of Delaware, Ulster and Sullivan counties, New York, for very many years there has occurred within the last dozen years a veritable invasion of those mountains by the opossum from regions further south. Ten years ago there was scarcely one of the animals to be found in the state. Then they began to appear, being numerous in one section one season and pushing on a little farther north before the next.

Their coming has been welcomed by the hunters and trappers, but not by the farmers. The latter find the opossum a nuisance, as it has a liking for poultry and eggs. It will crawl into a hen coop, drive a setting hen off her nest and eat the eggs which the farmer was counting on to make broilers. It prowls in the woods where most of the turkey nests are made and robs those.

It is an easy matter to trap the animal, for it seems to have none of the shyness of the fox and raccoon, and will walk into the most obvious steel trap, box trap, or deadfall. When caught it is only moderately valuable, its skin being worth a little more than that of the muskrat. It is hunted chiefly at night, as coon are hunted, dogs being trained to follow it and bark in a peculiar manner when it is treed.

The migration of different sorts of game is nothing new. Stories of the migrations of squirrels are as old as the first works on natural history, and their journeyings from part to part of the United States are well known. The most remarkable feature about squirrel migrations lies in the method they sometimes employ in crossing water. They have been known to put pieces of bark into the water and drift on these in the current of a river until brought close enough to the bank to jump off. They sometimes disdain all such cautious methods of crossing water and swim as boldly as muskrats.

The mountaineers of eastern Tennessee and western North Carolina, says the New York Times, believe that the scarcity of deer on their old hunting grounds is due to the fact that the animals have migrated. They do not mean by this that they left one at a time as the country became settled, but declare that they were numerous a dozen years ago when the country was no wilder than it is today; that there came a season when the deer tracks, with few exceptions, led toward the south, and that the next year they were all gone, while reports coming up from the great pine forests of Georgia and Mississippi told of an unusually large number of the animals.

OLD NEW YORK TRICKS.

Case of Diamond Cut Diamond on an Arizona Stage.

There is at least one old-fashioned stage line in Arizona, a memorial of frontier days. "I made a trip out there the other day," says one of our fellow citizens who is interested in great lumbering operations in the Flagstaff territory, "and found the ride on the coach a rare treat. On the front seat there was room for three. The driver sat on the right, I on the left, and a stranger in between. The latter began to look uneasy after we had gone about fifteen miles, and finally whispered to me, 'I am afraid I am about to be sick, sir; would you exchange places with me for a moment?' I could not make the exchange too quickly.

"The seat in the middle was a tight squeeze, but I patiently submitted. Five minutes passed, ten twenty, forty, an hour. Not a sign from my friend. He seemed to be enjoying the scenery. I said at last: 'I understood you to say that you felt sick.'

"'Yes, quite true; I had a decided feeling of nausea. But the air out here appears to agree with me, and the feeling has passed off.'

"'Then you will give me back my seat.'

"'Oh, not at all. This is an old trick I learned in New York; get anything in any way you can, and hold on to it.'

"I gave him a sudden push that keeled him over by the roadside, remarking, as I put my hand on my pistol, 'That's an old trick I learned in New York in the free school for hogs.'

"He got up, brushed the dust off, and entered the coach in silence."—New York Press.

Guarding Aguinaldo.

The interest aroused by the efforts of Judge O'Neill to bring Aguinaldo before the Supreme court on a writ of habeas corpus has resulted in many inquiries as to who is the custodian of the prisoners. Inquiries at headquarters brought forth the following information: Lieutenant Bridges is known as the custodian of Aguinaldo. He is on detached duty, assigned to that service, and has charge of the person of the prisoner, being responsible for his safe-keeping. In the performance of his duty he takes orders from General Chaffee alone. Guarding the premises which are occupied by Aguinaldo are posted sentries detailed from that artillery which forms part of the garrison of Manila. They are under orders of, and are inspected daily by, the officer of the day of that organization, who in turn is subordinate to Colonel Chambers McKibben of the Twenty-fourth infantry, who is commander of the post of Manila. Personally, Lieutenant Bridges is also in the command of Colonel McKibben.—Manila American.

Prostrate With Rheumatic Fever Six Times Within Twenty Years.

This was the case of Mr. Eli Wiltshire of Landsdown Terrace, Caino, Wis., who during this time suffered the most intense agony. He writes:

"I heartily indorse the testimonials which you publish of St. Jacob's Oil as a pain killer, for I have been a sufferer from rheumatism and kindred complaints at different times during the last twenty years. I have been laid prostrate with rheumatic fever six times during that period, therefore, I consider I know something about rheumatism. During all of these twenty years I have tried various advertised rheumatic remedies, oils, ointments and embrocations. None of them gave me much relief, but when I tried St. Jacob's Oil I found quite different results. It eased the pain almost immediately, and has done for me what all other remedies put together never began to do.

"I could give you several cases that have been cured, which have come under my notice, and through my recommendation; also, one of toothache, one of faceache, and one of sore throat.

"I have recommended St. Jacob's Oil and shall continue to do so by every means in my power, as I consider you deserving of every support."

Queer Religion.

From Asbury Grove, in Essex county, comes a piteous story, to the effect that the site of the summer camp meetings is haunted by troops of starved, miserable cats. These animals were pets of the families who occupied Asbury Grove in the summer. It is assumed that most of the families went thither to be near the camp meeting. It is, however, a queer brand of religion which will justify any human being in deliberately abandoning an animal to the slow tortures of starvation. Humane agents of Beverly have lately taken action, with a view to putting these neglected animals out of misery by some painless poison. Whatever may be their fate, the story is extremely discreditable to the summer community of Asbury Grove.—Boston Advertiser.

Vienna's Horsemeat Butchers.

The horsemeat butcher shops of Vienna, of which there are no less than 185, present a clean and attractive appearance, and are in no way distinguishable from the shops where the usual kinds of meat are sold, save by the sign announcing their specialty. Restaurant keepers who serve horsemeat must designate this fact in a special column on the bill of fare offered to patrons.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

A Wonderful Cure.

Wright City, Mo., Dec. 30.—Medical men are still wondering over the Symes case, which has aroused such a widespread interest in this neighborhood.

Mr. Joseph G. Symes had suffered very severely with Inflammatory Rheumatism, enduring pains which were something terrible, and which made it altogether impossible for him to work by day or rest or sleep at night. In spite of all treatments he grew worse, and his case seemed to defy all the usual remedies.

He began a treatment of Dodd's Kidney Pills and very soon noticed a marked improvement, which increased as he kept on till six boxes were used, when he found himself without a trace of pain or ache. He is now able to work all day and sleep all night, and his rapid and complete recovery is regarded by the doctors as little short of a miracle.

LARGER SCHOOL BUILDINGS REQUIRED.

Owing to the recent large influx of population into Western Canada it has become absolutely necessary in many parts of Manitoba, Assiniboia, Saskatchewan and Alberta to increase the school accommodation. In many places buildings have been erected that are only half-occupied. This is perhaps as good evidence as will be found not only of their satisfaction with their present school system and their confidence that it will remain as it is, but also of their firm belief in the future expansion of the country, in increased immigration, and it further indicates that they have little fear that the well established rate of births in civilized communities will not be maintained there. The free homestead laws and the cheap railway lands offer great inducements, which are opening up the new settlements. Agents of the Government of Canada are actively at work in different portions of the States for the purpose of giving information to possible settlers, and advertisements are now appearing in a large number of papers, giving the names and locations of these agents.

The people of Thief River Falls are to be congratulated upon the fact that next summer an eight-room brick school house to cost $18000 is to be built. At present we have but two four room buildings, while store buildings are rented to accommodate the overflow. These buildings have been entirely inadequate for the purpose for which they were used, and it is a great source of pleasure to note that they will be abandoned.

The village council of Cass Lake has appropriated $500 to send three citizens of that place to Washington to confer with the powers that be in regard to opening up the Cass Lake reservation. Isn't it about time to for Thief River Falls to make a move in this direction? We do not believe it is necessary to send three, as one good man can accomplish our desire.

MAYOR'S MESSAGE

Mayor Kratka Recommends Numerous Measures

OF PUBLIC IMPORTANCE

Wants Water Works, Sewerage and Addition to Power House.

The following is Mayor Kratka's message to the city council:

The time has now arrived in the history of this city when it becomes necessary to take on "metropolitan airs" and to push forward vigorously the work of upbuilding our municipality in a substantial, solid and modern manner. This is, I believe, the desire of each one of our citizens, and it devolves upon you, gentlemen, to gratify that desire in every way compatible with financial safety. And this is a duty which you should gladly welcome. The bright prospects before us are sufficient to arouse the enthusiasm of every intelligent and patriotic citizen. People and officials should alike cast the past aside. The situation as it is, and as it will be, not that which it has been, should from this forward engage our attention. We, as officers, must awake to our responsibilities and join hands with our enterprising citizens; we must work in harmony and join our united efforts in the building up of our city. The people of Thief River Falls have no common goal before them, no mere collection of houses and stores, whose denizens stumble over shaky sidewalks, whose streets are knee deep in mud half the year, and whose sewerage system is founded in every man's back yard, will satisfy us. We are ambitious to make this a city in every sense of the word; a city of which we can be proud; a city whose inhabitants need hang their heads before none. With our past experience as a guide, with our natural advantages as a firm foundation for our hopes and with our bright prospects before us to inspire us onward, I am satisfied, I am certain, that in the near future Thief River Falls will be second to none in the "Bread and Butter State."

At this time I have a few suggestions and recommendations to make, which I sincerely hope will meet with the approval of your honorable body.

First—I find and it is an undisputed fact that, though our electric light plant is giving excellent services and has in the past it has not sufficient power to meet the demand. The demand for lights is greater than the power, and in view of the fact that our plant has been a paying investment from the first, I, therefore, recommend that a new dynamo be purchased, sufficiently large to furnish power to light the entire city and I further suggest the Old Anderson Mill Site be purchased as a site for our power house, thus enabling us to obtain better and more direct waterpower. I think it would be wise to move the present dynamo to Thief River Falls Lumber Company's Mill for the present, if we can obtain its consent. This will give us ample time and opportunity to place a new flume and enlarge our plant without interfering but little with the workings of our system as it is and without interfering with the operation of the Mill during the winter months, the greatest and best enterprise in our city. If it seem necessary steam power might be purchased, so that in case of an accident to our waterpower, we would still be able to conduct our lighting plant.

Second.—We have great need and we can never expect to have a city of the first class until we have in active operation a water and sewerage system. There was not long ago, a petition circulated and signed by every citizen and business man in our city and presented to our Hon. out-going Council for its immediate action. That council for reasons of its own preferred to leave that duty on you gentlemen. I believe that we are in need of both systems. We need the water system, first and above all for a fire protection, as our present system in wholly inadequate to protect even our business houses. We need the sewerage system not only to carry away the waste water from the water system but also to drain our cellars and mud-holes, where stagnant pools of water stand the whole year round, with no possible chance of escape and thus endangering the health of our citizens.

Third.—There has been, in the past a great many complaints made in reference to the present location of the city's Dumping ground and Pest House. It certainly is an eye-sore to new-comers located as it is on the west side of the R. R. track and the first thing that meets the gaze of any one entering the city from the south or west. I do not belive that it is good policy to have the pest-house so-called and the dumping ground in the same location. None of us certainly would live on the dump ground and we certainly ought not compel sick persons to put up with that which we would not. I therefore suggest and recommend that the city purchase a lot in a suitable location and construct thereon a building fit to be used for the sick and diseased and sufficiently large to accomadate a nurse for the care of our unfortunates. I further recommend that we cease to use furthur the present dumping ground and if possible purchase five or ten acres of Moose Dung's gravel pit, located just north of the city. The gravel therein contained to be used in repairing the roads, leading to and from the city and also the streets of the city.

Fourth.—In view of the very poor condition of the walk on the north side of first street leading to the depot and the immense amount of travel theron, I recommend that and eight foot walk be built from the city hall to the depot platform.

Fifth.—I futher would request that the city council take immediate action and give me power to appoint a policeman in addition to the Suppertendent of Police. I believe that his compensation should be same as the Superitendent. His duties will be to patrol the streets during the night and perform such other dutes as usually devolve on policemen.

With these for suggestions and recommendations I leave you, gentlemen, to perform your duties according to your best judgement. I wish to assure you that I will endeavor to perform my duties impartially and without favor. I want to congratulate the out-going Council for the able manner in which they have conducted the affairs of the city and I can only hope that the new Council will have accomplished as much in their term as you have in yours. To the retiring mayor, who is unable at this time to be with us on account of sickness, I wish to congratulate him also for good he has done and when my term has expired, and my official work completed I know, I shall, have performed my duty, if I shall have performed them as faithfully as my predecessor.

F. H. Kratka
Mayor.

OLD COUNCIL

Held their Last Meeting Monday Night.

The old city council held its last meeting Monday night and wound up the affairs of the past year. A number of bills were allowed, but most of the time was put in checking up the amounts of Treasurer Wallin. The different funds showed the following totals:

Improvement Fund—Amount received, $2,618: paid out $4,218.95.

Interest Fund—Amount received, $857.40: paid out $1,581.49.

Cemetery Fund—Amount received, $179.95: paid out $517.84.

Electric Light Fund—Amount received, (including sale of bonds) $12,825.07; amount paid out, $12,669.63; balance, $158.44.

Current Expense Fund—Amount received, (including balance from last year) $12,267.48; amount expended, $9,365.18.

A RAINBOW

One Could Be Seen in This Section Sunday.

The weather the fore part of the week was decidedly warm, and was more like that which we are accustomed to in April than in January. Sunday a small amount of rain fell in this city, but in places north of here they had respectible sized showers. People living in the vicinity of Germantown report that a rainbow was plainly visible, which is something before unheard of in Northern Minnesota.

ELECT OFFICERS

Meeting of First State Bank Stockholder.

A meeting of the stockholders of the First State Bank was held last evening. The regular 10 per cent dividened on stock was declared, and the surplus was increased to $8000. The following officers were elected:

President—C. L. Dobner.
Vice President—S. F. Staples.
Cashier—H. G. Dobner.
Directors—C. L. Dobner H. G. Dobner, S. F. Staples, C. A. Robbecke and Matt Barzen.

Under the management of C. L. and H. G. Dobner, the First State Bank has become the popular and strong institution of Thief River Falls. It has the largest active working capital of any bank in Red Lake county, and is doing a constantly increasing business. The Messrs. Dobner are always courteous and accommodating, they have a very liberal view of the relations that should exist between a public utility corporation and its patrons, and enjoy the confidence of the public.

LEE'S CLAIM

Soon to Be Decided so Says a Washington Dispatch.

A Washington special to the Pioneer Press says that the claim of H. W. Lee of this city now pending in the court of claims, will be decided in a short time. In conclusion the Pioneer Press article says:

"The claim as now presented calls for an appropriation of $65,000, which Lee alleges is due him for professional services in aiding the Indians. The claim is pending in congress and has been referred to the department of justice by one of the house committees. The department officials have made a thorough investigation of the matter and have taken the depositions of seventy-five tribesmen of the Winnebago band. The Indians are practically unanimous in asserting that Lee is entitled to nothing and that he has already been paid more than his services were worth."

Mr. Lee when seen about the matter said that while a number of the younger Indians, who knew nothing about the facts of the case testified against him, the older ones testified in his favor. He and his attorneys feel confident of winning.

A FINE ONE

The Brick Block to Be Built by James Meehan.

James Meehan has had plans drawn for a brick block which he proposes to erect on his lots on the corner of La Bree avenue and Second street. The building will have a 36 foot front on La Bree avenue and a 90 foot front on Second street. It will be in an "L" shape, the rear being 75 feet across. The first floor will give room for three store rooms, while the upstairs will be used as an office opera house. It will be decidedly the largest and best building in Thief River Falls.

NEW COUNCIL.

Held Its First Meeting Monday Evening.

The new city council held its first meeting Tuesday evening. Organization was perfected by electing C. L. Dobner president and C. A. Robbecke vice-president. The message of Mayor Kratka was read and laid on the table. No action was taken in regard to the matter of giving the mayor authority to appoint two policemen. The appointment of city officers was left over until the next meeting as was also the fire warden ordinance.

The bond of City Treasurer Wallin was fixed at $10,000 and if an indemnity company can be found to furnish the bond at a reasonable price the council will pay the cost.

Leonard Peterson was given a two months vacation for the purpose of going to West Baden for his health, and his salary will be paid as usual.

A motion was made to the effect that the council chambers be provided with suitable tables and lights, which carried.

A motion to adjoun to Jan 20 at 7:30 p. m. carried.

The new council is composed of the best and most representative citizens of Thief River Falls and a great deal is expected of them.

A Communication.

The St. Hilaire Spectator was thankful on Thanksgiving day that Mrs. Chelin had left St. Hilaire for Thief River Falls. Wonder what kind of a God the Spectator editor worships? Mrs. C. is thankful to the living God that she has left St. Hilaire and the "paradise" without loss of health and life. She worked by her stove for 11½ years and paid all her store bills and doctor bills, and no one can say she has beaten them out a penny. She worked honest to support herself and sick child.

At one time she had a pail of boiling water poured over her and another time a refined lady had a false warrant issued and had her arrested, but Mrs. C. did not give up hope at St. Hilaire and the "paradise" until she had enough to move up to Thief River Falls, where she has purchased a large building.

Mrs. C. is a noble woman and if everyone in St. Hilaire was as honest, the place would be 100 per cent better. She believed in cleanliness both inside and outside of the house, and if the people of St. Hilaire practiced the same they might get the court house, which is now doubtful. Some fine day the court house will come sliding through St. Hilaire to Thief River Falls, and the big bugs at St. Hilaire will be standing with their hands in their jeans astonished when they realize what has happened.

One Who Knows.

An Entertainment.

The Junior Endeavor of the Presbyterian church will give a cobweb social on Friday evening Jan. 10. It will be given in the City Hall, and a good time is promised to all who attend. The following program will be rendered during the early part of the evening, begining at 7:15:

Song	Junior Society
Prayer	Rev. C. H. Dade
Recitation	Lyla Schuster
Song	Alma and Louise Mickelson
Recitation	Evelyn Lund
Recitation	Calesta Caldwell
Dialogue	Lydia Carlson Ralph Douglas

News has reached Bisbee, Ariz., of the killing of George Ashton and Carl Benningfield, well known cattlemen, by Mexican woodchoppers in the Huachuca mountains. The trouble grew out of Benningfield's effort to remonstrate with the Mexicans, who were shooting holes in his tent. The Mexicans escaped to the border line, pursued by the dead cattlemen's friends.

Burglars blew the safe in the postoffice and general store at Nottingham, a suburb of Cleveland. The explosion awakened Postmaster Hoose, who, with several citizens, opened fire on the robbers, as the latter were leaving the building with their booty. The burglars returned the fire, and, after a long running fire, escaped. A bloody trail indicated that at least one of them was badly wounded.

Chicago, Jan. 4.—The abrupt ending of a dream of love which had endured for five years with Lizzie Miller, a comely Wisconsin girl, by the marriage of Henry J. Hueing is the basis of a trial in the superior court, begun before Judge Patton yesterday. The woman asks the jury to award her $5,000 damages against Hueing, who, she alleged, became engaged to her, and then married another. The case has its material as well as its sentimental side. The plaintiff's attorney told the judge the grief over her disappointment had caused Miss Miller to lose thirty pounds of flesh.

DINNER TO THE CABINET.

President and Mrs. Roosevelt Entertain at the White House.

Washington, Jan. 4. — The dinner to the cabinet, the first of the large formal functions of the year at the White House, was given by the president and Mrs. Roosevelt last night. A large number of persons were invited to meet the members of the cabinet, the guests including senators and representatives in congress and some friends of the president. The T-shaped table was set in the state dining room and was a marvel of artistic beauty. The public portions of the house, in which the guests spent the remainder of the evening, were still fresh and beautiful with the floral decorations used the day before. The marine band furnished the music.

MONEY WAS TIGHT

EVERETT-MOORE SYNDICATE IS FINANCIALLY EMBARRASSED.

COMMITTEE PLACED IN CHARGE

EXPRESS FIRM BELIEF THAT THE CONCERN IS ENTIRELY SOLVENT.

EMBARRASSMENT IS TEMPORARY

OWN AN EXTENSIVE SYSTEM OF ELECTRIC AND TELEPHONE LINES.

Cleveland, Ohio, Jan. 4.—The financial affairs of the Everett-Moore syndicate, owning or controlling a number of urban and interurban electric railways, and an extensive system of local and long distance telephone lines in Ohio and Michigan, passed into the control of a committee composed of seven prominent bankers of this city yesterday. This action was taken, it is stated, as the result of temporary financial embarrassment on the part of the syndicate, which has for some time past been affected by the stringency in the money market.

The committee chosen has been at work investigating the affairs of the syndicate and express the firm belief that the concern is entirely solvent, and that its embarrassment will be only temporary.

The Everett-Moore syndicate is accredited with controlling more than 1,200 miles of urban and interurban electric lines in Ohio and Michigan, with many new extensions still in course of construction.

Among the telephone properties owned outright or controlled by the syndicate are the Cuyahoga Telephone company of this city, with upward of 10,000 subscribers; the United States Telephone company (long distance); the Federal Telephone company; the Stark County (Ohio) Telephone company; the Columbiana County (Ohio) Telephone company; The Peoples' Telephone Company of Detroit; the Wood County (Ohio) Telephone company, and a number of others in which the Federal Telephone company is the controlling factor.

Among the more important electric street railway properties in which the syndicate is largely interested are the Cleveland Electric Railway company, the Detroit United Railway company, the Toledo Railway and Light company, the Northern Ohio Traction company, the Cleveland, Painesville & Eastern Railway company, the Detroit & Toledo Short Line Railroad company and the Lake Shore Electric Railroad company. All of these lines are declared by the committee to be with scarcely an exception, in good physical condition, perfectly solvent and in no wise embarrassed.

The aggregate capitalization of all the various properties owned or controlled by the syndicate is said to be about $130,000,000.

Expert accountants have been employed by the committee in charge to examine and report upon the condition of all the constituent companies. No statement has, as yet, been given out indicating the liabilities of the syndicate.

Messrs. Henry A. Everett and H. W. Moore refused last night to be interviewed concerning their affairs.

THEIR TUNE IS CHANGED.

Frenchmen Anxious to Sell the Panama Ditch.

Paris, Jan. 4.—It is believed here that the Panama route will soon become the property of the United States.

"If the United States should succeed in obtaining possession of the Panama canal for $40,000,000 it will make the best business bargain in its history, not even the Louisiana purchase excepted," said M. Leroy-Beaulieu yesterday.

This noted economist, who has been urging the Panama stockholders to await rigidly an offer of $150,000,000, finally confesses that the company will be forced to accept the terms of the United States rather than face complete ruin, "which even the coalition of European states which favor the Panama scheme would be unable to prevent were the Nicaragua route selected."

Other experts, while insisting that the company had a right to expect greater generosity from Washington, are gradually arriving at the same conclusion.

DISGRACE TO CIVILIZATION.

Conditions Prevailing in the Congo Free State.

London, Jan. 4.—Capt. Guy Burrows, who has just returned from the employ of the Congo Free State government after six years' service, declared in an interview yesterday that the conditions prevailing in the Congo Free state are a disgrace to civilization and far worse than ever before. He pictured atrocities of the most horrible character perpetrated on the natives by officials and whites who had concessions of rubber land. As a typical instance of the means employed by the Free State government, Capt. Burrows corroborated the statement of an American missionary to the effect that the officials employed 500 cannibals to whom they issued rifles "to massacre and capture unarmed natives who had rebelled against their brutal methods."

YOUNG GIRL'S UNNATURAL POWER

SHE IS SCOLDED FOR SHIRKING WORK AND THAT STARTS SOMETHING.

Elkhart, Ind., Jan. 4.—According to Mr. and Mrs. James McCarthy of this city, several boarders and ten or twelve neighbors, some very peculiar and mysterious things happened at the McCarthy house, and for the want of a better explanation they ascribe the manifestations to some unnatural power possessed by thirteen-year-old Bessie Currier, the daughter of a woman who lives with a daughter-in-law, Mrs. William Currier, just south of this town.

The manifestations occurred only in the presence of the girl and ceased when, at 4 o'clock, the girl was sent away, going to her sister-in-law's home.

Chairs Turned Over

on the floor; a stick of wood found its way to the center of a room twice; a joint of stovepipe came up the cellar stairs and stood in the room; plates rolled off the diningroom table; a sewing machine tipped over gently and rested on its side on the floor; a pail emptied its water three times; the clothes line broke three times and further efforts to fix it were abandoned; a lamp chimney floated from its place on the lamp to a bed and the lamp followed, and various other things equally as puzzling happened, according to the apparently sincere statements of the witnesses mentioned.

Bessie Currier had been with the McCarthys about a week, and nothing unusual occurred until after Mrs. McCarthy by mildly reproving her for shirking her work. The girl denies responsibility for the unnatural antics and declares her ignorance of the possession of any supernatural or abnormal power, declaring that she was scared herself at the manifestations and glad to be sent away. The girl is large for her age and has a strong, rugged appearance, evidently possessed of unusual vitality. Her complexion is fair, clear, with blonde hair and dark eyebrows and calm blue eyes.

Had Angered the Child

All the statements made above were vouched for by half a dozen witnesses to whom your correspondent has talked. All who saw the strange happenings declare that they could not be deceived as to what occurred.

MISS STONE IS FREE.

Unconfirmed Rumor That She Was Liberated Jan. 1.

London, Jan. 4. — The Sofia correspondent of the Daily Telegraph has cabled an unconfirmed rumor that Miss Stone and Mme. Tsilka were liberated in Turkey Jan. 1, and that the Americans who conducted the negotiations resulting in this reported release agreed, in the presence of the captives, to maintain absolute silence concerning the captors. If this promise is broken, concludes the correspondent, vengeance will be wreaked upon the American mission.

BUSY DAY FOR LIFESAVERS.

Do Good Work in Assisting Crews of Disabled Vessels.

Chatham, Mass., Jan. 4. — The lifesaving crews of three stations, the Chatham, the Old Harbor and the Monomoy did good work yesterday in assisting crews of disabled vessels. The crew of the schooner Emma D. Endicott, Capt. Rogers, New York for Portland, with coal, were kept constantly at the pumps, for the vessel was almost sinking. The Endicott was taken in tow for Portland by the tug Buccaneer. The crew of the schooner Commerce, Capt. Pearson, New York for Rockland, Me., with coal, which was blown to sea Wednesday, were brought ashore by lifesavers. They had been rescued by the tug Lackawanna. The Commerce was struck by the gale on Tuesday night, her sails were blown off and she afterward lost a big anchor. She was abandoned because she was being driven to sea. The four-masted schooner John F. Randall ran ashore but she floated and proceeded for Boston apparently uninjured.

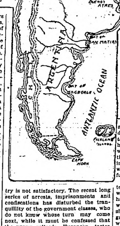
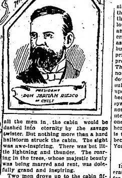
CHILI





PRESIDENT DON JERMAN RIESCO OF CHILI

The war cloud which now hovers over the two South American republics, Chile and Argentina, has arisen out of the dispute over the boundary line between these countries, shown on the accompanying map, in the range of mountains running north and south. Should war eventuate the two republics will find themselves very evenly matched. Neither has the advantage of the other in the matter of coast exposure and coast defense. Argentina, of course, is a much larger country in area and has a population approximately of 4,000,000, while Chile has a population of about 3,000,000. The area of Chile is 290,829 square miles, while that of Argentina, including its territories, is 1,113,849 square miles. The army of Argentina, on a peace footing, numbers 21,515 officers and men; that of Chile 19,750 officers and men. The Argentine navy consists of four coast defense armor-clads, five armored cruisers, three second-class cruisers of high speed and seven smaller cruisers of modern construction, together with four destroyers and twenty-two torpedo boats. The Chilean fleet consists of five armor-clads, two second-class and two third-class cruisers, eleven gun vessels and gunboats, four destroyers of new make and thirty-knot speed, and nineteen torpedo boats. Of the two navies by far the best boat is the cruiser O'Higgins, built at Elswick for Chile in 1898, and a fine vessel in all respects. She has a displacement of 8,500 tons and carries four eight-inch guns. With these forces, based on peace, the two republics have good nuclei for development of powerful armies and navies in case of war.

JACK RABBITS IN NEBRASKA.

They Have Become an Intolerable Nuisance—Destroy Crops.

Experts connected with the entomological department of the Nebraska university are giving much thought to the discovery of means of exterminating the jack rabbit, which has become an intolerable nuisance. He is an interesting specimen of the useless among animals, and can be explained only on the ground advanced by the German father in reply to the inquiry of his son as to what the kangaroo was good for: "Well, my boy, the Australians must have something to laugh at."

Nebraska has two varieties, the black tail and the silver tail, but while distinct varieties there is no appreciable difference in their size, habits or food preferences. The females of the species are surprisingly prolific.

Nature doubtless has some use for jack rabbits, but did not want too many of them. So their natural enemy was provided in the coyote, who kept them within bounds. But the coyote is a disagreeable neighbor and the Nebraska authorities offered a bounty for coyote scalps which resulted in their practical extermination.

This was the jack rabbit's opportunity, says the New York Times. He put his house in order and proceeded to devote his best energies to the raising of children, in which he has been remarkably successful. But the Nebraska farmers are not much better satisfied with them than with the coyotes.

They argue that while farming may be a healthful and agreeable occupation, it is not wholly satisfactory from the economic point of view if the farmer's principal business in life is to raise food for the jack rabbits, who appropriate it without compensation. The result of his dissatisfaction will undoubtedly be that the jack rabbit will sooner or later be decimated and, perhaps, exterminated.

FUTURE OF MOROCCO.

Robbery and Pillage Common—Country in Decaying Condition.

It is impossible to write on the subject of Morocco without some mention of its future. There is no need to enter into speculation—and it is all speculation—as to what that future may be. It need only be pointed out that, in the interests of all the powers of Europe, it is necessary to maintain the status quo.

The internal condition of the country is not satisfactory. The recent long series of arrests, imprisonments and confiscations has disturbed the tranquility of the government classes, who do not know whose turn may come next, while it must be confessed that the young sultan's European tastes have not increased his popularity. That a general upheaval may take place is extremely unlikely, but there is certainly a strong existing feeling of unrest, which tends to let loose the wilder spirit of the people, who see an opportunity of paying off old scores and making new ones, and who are not slow to turn their hands to robbery and pillage. So long as they keep these national amusements to themselves there is little or no danger, but directly the interests of European traders are affected—and their cattle feeding in the interior are often looted—then the question becomes one in which the powers are interested.

Claims are made against the Moorish government in accordance with treaty rights. These claims are always disputed and often refused, says the National Review, and difficulties invariably arise, sometimes ending in naval demonstrations and shaking the very foundations of the rotten fabric of the decaying country.

IN A WESTERN STORM.

Fearful Havoc Wrought by the Element in a Few Minutes.

There was a fearful storm in the lowlands yesterday forenoon at 1 o'clock, and a great many trees, some two feet in diameter, were picked up out of the ground and hurled into the air to be dashed to the earth again with terrific force. As far as can be learned there was no loss of life. The storm spent its fury in a path about 100 yards wide and two miles long, it is approximated.

Levi S. Wild, manager of the Western Union Telegraph company, of this city, and Bryan Irvine went to Bernice Saturday night, and yesterday morning engaged a team and drove out to Hoadley's place, about four miles and a half up the lowlands from Bernice. They were chatting in Hoadley's cabin, when Mr. Irvine looked out of the window to the west, and remarked that he saw the blackest cloud he had ever beheld. The other gentlemen noticed the ominous appearance of the black bank of cloud in the sky, but paid no more attention to it until it began to sprinkle, when a great gust of strong wind reminded the party within of the black cloud.

The rain resolved itself into a hailstorm, and soon the largest hailstones that any one of the men ever saw poured down in a threatening manner. The roof of the cabin was inadequate and the boards were rent asunder and great stones rained and pelted down upon the floor, bounding back toward the ceiling violently. Still the cabin was not in the teeth of the storm, for Mr. Wild said he could see the terrible execution it was doing across the creek, 100 yards distant. Trees were torn up and dashed to the ground, and the wind lifted them high in the air and carried them great distances. It was feared at the time that all the men in the cabin would be dashed into eternity by the savage twister. But nothing more than a hard hailstorm struck the cabin. The sight was awe-inspiring. There was but little lightning and thunder. The roaring in the trees, whose majestic beauty was being marred and rent, was dolefully grand and inspiring.

Two men drove up to the cabin fifteen minutes later and said the road was literally strewn with trees. They had secured shelter in a crevasse, and were unhurt. They saw a whole hillside denuded of its foliage and dense growth of trees. Some of the trees were nearly three feet in diameter, and they were piled indiscriminately upon one another. There were at least 100 grand stalwart pines dashed into a heap in about two minutes. The havoc was terrible to behold.—Anaconda Standard.

The Introducing Habit.

It is extremely difficult for a good-natured man to escape promiscuous introductions. He might not hesitate to offend the introducer, but certainly could not do so before that unfortunate gentleman's friends, out of regard for them. Capsic enters a public resort alone, and would like to remain alone, but Trapsic, a distant acquaintance, indeed, standing with three friends, calls out to Capsic, "How do, Cap? Come here; I want to introduce you to some friends of mine." Could Capsic turn tail and flee? While resenting Trapsic's familiarity, he feels that the gentlemanlike thing to do is to meet the strangers. "Cap, shake hands with my friend Shay, my friend Squay, and my friend Skay." That is now the usual and approval formula. All good fellows, right down to the ground, but Trapsic is presuming. Why should he not first have excused himself to his friends and gone quietly to Capsic to learn, sub rosa, if the latter cared at that time to make the acquaintance of Shay, Squay and Skay? Never! Trapsic is possessed of an insane desire to introduce folk, and nothing short of a kick in the neck or a poke in the solar plexus will restore him to sanity.—New York Press.

Oxygen Pellets for the Pocket.

A method of procuring oxygen has been patented in Great Britain by M. G. F. Jaubert of Paris. A substance is prepared by mixing chloride of lime with sodium dioxide or other alkaline peroxide. Compressed pellets, which can be used for obtaining a supply of oxygen in the same way that calcium carbide is used for making acetylene—namely, by immersion in water—are prepared in the following manner. Two hundred kilogrammes of chloride of lime, which titrates 35.5 per cent of active chlorine, well dried (for example, by standing over concentrated sulphuric acid) is mixed with seventy-eight kilogrammes of sodium dioxide in powder, and the yellowish white powder thus obtained is made into cakes by strong pressure. The compressed material thus obtained is, it is stated, as hard and shiny as crockery, and when placed in water decomposes with regularity, oxygen gas being evolved.

Massage for Infants.

The new theory for massage—as an aid to development rather than a restoration of damaged beauty—is gaining converts everywhere. It is now some time since a well-known physician began experimenting with massage upon his infant son. The treatment consists of daily massage lasting for thirty minutes and consisting of a thorough kneading of the little fellow's muscles, the child being stripped and laid upon a blanket during the operation. Cold baths and as few clothes as possible are part of the treatment, but the massage is the fundamental principle. The child's condition is proof positive of the system's merit. Though only a year old he is phenomenally strong and his muscular development is unusual. Similar results are reported wherever massage upon the growing little human has been tried. The chief glory of the system is that it develops no one part nor portion of the body, but contributes to the excellence of all. Not any one set of muscles, but the general health is benefited thereby. The theory is that no child so massaged will ever become bald or lose a tooth.—New York Evening Sun.

Army Telegraph Operators.

In the British army the telegraph operators belong to the engineers, who for the purposes of administration and promotion form a single corps, consisting of forty companies, three troops and a large establishment of officers not attached to any companies, but employed in superintending works and buildings and in other professional and scientific duties. The three engineer troops are the field equipment troop, the telegraph troop and the pontoon troop. A telegraph troop consists of six officers, 245 non-commissioned officers and men, with 24 carriages, 42 riding and 114 draught horses. Twelve of the wagons are fitted as wire wagons, and carry each three miles of insulated wire, etc. Four wagons are fitted as offices with recording instruments. The troop is so arranged that it can be broken into three sections, each complete in itself. A certain proportion of the men are trained to act as signalers and all the material for visual signaling is carried with the troop. This material consists of flags for use by day, rockets and lime-lights for flash signals by night, etc. The pay of a private in the engineers is 1s 1½d per day; of a corporal, 2s 6d; of a sergeant, 3s 3d; of a lieutenant, 10s 10d; of a captain, 17s 7d.—Montreal Herald and Star.

Ambulance in Lamp Post.

An ambulance in a lamp post is the latest street novelty which has been introduced in Paris. They call it over there a "first-aid lighthouse." It consists of an ornamental bronze pillar, about fifteen feet high, with a round, overhanging top resembling the lantern of a lighthouse, in which are a clock and a place for transparent pictorial advertisements, revolved by clockwork and lighted from within by gas. In the base of the pillar is a letter box, and in the shaft is a folding stretcher with printed directions for affording first aid to the injured. In case of a street accident, says the New York Press, the stretcher can be immediately obtained by breaking a small glass window just above the letter box, taking out a key which hangs there and unlocking the receptacle.

Sharks Are Always Cowards.

Although sharks are esteemed the greatest terrors of the ocean they are in reality the greatest cowards of the finny tribe. The fiercest shark will get out of the way of a swimmer if the latter sets up a noisy splashing. A shark fears anything that splashes in the water. Among the South Sea Islands the natives never go bathing alone, but always in parties of half a dozen or so in order that they may make a great hubbub in the water, and thus frighten away the sharks. Once in a while a too venturesome swimmer among these natives foolishly detaches himself from his party and forgets to keep up his splashing. Then there is a swish, the man-eater comes up from under him like a flash and he is gone.

Yachtman Barr's Early Life.

Captain Charles Barr, the yachtsman, began life as a grocer's clerk, but he soon discovered that navigation was his calling and began to study to fit himself for a seaman's life.

LATEST FRENCH IDEA.

"Temple of Beauty" to Be Established in the City of Paris.

Who says the French are not just bubbling over with bright ideas? The latest happy thought of this versatile and ingenious people is to establish in Paris a permanent "Temple of Beauty." It will be a building where the handsomest women applicants from all countries will have salaries paid to them to remain on constant exhibition, dressed in appropriate costumes, under the direction of the most famous "artists." Whether these "artists" are to be painters or dressmakers is not stated in the prospectus. It is expected that the ranks of the "exhibits" will have to be recruited constantly, for the dazzling beauty of the women, when arrayed in their finery, will be such that no man can resist them, and good marriages undoubtedly will tempt them to leave the exhibition for homes of their own.

In fact, the "Temple of Beauty" will be a sort of marriage mart as well as an exhibition of female loveliness. A small entrance fee will be charged to the "temple," and the antecedents of intending purchasers will be carefully looked into by the management. Applicants for admission as exhibits into the "Temple of Beauty" will have to come up to a high standard, which will be fixed by the most competent judges of beautiful women in the French capital. The beauty shows and "megatherium congress of female loveliness," which used to be so popular in the Bowery dime museums, will be only as pale and twinkling stars compared with this great French scheme, when it once gets in working condition. It will be a truly cosmopolitan institution, no applicant being barred on account of race, color or previous condition of servitude.—New York Press.

Swiss Law on Hats.

There is in existence an unrepealed law in Switzerland which forbids the wearing of hats of more than 18 inches in diameter, artificial flowers and foreign feathers, under a heavy penalty.

Holiness is never under the necessity of advertising itself.

"MISS CHRYSANTHEMUM".

Girls in Japan and China Named for Popular Flower.

It is not at all an unusual thing in China and Japan to hear a girl called "Chrysanthemum." It is as popular a name as Dorothy or Margaret is here. When a young man calls, he probably asks whether Miss Chrysanthemum and Miss Rose are in, quite as naturally as he would on this side of the world inquire for Miss Dorothy and Miss Margaret. A girl named for the favorite flower of Japan in that country is said to adopt that flower as her especial one for the decoration of her dress, for wearing in her hair, and for flower gifts when she makes them. Not only does she devote herself to the chrysanthemum alone, but to that particular shaped and colored one that especially suits her style. The chrysanthemum has so much individuality that, in the eyes of the artistic Japanese maiden, it would clash most discordantly with the rest of the ensemble if it didn't just suit her type. Dark, soft shades of red and deep yellows are naturally great favorites with the dark beauties of the East. Such chrysanthemums as we know as the "Mrs. Pullman" and the "A. J. Drexel," dark yellow and dark red, are more popular in Chrysanthemum Land than the wonderful white ivories, such as "Timothy Eaton," or delicate pink "Vivian Morrell," both so popular with fair-haired girls here. It is said that no one knows better than the Japanese girl that a light touch of adjacent color brings out the color in the complexion better than a mass of deep color would. Dull pink chrysanthemums, that are neither pink nor red have the effect of toning up the color in dark complexions better than clear pink or decided red would do it. Miss Chrysanthemum goes into the culinary art also with her flower. She serves her guests with a tea or beverage made of its boiled petals, called "saki," and concocts a delicious salad of the flowers. From tea to an order of chivalry is a big jump. But it is said that so high a place of honor and importance does the chrysanthemum hold in Japan, that a simple variety of this flower conventionalized is used as the official seal and crest of the Emperor, and that the highest order of chivalry in the land is called the "Imperial Order of the Chrysanthemum."—Philadelphia Times.

READING THE NEWSPAPER.

The Only Way to Keep in Touch with the World.

President William De Witt Hyde contributes to a religious paper a chapter of advice to young people on reading, in the course of which he says that ten minutes a day is enough to spend on a daily paper. The preposterous things so often done and said by college professors, and their frequent betrayal of a lack of everyday gumption—things that make them a laughing stock to the public—suggest that many of them have followed President Hyde's advice. No sensible person advocates a thorough reading of a newspaper—each issue contains matter of interest and importance only to special classes; but each issue also contains an epitome of the history of the world for that day; a record of progress, something of the thought of the best minds—altogether matter as important as the history or thought of 100 or 1,000 years ago to the education and culture of the man of to-day, and much more essential to his material welfare. It takes something more than ten minutes to read and digest this daily summary; the collegiate adviser ought at least to allow half an hour; some intellects not the most alert might even require an hour. If all men were to spend their lives in their libraries and had little or nothing to do with the outside life, the work-a-day world, such advice as that of President Hyde might have a fitness. In fact, it would not be necessary for them to read the papers at all. As it is, however, this is a very practical world. Men who are in it and of it must keep themselves in touch with many things, and they can do this through the daily papers better than in any other way. If the author of the advice quoted will look over the ground he will probably find that the great majority of the men in this and other generations immediately preceding it who have achieved success in business life, or eminence in public or professional life, have been habitual readers of newspapers, and that they have averaged something more than ten minutes a day in such reading.—Indianapolis Journal.

Knew Too Much.

A young man employed in an oyster shop has lost his situation, and this because he gave prompt answer to his employer's eager question. The employer had six lively little land turtles, which attracted much attention as they wandered aimlessly about the window. He painted a large white letter on the back of each of the shells, and put up a notice to the effect that, whenever the turtles got into such relative positions that the letters spelled "oyster," he would present half a dozen natives to every one who was looking on.

Then he became frightened lest the mystic word should occur too often, and covered reams of paper figuring out the odds. He gave it up at last, and was about to remove the turtles when his most accomplished oyster opener informed him that the odds were 720 to 1 against the combination. The turtles are still in the window, but the oyster opener has gone. Such knowledge of odds, the employer thought, could have been acquired only by years of betting experience. It is not wise to be too wise.—London Chronicle.

LIVE LIFE OF EASE.

IDYLLIC EXISTENCE OF INHABITANTS OF PITCAIRN ISLAND.

Descendants of the Mutineers of the English Ship Bounty—Disease Is Unknown on the Island—System of Control Socialistic.

One of the most delightful spots on the habitable globe is Pitcairn island in the south seas, which is chiefly inhabited by the descendants of the mutineers of the English ship Bounty. These people are entirely isolated from the world, with the exception that they live sufficiently near one of the great ocean routes to induce the captains of vessels wishing fresh meat or fruit to make a slight deflection from their course, sight the island, land on it with one of the ship's boats and get their needed supplies. The island has no good harbor or roadstead, hence in stormy weather it is practically unapproachable.

According to official report, the islanders are under the government of one of their number, who appears to be a man of ability and determination, and are in a contented, though hardly a progressive state. The entire community numbers about 150 members, with a somewhat disproportionate number of females. There are no diseases on the island, and absolutely no medical means of treating them if there were. The local authorities when offered medical supplies said that they neither needed nor cared for them. There appears to be an abundance of fruit and vegetables, and a sufficient supply of goats to furnish the comparatively little animal food required in a tropical region.

The system of control is evidently largely socialistic. From 8 a. m. until 2 p. m. all of the male population are engaged in public work of various kinds. After 2 p. m. they are at liberty to do what they care to for themselves, or to enjoy their leisure. They are all devout members of the Seventh Day Adventist faith and the American missionaries of this religious organization are endeavoring to do what they can to build up some slight commerce between Pitcairn island and Tihiti, believing that it would be of advantage to the people of the former island. These latter appear to be in certain ways undergoing a species of degeneration, in consequence, presumably, of too close intermarrying.

Estimating Coal Supply.

A banking house in New York has made an estimate of the coal which remains in the anthracite beds of Pennsylvania, and finds that there are still 5,073,775,000 tons unmined. These beds are, with insignificant exceptions, the property of eight railroad corporations, which expect to mine 50,000,000 tons this season. At this rate the coal would last about 100 years; but the consumption of coal is constantly increasing, and if the estimate of the banking house is correct the anthracite field of Pennsylvania will be exhausted long before the end of the century.

While this coal is at present the most accessible and of excellent quality, there are other anthracite deposits which may be brought into general use within a few years that will remove all anxiety concerning the supply. The bituminous and semi-bituminous coal deposits are practically inexhaustible, and they extend from the Atlantic to the Pacific, some of the southwestern states and territories being to a large extent beds of coal.

Rubber from Greasewood.

The ingenuity of a Yankee inventor has devised a use for that humble and unlovely shrub of the western deserts known as the "greasewood." It has been found to contain a gum that affords a valuable substitute for rubber.

The method of obtaining the gum, which has been newly patented, consists in bruising the woody stalks of the greasewood, soaking them in a solution of carbon disulphide, and then drawing off the liquid, which is distilled. The chemical used as a solvent is driven off by heat, and there remains in the bottom of the vessel a gummy stuff, flexible and elastic.

Finally, the gummy stuff is washed and purified, the result being a very fair substitute for India-rubber—so good, in fact, as to suggest the notion that some day the American deserts may be made to yield very satisfactory profits in the production of raw material for gum shoes and bicycle tires.—Philadelphia Saturday Evening Post.

"Sport" Devil in the British Army.

Our garrison towns represent a state of things utterly opposed to the idea of a vigorous prosecution of the war. Numerous officers in possession of staff billets are snugly ensconcing themselves in comfortable bungalows, obtaining "lodging" instead of "field" allowance, and drawing ration allowance. In fact, the liberal allowances to officers in South Africa seem to counter-balance their desire for the end of the war. Sport is very well in its way, but on active service the care of golf links and tennis courts should not exercise officers' ability and attention, while the thousands of polo and racing ponies kept by officers throughout South Africa (fed on government rations) might profitably be used to augment the parsimonious supply of remounts to the mobile columns.—Letter From South Africa in the London Spectator.

It probably made the kettle boil when the pot called it black.—Chicago News.

BAD BLOOD MAY SPILL

CALIFORNIA COUNTY SPOILING FOR FIGHT

Trial of Alleged Lynchers Expected to Culminate in a Bloody Riot—Entire Community Sympathizes With Prisoners.

San Francisco, Jan. 6. — Alturas, the county seat of Modoc county, in the extreme northeast corner of California, is now filled with heavily armed men and a bloody gun fight is expected over the confession of two men who took part in the lynching of old Calvin Hall, his three sons and a half-breed companion last May.

Yesterday thirteen men were arrested and jailed as the result of the confession of John Hutton, and other arrests will follow to-morrow. Friends of the prisoners swear they will release them if they have to batter down the county jail. In the event of fighting, state officers will be at a great disadvantage, as nearly sympathizes with the lynchers. In the trial of the case, which has been going on for two weeks, witnesses have been so intimidated that several escaped and refused to testify.

Hall and his sons and a man named Yantis were taken from jail, bound, gagged and hanged near the town. They were charged with killing stock and stealing, but there was no positive proof against them. They were simply half-breed renegades who were good gun fighters and were hated and feared by their neighbors.

The state officers expect to prove that the charges against the victims were trumped up by vigilantes, who corrupted the jail watchman and thus had an easy task in and hanging them. Hutton and Morris, who have confessed, say the whole plan was devised by Deputy Constable Jim Brown.

Last night there was a narrow escape from shooting in a hotel. Deloe Brownell, a brother-in-law of Brown, began to abuse a boy witness in the case, when Fish Commissioner Dan Miller, who acts as bodyguard for the state officers, interposed. Brownell reached for his gun, but Miller got the drop on him and ordered him out of the hotel. Brownell had Miller arrested for assault. This created bad blood and added to the excitement.

BRITT WILL FIGHT IN EAST.

Lightweight Champion to Represent the Olympic Club.

San Francisco, Jan. 6.—James Britt, the amateur champion lightweight boxer, will compete in the East this spring. This was decided yesterday by the officials of the Olympia Athletic club.

For some time past the professional promoters have been making overtures to the hard-hitting amateur to enter the ranks of the paid boxers. He has withstood all their blandishments, as he did not care to cross the line dividing the classes.

He has shown such marked ability that the members of the Olympic club are anxious to see him pitted against the best men in the country. There has been a quiet movement on foot for some time to send him to the next tournament of the Amateur Athletic union. This culminated yesterday in the decision of the club officials to send him as the representative of the winged "O."

Britt is considered the greatest lightweight developed on this coast. He is thoroughly game, is an awkward man for an opponent to hit and has a punch in either hand which will stop any boxer.

SHARKEY IS WORKING HARD.

Sailor Man Taking No Chance in Preparing for Maher Contest.

New York, Jan. 6—Considerable interest has been aroused in the Sharkey-Maher bout in Philadelphia Jan. 17 for the reason that should the sailor be defeated his match with Jim Jeffries for the world's championship will be called off. Sharkey is training with great vigor for the Philadelphia bout. Although the men are scheduled to go only six rounds, Sharkey is working as though he were preparing for a twenty-round bout.

This morning the sailor, in company with Dave Sullivan, who is preparing to fight Terry McGovern, went ten miles on the Coney Island boulevard and Ocean avenue. In the afternoon he boxed three rounds with Bob Armstrong, punched the bag and wrestled with Nick Elliott in "Spike" Sullivan's gymnasium in Avenue U.

Maher is doing his training near Fairmount Park, Philadelphia.

BONNER WANTS A RAISE.

Jumping Player Asks Selee for More Money to Play in Chicago.

Boston, Jan. 6.—Frank Bonner, the second baseman who signed with Cleveland and then with Chicago and afterward announced his intention of playing with Cleveland, has written to Manager Frank Selee offering to go to Chicago for more money. Selee had made arrangements for Bonner with Toronto, but says he cannot afford to take any chances with the player until he knows where he intends to play. If he concludes to take Bonner he will put Doyle behind the bat.

"I will have a far better team than most people think," Selee said. "I will give the people of Chicago a good run for their money."

JOHNSON IN ST. LOUIS.

American League President There to Look After New Club.

St. Louis, Mo., Jan. 6. — Ban Johnson, president of the American league, is in St. Louis looking after the new club which Mat Killilea will have here next summer.

He said in an interview to-day that the American league will not have a club in Cincinnati next year. "Brush and Freedman have lost power in baseball," said Mr. Johnson, "and they will sell out when they think the time is propitious."

Explanations Desired.

Santiago de Chile, Jan. 6. — Argentina has not yet officially ratified the protocol signed by Senor Yanes, the Chilean minister of foreign affairs, and Senor Portela, the Argentine minister to Chile, and has asked the Chilean government for further explanations.

Goes to Minneapolis.

Huron, S. D., Jan. 6. — Miss Farrow, for the past three years a teacher in the Huron city schools, has resigned to accept a more lucrative position in the public schools of Minneapolis.

MURDERED IN COLD BLOOD.

Wyoming Sheriff Battered and Shot to Death After Being Wounded by Desperadoes.

Cheyenne, Wyo., Jan. 7—Late advices from Casper state that Sheriff Ricker of Natrona county, who was pursuing the Woodward brothers and two other escaped prisoners, was not killed in a battle with the outlaws, as at first reported, but was murdered in cold blood. When he reached the Woodward ranch he was shot down and dragged into the barn, where he was robbed of his valuables, his head beaten in a horrible manner and a bullet fired into his brain. One of his deputies is reported to have joined the outlaws and fled with them to the mountains. Posses have been sent to the scene from Lander, Sweetwater county, and Casper, making over 100 men now on the trail of the murderers, and they cannot escape. The people of Casper are preparing to lynch the outlaws if they are not killed by the officers.

POLICE ON WILD GOOSE CHASE.

Safe Blowers Send Officers to Another District and Then Complete Their Job.

Chicago, Jan. 7. — Two safe blowers took $700 from the Schulze Baking company's establishment at 452 West Twenty-third street yesterday morning, after having worked a novel ruse on the Englewood police. The robbers were seen by three bakers who were at work when the safe was blown open. One of the bakers went to summon the police, another ran for a revolver, and the third remained to watch the safe blowers, but after procuring their booty, the robbers beat a hasty retreat without being molested. Before beginning their work the safeblowers telephoned to the Englewood police station and asked that a patrol wagon be sent to Sixty-third and Ashland avenue. It was hastened to that place with all of the available policemen in the station, so that when the safeblowing was reported there were no officers on hand to start in pursuit.

MISS STONE NOT RELEASED.

No News From the American Missionary Since the Middle of November.

Constantinople, Jan. 7—The news that the brigands holding Miss Stone captive are being hustled by the inhabitants of the Turkish territory, where they are said to be in hiding, has created considerable sensation here. A deadly feud is said to exist between the leaders of the hostile bands, some of whom are reported to have deserted and are attempting to re-enter Bulgaria. Much anxiety is felt there with regard to the outcome of these developments.

The American legation here has not yet received news from M. Gargiulo, the dragoman of the legation, who left Salonika for the interior the latter part of last month with the purpose of meeting Miss Stone's captors. Members of the legation say the rumors of Miss Stone's release are quite unfounded. No direct news has been received from the American captive since Nov. 13, the date of the last letter from Miss Stone to Mr. Dickinson, counsel general at Constantinople, who has been acting as diplomatic agent of the United States at Sofia.

THREE ARE DROWNED.

Northwest Mounted Police Go Down to Their Death.

Seattle, Wash., Jan. 7.—Three Northwest mounted police were drowned in the Stickeen rapids on Dec. 29 by the overturning of a canoe. Two of the men were named Hathcote and Fitzgerald. The other's name is not known. The canoe and several dogs were picked up on the beach near the mouth of the river by people from Wrangel, which is only a few miles distant, but the bodies of the men were not found and probably were carried to sea.

M'GOVERN COMES FIRST.

"Young Corbett" Will Give the ex-Champion the Preference.

Denver, Jan. 7. — "Young Corbett," the featherweight champion, who began a week's engagement here yesterday, has received a challenge from Eddie Cook, at one time manager of Jim Jeffries, for a match with George Welty, the Australian bantam. Terry McGovern, however, will get the first chance, it is said.

Imprisoned Princess Is Insane.

Berlin, Jan. 7.—Princess Louise, the eccentric daughter of King Leopold of Belgium, who was divorced from her husband, Prince Philip of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha, and who has been held practically a prisoner in a retreat near Dresden for the last two years, has been pronounced hopelessly insane. Her daughter, Princess Dorothea, was married to Ernest Genthier, duke of Schleswig-Holstein, brother of the present empress of Germany, and her sister, Princess Stephanie, was the wife of Archduke Rudolph of Austria, who committed suicide.

Sheriff Restrained.

Fargo, N. D., Jan. 7. — The injunction restraining Sheriff Twitchell from selling taxes under the Woods law will not be made permanent. On the prayer of a large number of property owners Judge Pollock issued a temporary restraining order some weeks ago till the case could come up on its merits. The sheriff demurred to the complaint and Judge Pollock sustained the demurrer. There were many other suits in this and other counties of the state. The supreme court will be asked to determine the constitutionality of the law, and if it is held good there will be a forced collection of the back taxes for many years.

Recruiting Stations.

Fargo, N. D., Jan. 7. — Lieut. Hannay of the local recruiting station has arranged for the establishment of substations in Crookston, Grand Forks and Grafton. These will be in charge of sergeants and the lieutenant will make regular trips to the stations. The number of recruits here has been very satisfactory and the office will be maintained for some time.

Miss Ruth Hill Is Betrothed.

St. Paul, Jan. 7.—The engagement of Miss Ruth Hill, daughter of President J. J. Hill of the Northern Securities company, and Lansing Beard, a New York attorney, a college classmate of Miss Hill's brothers, is announced.

Child Burned to Death.

Steven's Point, Wis., Jan. 7. — The three-year-old daughter of E. C. McCormick was burned to death. Her clothing caught fire from a red-hot stove during the mother's absence. The child died one hour later.

BELL'S MEASURES

RIGOROUS WARFARE UNTIL THE INSURRECTION IS SUBDUED.

THE BEST PEACE METHOD NOW

GENERAL'S REPLY TO CRITICISMS OF PEACE ADVOCATES AT MANILA.

FILIPINOS ARE NOW ON THE RUN

AMERICAN COLUMNS ARE DRIVING THEM IN ALL DIRECTIONS.

Manila, Jan. 7. — Gen. J. Franklin Bell is conducting a vigorous campaign in Batangas province. Every available soldier is in the field. The columns commanded by Colonels Wint and Dougherty are doing excellent work and driving the Filipinos in all directions. A number of the latter are fleeing to Tayabas province, where the native constabulary are rendering valuable assistance in capturing men and rifles.

The advocates of peace at Manila deprecate the stern measures employed by Gen. Bell. In reply Gen. Bell says that these peace advocates have had numerous opportunities to use their influence as they have been given passes through the American lines almost for the asking, and that it has been afterward proved that they only went through the lines in many cases for the purpose of assisting the insurrection. Gen. Bell says that the best peace method now is a rigorous warfare until the insurrection is completely subdued.

The arrest of members of the wealthy Lopez family and the confiscation of their steamers and rice, as well as the arrest of three members of the religious corporations who were known to be instigators of the insurrection, has had an excellent

Effect Upon the Natives.

Conditions in the island of Samar are still unsatisfactory owing to the difficulty of finding the insurgents. Capt. Schoeffel of the Ninth infantry, who was wounded in a severe hand-to-hand fight last month at Dapdape, Samar island, between eighteen men of Company E of his regiment and a large force of bolomen, has practically recovered from the effects of his wound. In an official report of the encounter in which Capt. Schoeffel was wounded it is said Schoeffel killed three men before he received his wound, and that the remaining eighteen men were saved by his daring bravery.

The native authorities say Leyte is now peaceful and quiet. On the other hand the military authorities consider Leyte dangerous on account of its proximity to Samar, if no other reason.

Last Friday Maj. Albert Meyer, of the Eleventh infantry, captured quite an extensive arsenal and plant for the making of cartridges at Ormoc, on the northwest coast of Leyte. Maj. Meyer also captured another powder factory, large quantities of ammunition, four cannon and several rifles.

Maj. S. Henry Aten, ex-governor of the island of Leyte, now on a tour of inspection through that island and Mindoro, reported yesterday that the majority of the signal corps wires on Leyte had been cut and that this action was evidently preconcerted. Capt. Pitcher reports that he is rapidly ridding the island of Mindoro of insurgents.

CONTEST IN OHIO.

Hanna Controls the House and Foraker the Senate.

Columbus, Ohio, Jan. 7.—The Republican caucus Saturday night nominated the Foraker ticket for the senate and the Hanna ticket for the house. Yesterday the contest was continued on the same lines over the make-up of the standing committees, and it is evident that chairmanships and preferred places will go the same way as the offices. Price, who was defeated for speaker by McKinnon, will be shown consideration as chairman of the judiciary committee and the chairmanship of one of the committees on municipal affairs will go to some member from Cincinnati in deference to George B. Cox, but the courtesy will not be extended further. The Senate committees are being apportioned by a special committee on the lines of the Republican caucus, with the Democrats co-operating.

SHORTAGE IN FUNDS.

Order of B'rith Abraham Will Start an Investigation.

New York, Jan. 7.—Officers of the Order of B'rith Abraham, which had a stormy session at the Grand Central palace last Sunday while trying to fix the responsibility for an alleged shortage in the lodge's funds, decided yesterday that the laws governing life insurance in the order had been violated. It was therefore determined to draft resolutions requesting that the commissioner of insurance investigate the alleged embezzlement with a view to the punishment of the guilty parties. It was stated that the shortage might prove to be $20,000 upon further investigation.

Worse and Worse.

London, Jan. 7.—The war office has issued a list of sixty-five additional casualties in the attack of Gen. Dewet on Col. Firman's camp at Zeefontein on Christmas morning. Kitchener's previous report gave 56 killed and 150 wounded or prisoners.

Well-known Badger Dead.

Milwaukee, Wis., Jan. 7.—Robert S. Houston, the oldest cheesemaker in Wisconsin, died yesterday, aged eighty-two years. Mr. Houston was known all over the state as a dairyman and a legislator from Kenosha county.

Students Conduct a Meeting.

Kasson, Minn., Jan. 7. — Six young men from the various colleges of the state are holding a series of meetings in the M. E. Church of this place. They show the high educational facilities of Minnesota colleges.

PILFERING THE MAILS.

Postoffice Clerk in St. Paul Is Under Arrest.

St. Paul, Jan. 3.—William J. Work, clerk in the St. Paul postoffice, is behind the bars in the Ramsey county jail. He was arrested a few moments after the dawning of the new year by the United States marshal, and at once conducted to the county jail. Mr. Work is charged with an offense of the most serious nature, the rifling of letters entrusted to his care in the course of his employment as night mailing clerk in the St. Paul postoffice. He is fifty-five years old, is married, has an invalid daughter and an invalid wife.

Mr. Work has been employed in the postoffice of this city for fourteen years, and to the hour of his arrest was never enmeshed in "trouble" so far as now appears. His hour of duty begins at 12 o'clock, midnight, in the basement of the postoffice, and he is alone in the dark and gloomy room from 12 to 4 o'clock a. m. Under the circumstances he has had opportunity to commit the offenses now charged against him, and his alleged evil practices have proved exceptionally difficult of detection during the night hours and in that basement room.

CHARGED WITH FORGERY.

Two Men Arrested Who Are Suspected of Wholesale Operations.

Milwaukee, Jan. 3.—Two men, giving their names as Harry Williams and Charles Morgan, were arrested by the Milwaukee police yesterday charged with wholesale operating in forged checks in northern lumber camps. The men had in their possession 500 blank checks of the Montreal Lumber company. The checks were printed by a Milwaukee firm and an order for a similar number was left with another Milwaukee firm to be printed in the firm name of J. H. Stearns Lumber Company of Ashland, Wis. The prisoners also have in their possession receipts for expensive jewelry purchased in Cripple Creek, Colo. Williams is known to the police as a man named Lewis, who is charged with having operated extensively in similar checks at Wausau, Wis., a year ago.

TERRIBLE TRAGEDY IN MONTANA.

Man Kills Himself and Grandchild and Seriously Wounds His Wife.

Kalispell, Mont., Jan. 3. — Patrick Sullivan of Jennings, Mont., shot his wife, his grandchild and himself last night with fatal results to himself and the child, while his wife is in a dangerous condition. He is an old miner, well known around Butte. His wife runs the section house at Jennings. The citizens of Jennings sent to Kalispell for medical aid and a special train was sent with two physicians and the coroner. At a point just west of Lucerne the engine jumped the track, instantly killing Engineer Herron and seriously injuring Fireman Wilcox, who was scalded. The caboose did not leave the track and the doctors proceeded to Jennings, while the dead and injured were brought to Kalispell.

WHITES VS. REDS.

Indians Seek White Man's Justice—Chased by White Trapper.

La Crosse, Wis., Jan. 3. — Stand Straight, Muc Sigu, John Sherman and Little Ben, Indians, came to town for a warrant for the arrest of William Wanner, who, they allege, chased them with a Winchester in frontier style. The Indians have recently lost forty-eight traps, and allege they followed tracks to Wanner's cabin, and upon demanding them he promptly chased them away, and instead of fighting, the Indians came here for justice. They allege that the whites have recently taken much of the game caught in their traps.

Pioneer Merchant Dead.

Worthington, Minn., Jan. 3.—Henry E. Torrence, a pioneer settler of Nobles county, and one of the oldest merchants in Southwestern Minnesota, is dead. For thirty years he was engaged in the grain and mercantile business here. He was a prominent Mason. He leaves a wife and two daughters, Mrs. Fred Goff of Worthington and Mrs. Fred Mason of St. Paul.

Iowa Breeders' Convention.

Sioux City, Iowa, Jan. 3.—The Northwest Iowa Breeders' association, comprising fancy stock breeders from Iowa, Minnesota, South Dakota and Nebraska, will meet here in annual session Jan. 9 and 10. It is expected 200 men will be present. The matter of permanent live stock shows in Sioux City will be discussed.

Hudson Syndicate Buys.

Hudson, Wis., Jan. 3.—A syndicate of Hudson capitalists has bought a large department store at Bruce, Wis. The Belden Lumber company of that place is also in the race. Horace Barlow and George Slater of this place have gone there to assist in the work of opening the establishment.

Officer Commits Suicide.

Ilwaco, Wash., Jan. 3.—Lieut. James F. Bevan, Eighth artillery, was found dead in bed at Fort Canby yesterday morning. His brains were blown out and by his side was found a revolver. It is apparently a case of suicide.

Gutted by Fire.

Muskegon, Mich., Jan. 3.—Fire yesterday gutted the clothing establishment of A. P. Connor, causing a loss on stock and building of $35,000. Losses sustained by other firms in the block bring the total up to $50,000.

Wireless to Africa.

Ottawa, Ont., Jan. 3.—Mr. Marconi, who is here, is planning to increase the power of his wireless telegraph station in Cornwall with a view to the transmission of messages to points in South America and Africa.

Have Too Many Shoes.

Cumberland, Wis., Jan. 2.—Two suspicious characters giving the names of Welch and Patten were arrested here. A large quantity of men's rubbers, overshoes and caps, thought to have been stolen, were in their possession.

Drug Store Touched.

Spring Valley, Minn., Jan. 3.—B. W. Huntley's drug store was robbed of about $30. There is no clue, but it is thought some one concealed himself in the store before it was closed up for the night.

CUBA'S ELECTION

ONE-SIDED AFFAIR WILL NOT HELP THEM WITH CONGRESS.

MASO'S FOLLOWERS DO NOT VOTE

ESTRADA PALMA WILL RECEIVE UNANIMOUS VOTE FOR PRESIDENT.

CONGRESS WILL WANT TO KNOW

NOT LIKELY TO HURRY THE WITHDRAWAL OF UNITED STATES TROOPS.

Washington, Jan. 3. — The Cubans have not helped their appeal to congress for legislation looking to reciprocal trade relations with the United States by their one-sided election on Tuesday.

The reports from Havana indicate that the followers of Gen. Bartolome Maso did not vote. This is what has been feared by the war department and by senators and representatives most anxious to settle the Cuban question. The Latin race in Cuba, as in Central American states, do not know how to submit their differences to the to the peaceful verdict of the majority. Their weakness is for settlement by force. The Cuban election was looked upon as a test of the Cubans'

Qualification for Independence, and had there been a peaceful and well attended election, it would have done much to help the Cubans' cause in congress. The election appears to have been peaceful enough, but the absence of the Maso party from the polls is regarded as an indication that they will set up the claim that there was fraud and intimidation in this first Cuban election. When Gen. Maso saw indications of the success of Gen. Palma he appealed to the war department for a postponement of the election, alleging trickery and conspiracy. Of course Secretary Root declined to change the date of the election, and the managers of Maso advised their followers to refrain from voting. If this advice has been followed, as is indicated in the dispatches from Havana and Santiago, it will not add to the American Confidence

in the Cuban qualification for independent government. There are two more elections to be held in Cuba before the new government can be inaugurated. The electors to elect senators will meet Feb. 15, and those to elect a president will meet Feb. 24. These two bodies of electors are so numerous and so free to act on their own judgment that had there been a close contest Tuesday there might have been uncertainty as to the success of Gen. Palma until after the election of Feb. 24.

The members of congress will want to know more about the elections in Cuba and the willingness of the minority to abide by the result of this first general election before they authorize the president to withdraw the United States troops and of the island to Gen. Palma and the congress to be chosen. This question as to when Cuban government is to be inaugurated has not yet been settled, and if there should follow this election any demonstrations by Cubans indicative of unwillingness to accept it as final, such demonstrations will increase the fear of congress to order the withdrawal of troops and the recognition of the Cuban government.

There will be no reciprocity given to Cuba until it is known that there is a government there to reciprocate. If the Cubans cannot organize a government congress will have to adopt some other means of aiding the commerce of the island while it remains under our control.

-o-

Havana, Jan. 2.—The indications are that the entire Palma ticket will be elected, that Thomas Estrada Palma, the Nationalist candidate for the presidency of Cuba, will receive the unanimous vote of the electoral college.

FIRST LINER TO ARRIVE.

Zeeland Given a Boisterous Welcome by Neptune Entering Port.

New York, Jan. 3.—The first liner to arrive this year was the ice-plated Red Star steamship Zeeland, in yesterday from a boisterous voyage of eleven days from Antwerp. The northwest gale that lashed her as she approached port lifted clouds of spray from the crested seas and sent them in showers on her forward decks. The ice was so thick on the winches that they could not be worked until it was chopped away. The American liner New York, bound for Southampton, the first ocean crosser to sail in the new year, got a noisy send-off, created by a multitude with horns.

INDICTED FOR MURDER.

Mrs. Mathis Testifies Against Her Husband Before Grand Jury.

Oxford, Miss., Jan. 3.—The grand jury in the Will Mathis case returned true bills against Will Mathis, Orlando Lester, Whit Owens and Bill Jackson for the murder of the two Montgomerys. The four have been jointly indicted. Mrs. Mathis testified upon examination that Lester did the shooting and that her husband, Mathis, held a lamp. Hugh Montgomery and her husband, she said, had a dispute before the shooting.

Struck by a Train.

Wabash, Ind., Jan. 3. — A vehicle in which Jacob Trick, his daughter and a Mrs. Kelly were riding, was struck by a Big Four train eight miles north of Wabash yesterday. Miss Trick was killed and her father fatally injured.

Shot a Highwayman.

Chicago, Jan. 2. — Eugene Hector, formerly financial editor of a Chicago newspaper, shot and killed an alleged highwayman last night. The man killed is supposed to be a Bostonian named Donovan.

A BIG DEAL IN PINE.

Ashland (Wis.) Lumberman Buys Tract Containing 125,000,000 Feet.

Ashland, Wis., Jan. 7. — W. H. Gilbert of Ashland has just closed a deal which gives him ownership of one of the finest tracts of redwood timber in California. He returned Saturday morning from Chicago, where he ended details for the purchase of Walter Dyer of Boston in the tract of redwood in Humboldt county. The tract contains 125,000,000 feet, and was owned jointly by Mr. Gilbert and Mr. Dyer. The tract is very choice redwood and is heavily timbered, running as high as 300,000 feet per acre. It is situated only four miles from a logging railroad and is very conveniently located for logging operations.

VIADUCT COLLAPSES.

Freight Train Causes Wreck of the Structure.

Duluth, Minn., Jan. 7. — The Sixth avenue west viaduct collapsed as a result of two loaded freight cars in a Northern Pacific train getting off the track and wrecking one of the steel bents of the structure. It was a very unusual accident, and fortunately was not attended by injury to any one. The collapsed section of the viaduct is between the end of the union depot trainshed and the viaduct approach from Fifth avenue, a distance of about sixty feet. The viaduct is not passable, a wide gap appearing at the point described.

SHINE 'EM UP.

Machine That Will Make Bootblacks Very Weary.

Sioux City, Iowa, Jan. 7.—If the patent which Dr. E. Monk of this city has applied for is successful the persons who shine shoes with brushes will have to buck against machine competition. For some time Dr. Monk has been at work on an automatic shoe shiner. The customer drops a nickel in the slot, puts his foot on a pedestal and a glossy shine results. The doctor believes his new device will be successful, and its quickness in shining shoes will prove popular and do away with the old style of climbing up on a high chair to get a shine.

BANKS TAKE COUNTERFEITS.

Sioux Falls People Swindled by Men Who Make Money.

Sioux Falls, S. D., Jan. 7. — Local United States officials are striving to ascertain the identity of persons who are circulating counterfeit $5 and $20 gold pieces in this city and vicinity. It is said a spurious $20 gold piece was left in every bank in town, deposited by different parties, and was thrown out of several of them. The coins are not of the best workmanship, and a close inspection reveals the fact that they are counterfeit.

FARMER IS WAYLAID.

Would-Be Robbers Fail to Get Expected Loot.

Northfield, Minn., Jan. 7.—S. Christianson, a farmer residing in Greenvale, was waylaid and severely beaten by two unknown men while returning home from this city. The old man was knocked senseless and severely bruised. He had just recived his milk check, but he had sent it away before leaving town. It is thought robbery was the motive for the assault.

STATE OFFICER ARRESTED.

Member of Gov. La Follette's Staff Accused by Game Warden.

Ashland, Wis., Jan. 7. — A warrant was served on county Treasurer Tennant, charging him with violating the game laws by having partridges in his possession. Mr. Tennant is a member of the governor's staff and is prominent in politics. Two partridges were found in his office by the game warden. Tennant will fight the case.

WAGNER IN THE TOILS.

Alleged Forger Said to Have Been Arrested at Milwaukee.

Cumberland, Wis., Jan. 7. — District Attorney Fuller of this city has just been advised that Harry L. Wagner, who is said to have buncoed merchants here and in other Northwestern towns out of $8,000, and who escaped from the Barron jail, has been captured in Milwaukee and will be brought back here for trial.

E. M. Pope Steps Out of Office.

St. Paul, Jan. 7.—Saturday was the last day of E. M. Pope's service as public examiner. At the close of the day he called his clerks about him, and in a pleasing way spoke of his successor, F. T. Johnson of Minneapolis. At the commencement of Mr. Pope's administration there were 161 state banks in Minnesota. During his regime 83 new banks have been authorized. The rapid growth is continuous.

Forger Sentenced.

Aberdeen, S. D., Jan. 7. — Judge Campbell has sentenced Stone, the forger, to nine months in the penitentiary, and John Halpin, convicted of stealing wheat, was given a sentence of two years. The latter case will doubtless be taken to the supreme court.

A Bad Beginning.

Fargo, N. D., Jan. 7.—The first arrest of the year 1902 in Fargo was of a drunken woman. She was the first woman to be run in for several months and the police believe it will be a hoodoo for the year.

The Gun Was Working.

Rib Lake, Wis., Jan. 7.—Joseph Depto was accidentally shot by Alsie Boneville, both of this village, while they were examining a loaded revolver. Depto's condition is serious, but the doctors think he will live.

COLLISION AT SEA

PACIFIC COAST STEAMER SUNK BY AN UNKNOWN SAILING VESSEL.

TWENTY-SEVEN LIVES ARE LOST

ALL THE PASSENGERS AND MOST OF THE CREW ASLEEP WHEN CRASH CAME.

SINKS IN THIRTY-FIVE MINUTES

ALL WHO WERE NOT KILLED TOOK TO LIFE RAFTS AND BOATS.

San Francisco, Jan. 5.—The collision at sea early Thursday morning between the steamship Walla Walla and an unknown sailing vessel resulted in the sinking of the steamship and the probable loss of at least twenty-seven lives.

The Walla Walla, owned by the Pacific Coast Steamship company, sailed from San Francisco Jan. 1 for Puget sound ports. She carried thirty-six first-class passengers, twenty-eight second class and a crew of eighty men. When off Cape Mendocino, on the California coast, Thursday morning, an iron bark, believed to be French, loomed up in the haze and crashed into the Walla Walla's bow. Then the sailing vessel slid off into the darkness and was seen no more. All the passengers and crew of the Walla Walla, except the few on watch, were asleep, but were Aroused by the Crash.

The steerage quarters were in the bow, and it is believed that some of the steerage passengers and crew were crushed to death. A big hole was made in the steamer's bow and she sank in thirty-five minutes. The officers and crew maintained strict discipline and boats and life rafts were lowered. All who were not killed in the collision got off except Capt. Hall, who went down with his ship. He was picked up later by one of the boats, uninjured, with the exception of a few bruises.

There was a choppy sea running and the small boats could not made a landing on the shore, a few miles distant. They drifted about all day and finally sixty-five people were picked up by the steamer Dispatch, which took them to Eureka. Another boat under command of Engineer Brown and containing thirteen persons,

Attempted to Land

at Trinidad, and was swamped. John Wilkinson, quartermaster; William Martel, fireman; L. Drube, passenger, and three unknown men were drowned. Those in the boat who were saved were Engineer Brown, Fireman John McClellan, Coal Passer William Shinn, Sailor O'Leary, Chief Cook Marshall and Passengers William B. Smith and William Moorehouse.

When the Dispatch reached Eureka yesterday morning with the survivors tugs were immediately sent out for the missing boats. The tug Ranger picked up one containing eleven passengers and three of the crew.

The Walla Walla was valued at about $250,000. She was formerly used as a collier, and about ten years ago was converted into a passenger vessel at a cost of $175,000. The vessel was insured for about $200,000.

NOT YET RELEASED.

Brigands Are Evidently Still Holding Miss Stone a Captive.

Sofia, Bulgaria, Jan. 5.—The local reports of the release of Miss Stone and her companion remain unconfirmed. News from the frontier says the Brigands are hiding in Turkish territory, and are being hustled by the inhabitants, who had previously been victimized by the bandits. A fight occurred recently in which the leaders of the brigands are said to have been wounded. Part of the brigand band, wearied at the delay in obtaining a ransom of the captives, have deserted, and are attempting to re-enter Bulgaria, but the guards are closely watching the frontier. It is further said that the whereabouts of the captives is known, and that it is hoped the agents of the missionaries will be able to get in contact with the bandits in a few days.

HOW TO STOP THE WAR.

Suggestions From a Diplomat Close to Mr. Kruger.

Brussels, Jan. 5.—The Count du Turenne, who holds the grade of minister plenipotentiary in the French diplomatic service, but who has no post at present, has sent a remarkable letter to the Independence Belge, suggesting a basis for the settlement of the South African war. The communication excites comment, not only on account of the boldness of the diplomat in interfering in such questions, but from the fact that the count is related to prominent English families, and has been intimately associated with Mr. Kruger and the Boer representatives on the continent.

The count asserts that in view of the present situation, he is confident Mr. Kruger will accept autonomy for the countries south of Bechuanaland, without any restriction except the suzerainty of Great Britain over their relations with foreign governments.

Vessel May Be Lost.

Newburyport, Mass., Jan. 5. — Fears are felt for the safety of the two-masted schooner F. A. Smith, which left here on Monday last, bound for Boston with a cargo of sand. Nothing has been heard of her since she sailed and it is believed that in the gale of Tuesday night she foundered. She carried a crew of four men.

Not Wanted in Jefferson.

Jefferson, Ohio, Jan. 5.—The authorities here state that they have no record of the murder said to have been committed there by John Murray, now under arrest in Ireland. The mayor says Murray is not wanted in Jefferson.

Strathcona's Gift.

London, Jan. 5. — Lord Strathcona and Mount Royal, the Canadian high commissioner, has sent a check for $100,000 to the authorities of Aberdeen university. The money is to complete the extension of the university.

TROUBLE OVER A KANSAS LAW.

Contempt Proceedings Against Gov. Stanley Because He Removed Some District Judges.

Topeka, Kan., Jan. 3. — It is very probable that contempt proceedings will be instituted next week against Gov. Stanley and Attorney General Goddard by Judge William Thomson of the Osage Pottawattomie district. The trouble between the state officers and Judge Thomson is the result of the biennial election law, enacted by the legislature last winter. This law provided that district judges whose terms would expire last year must be reappointed before they could serve until the regular election this years. Gov. Stanley removed Judges Glasse, Thomson, Andrews, McBride and Geiger and appointed successors to them. The governor and attorney general have also instructed the sheriffs in the judicial district to prevent the old judges from convening court next week. The deposed judges have held numerous consultations, and have decided that the biennial election law is unconstitutional, and that the governor is in contempt in ordering the sheriffs to prevent them from acting. Judge Thomson has served notice on Gov. Stanley of the intended action of the judges.

PASSENGER TRAIN DITCHED.

Two Men Killed and Twelve Severely Injured.

Pittsburg, Jan. 3.—As a result of a through passenger train on the Baltimore & Ohio road jumping the track yesterday two men are dead and twelve injured, five of whom are considered seriously hurt. The train ditched was the through passenger which left here at 8:40 yesterday morning bound for New York. It was a full vestibuled train composed of engine, baggage car, postal car, two coaches, sleeper and Pullman chair car. In going down the steep grade one and a half miles west of Glencoe the engine, from a cause as yet unexplained, jumped the track and the train piled on top of it. Probably the only thing to prevent the swelling of the death list was the fact that the heavy vestibule cars did not break in going down the embankment. The work to rescue the injured had to be done quickly because the gas tanks in the cars were exploded and set fire to the wreckage. The flames spread rapidly and in a short time the entire train was burned.

KILLED WITH A LAMP.

New Year's Celebration Ends in a Double Murder.

Cleveland, Ohio, Jan. 3.—As a result of a New Year's celebration Tuesday night in a little house in Hamilton street, one woman is dead and another will die. At 11:55 Mrs. Frank Bayes and Lucy Below were enjoying themselves. Five minutes later they were writhing in agony. Frank Bayes, who was responsible for this sudden transformation, had in the meantime left the building, with only a thin undershirt for a covering. He was not captured until nearly thirty minutes after he left the house. From the details obtained from neighbors it seems that Frank Bayes and his wife had been celebrating the advent of the New Year. His wife offered him a glass of beer. Bayes had remonstrated with her prior to that time, insisting that too much liquor had already been taken. He became angry when his wife insisted that he drink the beer, and, picking up a lamp at the bedside, hurled it at her. The lamp exploded, covering Mrs. Bayes and Lucy Below with the burning oil.

"NO OFFENSE."

Having or Passing Notes of Defunct Bank Not a Crime.

San Francisco, Jan. 3.—United States District Judge De Haven has rendered a decision that it is no offense against the United States government or the federal laws to be in possession or to utter notes of the defunct State Bank of New Brunswick, N. J. The point was raised by counsel for Robert Lee Pitts, Edward W. Smith and Leopold Greenburg, who were indicted for possessing and passing notes of the bank mentioned, the indictment being based upon the federal statute prohibiting the possession or utterance of anything in the likeness of similitude of an obligation of the states.

HE PLAYS TO WIN.

Lord Rosslyn Makes Fairly Good Winnings at Monte Carlo.

Monte Carlo, Jan. 3.—Lord Rosslyn's "system" to break the bank of Monte Carlo has proven a decided success so far. He started his play Monday, and has had four sittings, rising from the table at 11 o'clock last night. He has won at every sitting, and the winnings to date at 67,000 francs ($13,400). Among those who watched the Englishman were Senator Depew and his bride. Lord Rosslyn declared that he firmly expected to break the bank daily after a few days, and continue doing so as long as he is permitted to play.

HER NECK BROKEN.

Well Known Stenographer Charged With Murdering a Woman.

Ardmore, Ind. T., Jan. 3.—Philip Barrett, aged twenty-five, a well known stenographer of this city, has been arrested on a warrant charging him with the murder of Mrs. V. Emhart, a widow. Barrett, it is alleged, went home intoxicated and began to abuse his wife, when Mrs. Emhart, who lives at the Barrett house, went to Mrs. Barrett's assistance. It is alleged that Barrett struck Mrs. Emhart with a chair and broke her neck.

Gamblers in Trouble.

Nashville, Tenn., Jan. 3.—Writs were sworn out yesterday for the arrest of forty alleged gamblers. The warrants charge the defendants with various felonies. The warrants were issued on the affidavit of F. K. Odil.

Shot by a Mob.

Indianapolis, Jan. 3.—A negro miner named Hinsley, aged twenty years, was shot and instantly killed by a mob of white men near Linton, Ind., yesterday. The negro had had a fight with a white man.

AS TO PORTO RICO

LITTLE ISLAND MAKES GREAT PROGRESS UNDER AMERICAN RULE.

GOV. HUNT'S FIRST MESSAGE

CONGRATULATES THE LEGISLATURE ON THE CONDITION OF AFFAIRS.

THE PROGRESS OF EDUCATION

NEARLY NINE HUNDRED SCHOOLS WITH FORTY-FIVE THOUSAND PUPILS.

San Juan, Porto Rico, Jan. 3. — Gov. Hunt's message to the legislature of Porto Rico was read this morning before a joint session of that body held in the theater of San Juan. The building was crowded. The message congratulated the legislature upon the fact that its work in 1901 had been vindicated as wise, conservative and progressive and conducive to the establishment of free trade between Porto Rico and the United States, seven months before the existing tariff duties provided for the cessation of the collection of such duties. In his message Gov. Hunt says:

"Tranquility and contentment prevail in Porto Rico; schools have multiplied; railroads are being constructed; the commerce of the island has been developed and exports have increased; agriculture has become profitable; roads are being built, and debts are being paid. Tolerance of opinion has become more common, former antagonism being forgotten."

Going to School.

Gov. Hunt's report said further that 883 schools were opened throughout the island, 934 teachers were employed in them, and 45,000 pupils attended them. Thirty-two schools had been constructed and 120 Porto Rican students were being educated in the United States. The insular revenues had increased the available balance by $128,000 over the balance of July, 1900, and the total balance today, including tariff rebates, etc., amounted to $2,000,000.

Gov. Hunt recommended the revision of the municipal laws and the adoption of modern city charters. He did not recommend an increase in the insular tax, but he advised an increase from ½ to 1 per cent in the tax in municipalities. The governor recommended an increase in the taxes on beer, cosmetics and perfumes and a road tax of a dollar a head. He advised the improvement of San Juan harbor and the early consideration of the new code now being prepared by a commission.

The Iglesias Case.

Concerning the case of Santiago Iglesias (the representative of the American Federation of Labor, who was sentenced here on Dec. 11, to three years and four months imprisonment on a charge of conspiracy), the governor referred to the ambiguities of the existing law and said that the remedy therefor was in the hands of the legislature.

"There is no room for lawlessness in Porto Rico," said Gov. Hunt, "but it is perfectly lawful to organize to secure better wages by peaceful measures. The ambition to better one's condition is intensely American, and where the purpose of organization is merely to increase the profits of labor or to dignify its worth through peaceful means, a law susceptible to a construction forbidding the execution of such a purpose is unworthy the American government, and should be wiped out, no matter how unworthy the particular individual may be who imitates the organization. The law knows no distinction between individuals."

UNCLE SAM OWES LESS.

One Billion and Eleven Millions Now the Amount.

Washington, Jan. 3.—The monthly statement of the public debt issued yesterday shows that at the close of business Dec. 31, 1901, the national debt, less cash in the treasury, amounted to $1,011,023,290, a decrease for the month of $8,643,102.

The monthly comparative statement of the government receipts and expenditures shows that for December, 1901, the total receipts were $47,001,904, which is an increase as compared with December, 1900, of $215,436. The expenditures for the month amounted to $37,318,998, which leaves a surplus for the month of $9,742,906. The expenditures for the month were nearly $3,000,000 less than for December, 1900. The surplus for the first six months of the present fiscal year is approximately $18,000,000.

A comparative statement of the receipts from the war revenue act of June 13, 1898, and the war revenue reduction act of March 2, 1901, shows that the former act produced between July 1, 1900, and Nov. 30, 1900, $46,623,309. The revenue reduction act of the latter date produced in the corresponding period in 1901, $29,429,642, a decrease of $17,199,936.

DOWAGER IS A BACKSLIDER.

Conversion to Progressive Thought Not Permanent.

Pekin, Jan. 3.—Several recent occurrences tend to discourage the hope that the dowager empress had learned a lesson of reform from the events of the past year. Foreigners are disposed to take a pessimistic view of the outlook. Gen. Yung-Lu's determination to organize two anti-foreign army corps, to offset the commands of the pro-foreign Chinese leaders, is particularly disquieting and is evidence of the continued domination of his influence, which is bitterly anti-foreign. Other incidents which are considered significant are the suppression of the only independent newspaper in this city by order of the governor of Pekin and the closing of the industrial school here, recently organized by philanthropic Chinese, also by the governor's order.

HIS ASHES AS PLEDGE.

The Dust of Joseph Paita, Anarchist, Held for Board Bill.

Pittsburg, Pa., Jan. 3. — The ashes of Joseph Paita, the anarchist, who committed suicide here on May 13, 1900, are held, and will not be delivered to Paita's friends until a debt of $60 has been paid. When Paita's body was cremated Emma Goldman preached a funeral address. It was said at the time that Paita killed himself because he did not want to carry out the task imposed upon him of killing the young king of Italy. P. Oansulutl holds the can containing the ashes and he refuses to give them up to be taken to Italy until a bill for $60 for Paita's board has been paid.

Telephone Exchange Sold.

Madison, S. D., Jan. 3.—The telephone exchange in this city has been sold to the Southwestern Minnesota Telephone company, which has taken possession. The consideration was $8,000.

SUGAR CANE AS FODDER.

South Dakotan Claims to Have Solved the Food Problem.

Sioux Falls, S. D., Jan. 4. — L. H. Willrodt, a progressive Brule county farmer, has been experimenting the past year with sugar cane as a product for winter feed for cattle and sheep. He reports that he harvested about fifty tons from ten acres, and that his cattle, sheep and hogs were very fond of it, consuming the entire stalk even though an inch in diameter. He says his experiment proves to him that the coarse feed problem for live stock is solved in South Dakota. He planted the cane in drills, two rows about eight inches apart, and then a space of about two feet and then two more rows were drilled. In this way it can be cultivated and the grass kept down and prevented from drawing all the moisture out of the ground.

MYSTERIOUS EXPLOSION.

Three Men Seriously Injured—Can of Water Bursts.

Winona, Minn., Jan. 4. — A peculiar explosion occurred at the Northwestern quarry at Stockton this morning, in which John Schneider, John Pavek and William Christie were badly injured. Schneider had a great gash cut in his neck, laying bare the jugular vein. Schneider was heating some water in an old powder can, when it exploded, the flying pieces hitting all three men. The men maintain there was nothing in the can but water, and the explosion is mysterious.

HALF THE TOWN BURNED.

Weston (Iowa) Business Houses Go Up in Smoke.

Weston, Iowa, Jan. 4. — Fire which started in Petrus Peterson's general store at midnight destroyed a greater part of the business portion of the town and several residences. At 3 o'clock yesterday morning half of the residences of the town had been emptied of their contents, and the streets were filled with household effects and stocks of merchandise which had been removed to places of safety. The loss at that hour was near $50,000.

TWO ORDERS ISSUED.

Stay Is Granted in the Heinze-Anaconda Legal Battle.

Helena, Mont., Jan. 4.—The supreme court yesterday granted a stay to the Anaconda company of the order of survey and examination which Judge Clancey had given E. A. Heinze, permitting him to go into the Anaconda mines. An order to show cause why a supervisory writ should not issue was also granted in the application of Attorney C. F. Kelly, representing the Anaconda company, and was made returnable next Tuesday.

Wisconsin Jurist Dead.

Milwaukee, Wis., Jan. 4.—Judge Eugene S. Elliott of the circuit court of Milwaukee county, died suddenly last night from heart failure at the rooms of the Milwaukee Whist league, where he was spending the evening at whist. Mr. Elliott was sixty years old. He was well known throughout the state. He was a prominent Mason and was also known as the father of the National Whist league, which was organized ten years ago, and of which he was the first president.

Aberdeen Made Headquarters.

Aberdeen, S. D., Jan. 4. — The Milwaukee Railroad company has made Aberdeen headquarters for a freight and passenger agency, and has promoted J. A. Macdonald to the position. Mr. Macdonald has represented the company in this field for some time as a traveling agent, working under a chief in Minneapolis. Until the past year or two a Milwaukee traveling freight or passenger agent was rarely in this section.

Victims of Runaway Recovering.

Deadwood, S. D., Jan. 4.—The young ladies who were injured in a runaway at Lead Saturday night are improving. Miss Olive Knowles is in the hospital at Lead with an injury of the back. There is a likelihood that the sight of Miss Myrtle Grimshaw's eye will be impaired. The remainder of the eighteen in the party escaped with minor cuts and abrasions.

National Educational Manager.

Wausau, Wis., Jan. 4.—John F. Lamont of this city, county superintendent of schools, has been appointed state manager for the National Educational association. The arrangements for transportation and hotel accommodation from this state on the occasion of the meeting of the association in Minneapolis next July will be under his supervision.

Public Mortgage Burning.

Sioux Falls, S. D., Jan. 4.—Next Sunday the members of Jordan Methodist church of this city will have a public mortgage burning and general jubilee over the wiping out of the last dollar of indebtedness against the church. For ten years there has been a mortgage of about $1,200 against the church. This has just been paid off.

Lived in Washington Co. 44 Years.

Cottage Grove, Minn., Jan. 4. — Mrs. Hannah Johnson, a pioneer resident of this county, and wife of Moses Johnson, is dead at her home in Woodbury, at the age of eighty-two years. She had lived in Washington county forty-four years.

Hotelkeeper Dead.

Cumberland, Wis., Jan. 4.—L. Paradis, a pioneer resident and hotelkeeper, died at his home in Cedar Lake, this county, and was buried at Stanfold.

Money for Depositors.

Tacoma, Wash., Jan. 4.—Payment began yesterday to depositors of the defunct Metropolitan bank. About $400,000 will be paid to claimants.

New Trial Granted.

Wausau, Wis., Jan. 4.—A new trial has been granted in the case of Connor vs. Goodwillie, in which judgment for the plaintiff for $5,200 was recently rendered. The new trial was granted on account of errors in the instructions.

Big Fire at Sturgeon Bay.

Sturgeon Bay, Wis., Jan. 4. — Fire last evening destroyed the John H. Allan Seed company's seed house, M. Cochem's warehouse, and the Falk & Buchan warehouse. The loss is estimated at $40,000.

FIGHT TO FINISH

PLAN OF ACTION TO DEFEAT PROPOSED RAILROAD MERGER AGREED UPON.

GOVERNORS ALL OF ONE MIND

LEGAL ACTION WILL BE INSTITUTED IMMEDIATELY IN MINNESOTA.

GOV. VAN SANT IS PLEASED

THOROUGHLY SATISFIED WITH THE WORK OF THE HELENA MEETING.

Helena, Mont., Jan. 3. — A definite plan of action to defeat the proposed consolidation of the Northern Pacific, Great Northern and Burlington railway systems was unanimously agreed upon by the governors and attorneys general of seven Northwestern states, in which those roads have mileage. Legal action will be instituted immediately in Minnesota courts with this object in view. To quote Attorney General Douglas of Minnesota:

"The thing will be fought to a finish."

Just how, when or where these suits will be brought, neither Gov. Van Sant of Minnesota or Attorney General Douglas would state. The conference adjourned late Tuesday afternoon after adopting resolutions condemning the proposed merger as contrary to sound public policy, and pledging support to any proper legal action which may be brought to test its validity. Other resolutions adopted call on congress to investigate the subject and favor the granting of power to the interstate commerce commission to fix maximum rates on interstate business.

Gov. Van Sant and most of the other state officials who have been present at the conference left Tuesday night for their homes. Gov. Van Sant expressed himself as much gratified over the result of the meeting.

"So far as I am concerned," said he, after the meeting adjourned, "I am thoroughly satisfied with the work of the meeting. It accomplished all that could be desired. I am very much pleased."

Governors Hunt and Toole also expressed gratification at the result of the conference.

N. P. PREFERRED IS RETIRED.

Hill-Morgan Coup Successfully Accomplished in New York.

New York, Jan. 3—Northern Pacific "preferred" was retired yesterday morning.

The operation was purely clerical, performed in the office of Secretary George H. Earl at New York, and was entirely painless, so far as Mr. Earl was concerned.

There was no formal action necessary except to make suitable record of the fact that the stock was retired yesterday under the resolution of Nov. 13 last.

In order that there might be no legal hitches, however, the precaution was taken to accomplish the retirement as soon after the whistles blew at midnight as possible.

Judge Lochren at Minneapolis late Tuesday afternoon dissolved the temporary order of Judge Elliott of the district court for Hennepin county, Minn., restraining the Northern Pacific from retiring its preferred stock yesterday.

In dissolving the restraining order, Judge Lochren ruled that the Northern Securities company was in no way concerned in the retirement of the preferred stock, which was provided for before the incorporation of the securities company, and which could have been accomplished even had the company never been formed.

GAGE'S RESIGNATION.

The Secretary Now Formally Presents It to the President.

Washington, Jan. 3.—Secretary Gage has handed the president his formal letter of resignation of the treasury portfolio, to take effect as soon as his successor has qualified for the office. It will probably be made public when the president's letter accepting the resignation is delivered to Mr. Gage.

NOTED PRIEST DEAD.

Fr. Constantine Maria Von Droste-Huelshoff Stricken With Apoplexy.

La Crosse, Wis., Jan. 3.—Rev. Constantine Maria von Droste-Huelshoff, priest at Keyesville, Wis., is dead at St. Francis hospital, the result of a stroke of apoplexy. He was the son of the noted Baron von Droste-Huelshoff of Westphalia, Germany, nephew of the archbishop of that diocese, and also nephew of a German poet of the same name. His uncle ordained him thirty-five years ago in Germany. He was sixty years old and had been here fifteen years, and had attained some prominence at a German writer.

His Skull Crushed In.

Sioux City, Iowa, Jan. 3.—Lars Alexson, a wealthy farmer near Audobon, Iowa, has been found dead with his skull crushed in. He was undoubtedly murdered. No motive is known for the crime.

New Trial Denied.

Aberdeen, S. D., Jan. 3.—Judge Campbell denied all four motions for a new trial in the McClellan estate case, from Sioux Falls. The case will have to go to the supreme court.

Thieves Steal From Church.

Escanaba, Mich., Jan. 3.—During the absence in Chicago of Rev. Father Mesnard of St. Ann's Catholic church thieves entered the parsonage and stole $50 in money belonging to the Altar society and several valuable pictures.

Fatally Injured by an Iceboat.

Madison, Wis., Jan. 3.—The iceboat races on Lake Monona yesterday came to a rather tragic end when one of the boats flew into a crowd of spectators, fatally injuring John A. Fiscus, it is believed. Two others were hurt.

TOOK "HIS MEDICINE."

Forger Admits His Guilt and is Bound Over.

Breckinridge, Minn., Jan. 5.—A. Kist, who has been working as a farm laborer for several years at Campbell, in this county, was bound over to the grand jury on the charge of forgery. Kist is a young man about twenty-two years old, and was, up to the day he was arrested, in the employ of W. D. Billingsley at Campbell. Kist admits his guilt, and says he has passed forged checks amounting to over $200 at and near Campbell. He was arrested in Wahpeton and came over here without requisition papers, and said he would "take his medicine."

WRECKED BY DYNAMITE.

Occupants of a Street Car Are Thrown Into a Panic.

Springfield, Ill., Jan. 5.—A street car which was conveying thirty-five employes of the Sattley Manufacturing company from their plow works was wrecked by dynamite which had been placed on the track at Ninth street and South Grand avenue. The passengers were thrown into a panic, though none were much injured. Officers prosecuted a vigorous search for the perpetrators of the outrage. Strikers denounce the wrecking of the car.

NOTHING NEW IN GORTON CASE.

Litchfield Mystery Presents No New Phases.

Litchfield, Minn., Jan. 5.—There are no developments in the Gorton fire case. The officers who are working on the case will give out nothing in the way of information. The coroner has not yet held an inquest, and it is not likely, he says, that one will be held before the interment of the remains of Mr. and Mrs. Gorton.

THREE SUFFER BY BIG FIRE.

Rib Lake Merchants and a Doctor Suffer Loss of Thousands.

Rib Lake, Wis., Jan. 5. — Fire broke out in the Buxton Drug company's store and destroyed the drug store, the home and office and barn of Dr. Werner and the building occupied by the Rib Lake Mercantile company. The loss is about $8,000, with insurance of $3,000.

New Trial Granted.

Yankton, S. D., Jan. 5.—A new trial has been granted by Judge Smith to George McElwain of Gayville, who was found guilty of manslaughter at the November term of the circuit court. The new trial was granted because of an alleged error in the instruction to the jury. McElwain was tried and found guilty of stabbing John Gray in a saloon row in Gayville last September, Gray dying from the effect of the wounds.

Cut His Own Throat.

St. Paul, Jan. 5—Bernard Michel, one of the best known German residents of St. Paul, was found dead in his office, 337 Rice street, at 8 o'clock yesterday morning, with his throat cut and his left wrist slashed with a razor. Coroner Miller decided that the injury was self-inflicted and he will not hold a post mortem examination or an inquest. He left a note saying that he was insane, and preferred death to an insane asylum.

Dickinson's Cattle Business.

Dickinson, N. D., Jan. 5.—Dickinson is becoming a busy cattle shipping point, as is evinced by the fact that during the past year 12,120 head of beeves were shipped from this place, equal to one-seventh of the total shipments of the entire State of Montana for the same period. Dickinson also shipped sixty-seven car loads of horses and forty-five car loads of mutton sheep.

In Sport and Dead Earnest.

Dickinson, N. D., Jan. 5.—Wolves are especially bold in the vicinity of Dickinson this winter. Many losses of cattle and sheep are reported by the ranchmen. A party of hunters have organized to exterminate the breed, killing twenty-six on their first excursion. These parties offer much sport besides the practical results that are accomplished.

Banquet to Jurists.

Aberdeen, S. D., Jan. 5.—The Brown County Bar association gave a banquet Wednesday evening in honor of Judge A. W. Campbell, who is soon to retire from the judicial bench, and to Judge J. H. McCoy, who succeeds him as judge of the Fifth judicial circuit. Many out-of-town attorneys were present, and a very pleasant time enjoyed.

Something of a Financier.

Winona, Minn., Jan. 5. — Another bankruptcy case has been brought before the United States court in this city, the petitioner being Charles O. Sisco of Byron, Olmsted county. He is a locomotive fireman by occupation and his liabilities are $1,528 and his assets $120.57, of which $110.57 is claimed to be exempt.

Woman Preacher From Iowa.

Fargo, N. D., Jan. 5. — Rev. Elinor Gordon, who until recently was pastor of the Unitarian church at Burlington, Iowa, will conduct services in the Unitarian church here during January. Miss Gordon has the reputation of being an excellent speaker.

Life Crushed Out by Cars.

St. Paul, Jan. 5.—Emma Forcier, a fifteen-year-old girl, was killed in the Chicago Great Western yards near her home. She was crawling under the cars when the train suddenly started and she was crushed under the wheels.

Country Store Burned.

Yankton, S. D., Jan. 5. — The store building of John Gleich, of Lakeport, this county, burned. Loss, $1,700; insurance, $1,000.

Deputy Commissioner of Labor.

Madison, Wis., Jan. 5.—A. H. Long, the well known attorney of Prairie du Chien, has been appointed deputy commissioner of the bureau of labor statistics, to succeed Stephen W. Gilman. The salary is $1,500 per year.

Sent to Prison for Larceny.

Ashland, Wis., Jan. 5. — John Higgs, accused of larceny, pleaded guilty in the circuit court and was sentenced to eighteen months in prison. John Hinz, an accomplice, was sentenced to the county jail.

Rickerby's Folly

By TOM GALLON

CHAPTER IX. (Continued.)

In the center of the room stood the girl, clasped close in the arms of a tall man, to whom she was speaking as a woman speaks only to the man she loves above all the world. And—most appalling thing of all—she called this man Gilbert Rickerby!

"You will not laugh at me because I call this place, to which I have come to meet you, the world of dreams, will you?" asked the girl, looking up, wistfully, into the face of the man. "Think how long we have waited; think how often, in my dreams, I have dreamed of you—poor Gilbert Rickerby—doomed to wander over the earth, loving me, yet never seeing me, never holding me in your arms. Oh, there is nothing to laugh at in that, is there?"

"Indeed, my sweet, I am nearer to tears than to laughter," replied the man. "How can I bear the thought of meeting you like this, after all these years, Olive?" He held her closer in his arms and stared, hungrily, into her innocent, upturned face. "Look into my eyes, and listen to what I have to say to you. So—I am not laughing, dear Olive; I am in deadly earnest. You have been told that this old lover of yours, Gilbert Rickerby, is dead?"

"Yes," she replied, quite calmly, and smiled up into his eager eyes. "But that is nothing at all; for death has not divided us; I have been able, mercifully, to come back to you, to meet you again. Why should we grieve, or trouble about that? Oh, if you knew all the dark and wandering ways I have come through, since I fell asleep, to find you, you would be glad, as I am."

Still he held her close; still he tried to show her what he really was, and that this was no dream-world wherein they met, but a world of flesh and blood and strife and danger. He knew that he could do nothing to help her, or to get her away from that dreadful place, while she held to that strange belief of hers; he wanted to call her back to the vital present, and to show her where they stood and what terrors lay before their feet. For all the impression, he might as well have cried to the angels.

"Indeed—indeed, I am glad," he said. "But I want you to see that this is but a dream of yours, from which you have now happily awakened. I want you to know that we are united, not in a mere dream sense, but in reality; that we are living flesh and blood, man and woman; and that the world is here before us, to be conquered. Look into my eyes; hear my voice, and when I tell you that Gilbert Rickerby is not dead, that that is all a mistake, that he stands before you now, with his arms close about you; that he is your living lover."

She seemed to ponder his words for a moment, and then, suddenly, put up her hands and thrust him away, covered her face with her hands and began to cry softly, like a child in pain. "Oh—my dream—my dream!" she whispered, brokenly. "Is it to be shattered, like all the rest? Have I come through so much pain and weariness to find him; and now he does not know me? I dreamed that we had left the world behind; that we stood alone in the World of Dreams, and that all the sorrow and the waiting were ended. Oh—my dream—my dream!"

He saw what he must do; he stepped forward hurriedly and put his arms again about the weeping little figure. "Indeed—I was wrong, sweetheart," he said. "I had no right to say such a thing at all. Call it the World of Dreams, if you will; call it what you like, so that you let me hold you like this—so that I know you are safe." Yet, under his breath, he muttered, softly, "Oh, heavens! to find her like this!"

She seemed comforted with that, gradually raised her head, and looked at him again, with something of the old confidence. Ursula Sewell, listening and watching like someone in a dream, heard the strange thing this man the girl called Gilbert Rickerby had to say next.

"Now, I want you to do something for me, dear Olive—something to please me," he said. "It is necessary that you should go away from here; that you should go away in the night-time, when your dreams come to you. These are those who would do me harm if they could—those who would take you from me."

"Ah—no—no!" she cried, clinging to him. "They shall not do that. But do you think they can reach us here—now that we have got beyond them—far away from them?"

"I fear they can," he said, sadly. "And so I want you to do what I ask—just as you used to do a long while ago here—when we were in that—that other world." He knew that it was necessary to humor the idea in her mind if he was to get her to do what he wanted.

"I will do it, gladly—whatever it is!" she said, quickly.

"That's a dear girl!" he cried. "I want you to go away from this place—to go away with a good friend of mine, who will take care of you until I can come to you. Remember, if you remain here, they will keep you from me—will find means to separate us. Will you do what I ask?"

She looked at him in bewilderment. "I—I do not understand," she said, nervously. "How can they come here? How can anyone divide us ever again?"

"Believe me, dear Olive, when I say that they will. Come, now, in that other world you say we have left behind, you always believed in me, always let me take the lead in everything, did you not? Will you let me take the lead now?"

"That—other—world!" she repeated, slowly. "When was it—where was it? How long ago it all seems! Shall we ever go back to it—you and I, Gilbert?"

"Please God, some day!" he replied, fervently. "And we will go back to it together, my dearest! Together! Yes; we will never be separated any more—never any more!" she said.

"Not if I can unravel this thing and bring you back to life and earth, and all things we love together," he muttered to himself. "So, now you will do what I ask you; you will go away with this friend of mine, and wait until I come to you—eh?" he asked, aloud.

"Yes; gladly," she replied.

Ursula Sewell saw the man run across the room to another door, and to speak sharply to someone on the other side; the next moment a little man, baldheaded and meek of aspect, came out and stood blinking his weak eyes in the light. He made an awkward bow in the direction of the young girl; but she took not the faintest notice of him.

"Now, Reeks," said Gilbert, hurriedly, "what am I to do?" He waved one hand, despairingly, towards the girl. "You see her here; you may have heard something of what she has said. The terrors of this place—the shock of meeting me, when she supposed me to be dead—her wanderings during that night, about this horrible house—all these things have brought about this madness you see. She dreams that I am dead, and that she has met me in another world. Heaven bless her, she is true to me, even when her mind is clouded. But what am I to do? I must get her out of this place at once; you will take charge of her?"

Ursula Sewell saw that the little man stood still in perplexity, an slowly and doubtfully shook his head. "So far as I am concerned," he replied, "I would take the young lady and give her all the protection she needs. But, my dear sir—you don't know Mrs. R.!"

"But surely your wife, in such a case as this, would not refuse to grant shelter to a young girl who needs it so sorely?" cried Gilbert.

"I assure you, Mr. Rickerby, that Mrs. R. labors under the delusion that every female between the ages of sixteen and sixty has but to look upon me to fall a captive to my charms. Absurd, isn't it? Now, as a matter of fact, I am not that kind of man at all; I worship the sex, it is true, but my worship is embodied in Mrs. R., only she won't believe it."

"But surely, under the circumstances, you can persuade her. Tell her what you like; tell her the whole story, if you will; tell her that this young lady is ill and in danger; take her my assurances that I will be at your house within twenty-four hours to explain matters myself."

While Mr. Reeks was still hesitating, a cry from Gilbert caused him to raise his head; he saw that another woman had entered the room, and was standing, looking quietly at the little group.

"You needn't be alarmed," said the woman, quietly. "I followed this girl to-night to discover where she went—and what she did. I followed her because I hated her."

"Hated her?" echoed Gilbert, staring at her curiously.

"Yes—hated her!" she repeated. "I believed that she stood in my way—never mind how. But I have seen to-night something I never thought to see. I have seen a love, greater than anything of which I have read, or heard, or dreamed. Oh, yes—I know my hands are not clean in this business; I want to get this girl out of my way. But, as truly as I believe that there is some brighter world above us—some such world as that of which she speaks—so truly will I help her, and help you, if you will let me."

"Who are you?" asked Gilbert, in wonder.

"I came here to find a man who has wronged me—Nugent Leathwood," she replied. "But never mind about that; I'll fight my own battles, and I'll fight them my own way." In a curious, half-ashamed fashion, this passionate creature dropped an arm around the shoulders of the girl who stood beside her. "Trust me," she said, "and I'll not play you or this baby false. Let me take her back to her room now; let me give her the rest she needs; and to-morrow night, at any time you like, she shall be ready for you. And so surely as I know her to be something better than I can ever hope to be, so surely will I bring her out of this place to you! I would get her out if twenty men barred the way and tried to hold me back!"

Wondering a little, yet strangely believing in her, they named a time and place for the following night; and the woman turned, still with her arm about the girl, and went towards the door.

"Come," she said, gently—"I am most unhappy myself; we may comfort each other. Come!" Looking back, when she got to the door, she said to Gilbert: "You need not fear that I shall betray you. I don't know whether Gilbert Rickerby is alive or dead; that is nothing to me. Only I—I was once like this girl; and a man dealt hardly with me. You don't look the sort to deal hardly with a woman—and so I'll help you."

Olive seemed to yield readily to that stronger arm about her; together they disappeared through the door; leaving the two men standing looking after her.

CHAPTER X.

Anthony Taggett Takes Off His Shoes

When a man has been cast upon a rough world, at a moment when he is totally unprepared to battle with it, he is the more grateful for any unexpected haven of rest which may be offered to him, even temporarily. So with Mr. Anthony Taggett, tragedian; he had been brought down as low as a man can well be brought, and, having been offered temporary shelter in Rickerby's Folly, was in no hurry to leave a place which, to him, at least, had nothing of terror about it.

Nugent Leathwood, for his part, had but one desire in his mind at that time; to keep everyone quiet and to prevent awkward questions being asked. This man—Anthony Taggett—and his wife, had come most strangely to the place, demanding to see Gilbert Rickerby; and although Gilbert Rickerby was, as far as the world was concerned, decently buried and done with, Leathwood had always a dreadful fear knocking at his heart that some man or woman might start up out of the past to show forth the fraud of the thing; that, of all the doors he had so carefully closed, one might be left sufficiently open to let in suspicion. Thus it was that he allowed Taggett and his wife to remain there for a few days, until—as Mr. Taggett expressed it—"they had time to grasp the situation and look about them."

Truth to tell, Anthony Taggett was in no hurry to grasp the situation, beyond seeing pretty clearly that he was comfortable where he was, and could go and come as he liked. For this feeling one must not be too ready to blame him; he had had a hard struggle with the world, and fought his way pretty cheerfully, all things considered; small wonder that he was glad to rest for a little time by the wayside, and contemplate, with that serenity which was alike a part of the man and his profession, the past—big with failures—and the future—equally big with hope. Perhaps she showed pretty clearly what his feelings were on that matter in a conversation with Mrs. Taggett on the morning of that eventful day which brought Mr. George Reeks to Rickerby's Folly.

"My love, we are, in a certain sense, in clover. We toil not, neither do we spin; and although there is nothing particularly glorious about our raiment"—he held out the skirts of his shabby coat and inspected them narrowly—"that is a matter which may be remedied in the near future. More than all, my dear Medora, this pause in our affairs gives us opportunity to think—to plan for ourselves, as we never yet had an opportunity for planning anything."

"Yes—that's all very well, Anthony," responded Mrs. Taggett, "but you must not forget that we are living in a strange man's house, and on charity."

"Charity, Medora!" Mr. Taggett appeared much pained at the employing of such a word in connection with himself. "There is no question of charity; the man who condescends to act for a space as my host, receives in return the benefit of such views of life and men and manners as I care to give him—"

"And which generally send him to sleep," interpolated Mrs. Taggett, with a laugh.

"That is his fault, and not mine," said Taggett, severely. "And you must remember, Medora, that in this world each man grasps for himself the chance that fickle Fortune offers him; this is our chance; we rest, after unmerited privations; we fill ourselves with the fruits of the earth—and no payment asked, which is a consideration—and we store our minds with those glorious situations which will, in the near future, cause a dull world to gasp and rub its eyes. In a word, Medora, the whole plan of my proposed drama is changed; the lift-boy is a thing of the past; the pantechicon goes by the board, and the first act opens in a double house, with a murder in the back drawing room, and the villain drinking himself to death from remorse in the conservatory, and dying in totures on a wicker chair. (Double set, my love, with passage down the center and practicable doors.")

"Well, I'm sure, Anthony, I hope something will be done with the drama one of these days. When I married you—five years ago—your first act started outside a village public house; then, during the honeymoon, you got inside the public house, with real beer, drawn by the barmaid; a little later, and we got up the village street, and started all over again, at the blacksmith's, with a real horse and a forge, and real sparks going up the chimney; incidental music to suggest the 'Harmonious Blacksmith.' Then we became aristocratic; and we opened with a dance at the old manor-house on the hill, with the squire cursing his son (real curses!) and the girl who loved him weeping in the firelight; snow effect outside. In fact, Anthony, we've gradually got everywhere with that drama of yours; and yet, if I may say so, we've never got anywhere at all."

"Medora, I have come to the conclusion that the gods have gifted me with too much imagination. If you laugh, I hear, or seem to hear immediately, an echoing laugh above us from the gallery; if you weep, I hear a sob from a portly lady in the pit in sheer sympathy. My own phrases are attuned to suit the better parts of the house. In a word, Medora, we are not real save when we are hungry and cold; for the rest we are but puppets, as this accursed profession has taught us to be. I believe I made love to you in attitudes, and rehearsed my speeches beforehand, and even took my cue from you, as I have done so often off the stage."

Mrs. Taggett sighed. "I'm afraid it's true," she said. "But still, Anthony, unreal as it is, I always feel I want to get back to it—want to smell the old, musty smell, and shiver in the cold draughts. I wish we could get out of this place and make a start somewhere."

"My love, I am already on the lookout for a company which requires a leading man—prepared to do anything from Hamlet to the Pantaloon; and whose wife is prepared to take even a subordinate part, so that she may be near him. In fact, my love, with the desire to keep my eyes open for anything that may be going, I was about to take a strool beyond the confines of the place which shelters us. And if I find a man who wants a drama, and wants it at once, he shall find me, for my part, so full of ideas, that I shall be prepared to suggest things which will make his fortune in something less than a month. Medora—farewell!"

Mr. Anthony Taggett put on his hat, very much on one side, and started out. He crossed the garden and opened the gate, and stepped forth into the street, running, not into the arms of an anxious manager, but into those of a tall and somewhat ungainly youth, clad, as to the outer garment, in a long Newmarket coat, reaching almost to his heels. This gentleman demanded, with some bitterness, where Mr. Taggett kept his eyes.

Without deigning to answer so ridiculous a question, Anthony Taggett frowned severely and went on his way, but stopped in a moment when he found that the ungainly one was coming hard after him. Mr. Taggett, anticipating an assault, faced about and put himself in an attitude of defense.

"Come on, sir!" he cried. "Come one—come all—and Britons strike home!" Here he lunged at the young man, who seemed much surprised at his behavior.

"'Ere, cheese 'it!" exclaimed the youth. "If you're a-doin' it to keep yerself warm, all right; on'y it ain't pretty. I wanted to 'ave a word with you."

Mr. Taggett immediately lowered his arms and became dignified; folding his arms, he nodded to the young man to proceed. "I was mistaken, sir," he said.

"I should think you was," replied the other. "But I seed you come out of that 'ouse, an' I thought maybe you could give me a little information about the folks inside of it. I'm a good deal interested in the people in that 'ouse."

"Indeed?" said Mr. Taggett, glancing at his companion, and mentally fitting him with a red wig and a smock frock and putting him on as the comic countryman. "In what way?"

"It's a bit cold, talking in the street—ain't it?" returned the youth, insinuatingly. "Suppose we was to step round the corner and see what they keep there, eh?"

"I perceive, sir," said Mr. Taggett, smiling genially, "that you are a young man with a fine eyes for the true inwardness of things. Curiously enough, this is about the hour at which I generally slake a thirst which has ere now proved expensive. Do not be alarmed, however," he added, as the face of the youth grew suddenly graver. "I have reduced it to a mere matter of pence—through sheer necessity."

Reassured, the gentleman of the Newmarket coat led the way into side street and into a small bar which opened conveniently at a corner. There, after imbibing part of a glass of hot spirits, the spirits of Mr. Taggett rose somewhat, and he became communicative. "I drink to you, sir," he said, as a sort of afterthought.

"Thanks. I spotted you w'en I saw you comin' out of that 'ouse yesterday, with an old gent with a sort of twist in 'is legs."

"Ah, my honest friend, Cornelius Veevers," broke in Mr. Taggett. "A strange creature—yet with his good points. In the matter of liquor, I find that his tastes agree with mine admirably. But he has queer notions in his head—very queer notions, my young friend."

"'Ow's that?" asked the other, indifferently.

Mr. Taggett leaned toward him and lowered his voice to a confidential whisper. "He believes, my dear sir, that that house, from which I have just come, is haunted—or part of it, at least. Think of that—for a sane man!"

The ungainly youth suddenly became deeply interested. "I've 'eard about that from a good many people," he said, nodding his head, sagely. "It's been put about that ghosts walk there—and lights are seen—and all that kind of thing; take my tip, it's a fake."

"Personally," said Mr. Taggett, slowly and thoughtfully, "I do not believe in such things. But perhaps there is a reason for my excellent friend, Veevers, taking a melancholy interest in such things. He told me yesterday, over a friendly glass (and in this very house, by the way,) that he had once lost a dear son. Probably the unhappy fate—whatever it may have been—of that youth has preyed upon his mind. One can never tell."

The gentleman in the Newmarket coat was listening eagerly. "You don't 'appen to know the name or age of that son, do you?" he asked. "I 'ave reason for askin'; I'm not sure that I don't know something about 'im."

"Really?" Mr. Taggett smiled delightedly. "This is very wonderful! I cannot say what the age of the son might have been; but have a feeling he probably ran away to sea, or something of the kind, in boyhood's hour, and never returned. You will find that is what usually happens. On the stage and in books he returns, after a space of years, and catches his aged father to his breast."

"I wish I knew something more about 'im," went on the other, speaking as if to himself.

"And—now I come to think of it, he informed me, in a burst of confidence, that he had not seen his son since early childhood; I believe he said that he had separated from the mother, and had returned to find the boy gone."

The youth emptied his glass of spirits at a gulp and put on his hat firmly. "I'm glad I 'ad this 'ere talk with you," he said. "I'm a-goin' back to the 'ouse with you now. I am that son!"

Anthony Taggett stared at him in amazement, and yet with a growing delight; already he saw himself in the very center of the floor, introducing this wandering son to the father who had hungered so long for him,—and striking an attitude expressive of as many emotions as possible, while they embraced. In his excitement he quite forgot to finish his liquor; instead, he literally dragged him from the place.

"Come!" he said; "there is not a moment to be lost! Think, my young friend, think how this old man, fast tottering toward the confines of the tomb, has hungered and yearned for his lost offspring! Do not keep him waiting a moment longer than can be avoided! Come!"

They hurried out together, and almost ran around the corner to the gate in the wall of Rickerby's Folly. The imperious ringing of Mr. Taggett at the bell brought out Cornelius Veevers, apparently in no pleasant humor; he stood holding the gate and looking up and down, with an ill-favored grin upon his face.

"Well, anyone'd think you wanted to raise the dead!" he snarled, savagely.

"Nay, friend Veevers, not to raise the dead, but to bring back to you one who was never dead at all—one who has wandered, far too long, an outcast from his own fireside—an alien from his father's love. Cornelius Veevers, behold your son!" Mr. Taggett stepped back and struck an attitude, with one hand thrust in the breast of his waistcoat.

Cornelius eyed the youth in the Newmarket up and down; seemed rather amused than otherwise by his appearance. "There's a good many people 'appening along these days," he observed. "But, if a man 'as an idea 'e belongs to me, I ain't the kind to say 'im nay, or to dispute things. I daresay the mother knows more about it than I do; you'd better 'ave a word with 'er."

He stepped back and made way for them to pass. As they went through the garden together they saw, at the very door of the house, old Jemima, standing in her usual listless attitude, looking out at them. "'Ere is Mrs. V.," said Cornelius; you'd better speak to 'er."

The gentleman in the Newmarket coat had probably not reckoned on finding so many relatives at once; he appeared to hang back a little. But Cornelius, imperiously beckoning to Jemima, the youth had nothing for it but to step forward, somewhat sheepishly, and hold out his hand.

"'Ow are you—mother?" he asked.

The old woman stopped and looked at him; then glanced at Cornelius. Cornelius came to the rescue—evidently enjoying the situation a little.

"It's that boy of yourn come back 'ome," he shouted; for the old lady was usually supposed to be somewhat deaf.

Jemima looked at Cornelius again, and then, without the faintest trace of emotion in her face, looked at the long, ungainly figure before her.

"Ah! 'e's a growin' lad, ain't 'e?" she said; and, without another word, turned into the house and disappeared, leaving the three men looking helplessly at each other.

"'Tis but her manner—a desire to hide the love she feels for you," said Mr. Taggett.

"She does it pretty well," retorted the youth, in an aggrieved tone, and with a resentful glance in the direction the old woman had taken. Under his breath he muttered: "Never mind; you've done what you wanted to do, Mr. 'Ubburd. Now keep your eyes open."

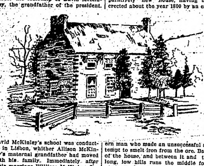
Home of Mrs. Nancy McKinley

Clustered about the early life of President McKinley are the recollections of the hard and at times trying life of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. William McKinley, Sr., who were joined in marriage in the city of New Lisbon (now Lisbon), Columbia county, Ohio. President McKinley's mother was Nancy Allison before her marriage to William McKinley, Sr. Her father was a hard-working farmer of good reputation, who moved to Center township, Columbiana county, from Greene county, Pennsylvania. Mr. McKinley's father and mother were schoolmates under the tutorship of David McKinley, the grandfather of the president.



David McKinley's school was conducted in Lisbon, whither Allison McKinley's maternal grandfather had moved with his family. Immediately after their marriage William McKinley, Sr., and his bride moved to the old stone house shown in the accompanying illustration.

Great deposits of kidney ore were found along the middle fork of Little Beaver Creek, which runs through Lisbon, and the entire length of Columbiana county into the Ohio river. Here was a great chance, so McKinley's father thought, to start a profitable iron furnace for the converting of the iron kidney ore into pig iron, to be sold in those days at high prices to the iron manufacturers, who at that time were importing large quantities from Europe.

The marriage of Nancy Allison and William McKinley took place, in the house where Gen. Vallandingham afterward resided, on the main street in Lisbon, where the Rev. A. G. Richardson then lived. The home to which President McKinley's father took his bride is now a landmark in southeastern Ohio, but, then it was a comparatively new house, having been erected about the year 1800 by an eastern man who made an unsuccessful attempt to smelt iron from the ore. Back of the house, and between it and the long, low hills runs the middle fork of the Beaver river, and alongside the river are the remains of the old sandy and beaver canal. It was believed by the inhabitants of that place that the canal was going to revolutionize the trade of the country, which was then considered on the border of the civilization of the east. But the canal, owing to the soil, would not hold water, and after the bottom of the first boat was dragged out in a trip from the Ohio river, a distance of thirty miles, the canal was abandoned, and an industry which promised great returns in the neighborhood was killed. After improving the old furnace and practically rebuilding it, William McKinley, Sr., made the effort of his life, but it did not pay, and the next move of the couple was out of the county into an adjoining one, where, at Niles, the president was born.

The famous old house stands today, occupied by an eccentric old man, named N. Broughten, who at the advanced age of 85 years shaves himself and walks a mile and a half into Lisbon daily.

The structure is built of rock-faced buff stones, contains four large, square rooms and a wide hall on the first floor, and the same number of apartments above. The upstairs rooms are rather low-ceiled, but withal the house is comfortable, having broad fireplaces in each room, which are used by the Broughtens today for heating. In the kitchen is a mammoth fireplace, six feet four inches high and about eight feet wide. It is so capacious that a large-sized man can walk in without removing his hat. The identical iron crane and kettle chain, large and heavy enough to swing an ox, used by President McKinley's mother, are still fixtures in the old house. The place gives evidence of having been in an early day quite a pretentious abode. The walls are now covered with cheap, but clean wall paper, which gives the room an inviting appearance.

In this old place, says the Philadelphia Record, President McKinley's mother first stepped as a bride, and a few years ago a number of old settlers living in and about Lisbon gathered there and told how they knew the president's mother, before he was born, and how they had often been guests at the hospitable home of William McKinley, Sr. In this place several of the McKinley children were born. The house to-day is a Mecca for tourists of eastern Ohio.

PREHISTORIC MONSTER THAT WAS AMERICAN

A skeleton of the Brontosaurus, the largest animal that ever lived, has been obtained by the American Museum of Natural History of New York.

The skeleton is ages old, 10,000,000 years, according to some geologists, for the Brontosaurus lived in the Cretaceus period, when reptiles ruled the earth, long before man and mammals made their appearance or the earth assumed its present external form.

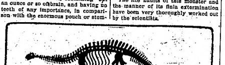
The Brontosaurus was a gigantic lizard seventy feet long. His name is formed from two Greek words meaning "thunder lizard." This name has been given because some scientists believe that the animal made a noise like thunder when he walked—not an unreasonable supposition.

It is gratifying to know that the Brontosaurus is an American. He and his friends lived in and about a great tropical lake where Wyoming and adjacent states now are. Thus the American reputation for big things goes on growing.

Extraordinary interest is attached to this find from the fact that it is the largest and most nearly complete skeleton so far found of this creature. Heretofore only fragmentary parts have been brought to light. Therefore it is considered one of the most valuable contributions to the knowledge of the primeval world that is in existence.

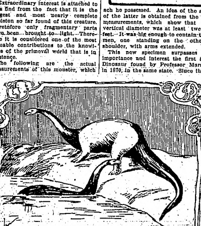
The following are the actual measurements of this monster, which have been worked out by the discoverers from the size and length of the bones. In life the animal stood twenty feet high, which is twice the height of an elephant; the length of his body was seventy feet, and he weighed thirty tons. The ribs are six feet long and one-half foot wide, and when he rose on his hind legs he was up in the air a distance equal to the fourth story of the average big apartment house. The immense hip bones of the Brontosaurus reaches nearly up to the neck of a man, while his footprints would have covered a yard square.

One of the puzzling features to scientists about the animal is his extraordinarily small head, containing but an ounce or so of brain, and having no teeth of any importance, in comparison with the enormous pouch or stomach he possessed. An idea of the size of the latter is obtained from the rib measurements, which show that its vertical diameter was at least twelve feet. It was big enough to contain two men, one standing on the other's shoulder, with arms extended.



This new specimen surpasses in importance and interest the first big Dinosaur found by Professor Marsh, in 1870, in the same state. Since then the principal fossil area of our continent has been located in the great Rocky Mountain basin. Systematic search by many scientific institutions has brought to view numbers of strange monsters new to science and to the eye of man. The American Museum has for several years past had a staff of trained investigators in the field hunting for specimens. Another notable recent find was that of the little three-toed horse, the ancestor of the modern animal. The mighty Brontosaurus, however, eclipses all previous discoveries, and is arousing universal interest among the general public and scientific students.

The life habits of this monster and the manner of its finla extermination have been very thoroughly worked out by the scientists.



Ages back, long before man or the warm-blooded animals existed, this uncouth beast roamed in and around the borders of the great tropical lake now covered by New Mexico, California, Wyoming, Montana and the Dakotas.

In the bed of the lake he sank and was buried deep away from the destructive work of the elements and the land flesh-eating animals. Dame Nature by piling on top of him successive layers of sediment thoroughly protected the monster for these millions of years, until erosion and the pick of the scientist have brought forth the skeleton from its rocky tomb.

The great lake basin slowly filled up with sediment, but remained a lake so long that the deposits formed in it during the Eocene period reached a vertical thickness of more than a mile. At present the basin, changed to rock, is six to eight thousand feet above ocean level.

The brontosaurus was a slowly moving reptile, as is indicated by the very small head and brain, and was wholly without armor, having no offensive weapons of any kind. His legs were eight to ten feet in length and were strong and massive. He had a long and powerful tail, and while he was an aquatic monster, it is certain that on land at times he assumed an erect position. The physical conditions were about the same as exist today in tropical America. A moist and warm climate was the kind that suited the brontosaurus. It appears that he frequently took to the land in search of food, but a water life afforded this comparatively helpless creature the greatest protection from the other large flesh-eating animals who lived on land at the same time.

At the Pecks.

Thomas B. Reed's Story.

A client recently asked Thomas B. Reed whether a jury could be relied upon to pronounce accurately as to the intentions of a man accused of crime. Said Mr. Reed:

"When I was a young man studying law, I was one day asked to give an illustration from Blackstone on that very point. I quoted the well known incident wherein the law, which prohibited the shedding of blood on the streets of London would not apply to the act of a surgeon bleeding a man who had a fit.

"The reply was satisfactory to the questioner, but a fellow student, celebrated for keen, intelligent exceptions, put in his oar at once.

"'The surgeon would be guiltless,' he admitted; 'but how about the fellow with the fit?'"—New York Times.

A Grateful Man.

Cox, Wis., Jan. 6.—With Kidney disease so bad, that he could hardly walk across the room for pain, Frank M. Russell of this place was a man greatly to be pitied.

Pinkham's Vegetable Compound by several of our Mormon women who had been cured through its use. I began its systematic use and improved gradually in health, and after the use of six bottles my health was completely restored, and for over two years I have had neither ache or pain. You have a truly wonderful remedy for women. Very sincerely yours, MRS. HULDA JAKEMAN, Salt Lake City, Utah." —$5000 forfeit if above testimonial is not genuine.

Just as surely as Mrs. Jakeman was cured just so surely will Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound cure every woman suffering from any form of female ills.

CAPSICUM VASELINE
(PUT UP IN COLLAPSIBLE TUBES)
A substitute for and superior to mustard or any other plaster, and will not blister the most delicate skin. The pain-allaying and curative qualities of this article are wonderful. It will stop the toothache at once, and relieve headache and sciatica. We recommend it as the best and safest external counter-irritant known, also as an external remedy for pains in the chest and stomach and all rheumatic, neuralgic and gouty complaints. A trial will prove what we claim for it, and it will be found to be invaluable in the household. Many people say "it is the best of all of your preparations." Price 15 cents, at all druggists or other dealers, or by sending this amount to us in postage stamps we will send you a tube by mail. No article should be accepted by the public unless the same carries our label, as otherwise it is not genuine. CHESEBROUGH MFG. CO.,

The Distinctive Value

of Syrup of Figs is due to its pleasant form and perfect freedom from every objectionable quality or substance and to the fact that it acts gently and truly as a laxative, without in any way disturbing the natural functions. The requisite knowledge of what a laxative should be and of the best means for its production enable the California Fig Syrup Co. to supply the general demand for a laxative, simple and wholesome in its nature and truly beneficial in its effects; a laxative which acts pleasantly and leaves the internal organs in a naturally healthy condition and which does not weaken them.

To assist nature, when nature needs assistance, it is all important that the medicinal agents used should be of the best quality and of known value and Syrup of Figs possesses this great advantage over all other remedies, that it does not weaken the organs on which it acts and therefore it promotes a healthful condition of the bowels and assists one in forming regular habits. Among its many excellent qualities may be mentioned its perfect safety, in all cases requiring a laxative, even for the babe, or its mother, the maiden, or the wife, the invalid, or the robust man.

Syrup of Figs is well known to be a combination of the laxative principles of plants, which act most beneficially, with pleasant aromatic liquids and the juice of figs, agreeable and refreshing to the taste and acceptable to the system, when its gentle cleansing is desired. The quality of Syrup of Figs is due not only to the excellence of the combination, but also to the original method of manufacture which ensures perfect purity and uniformity of product and it is therefore all important, in buying, in order to get its beneficial effects, to note the full name of the Company—California Fig Syrup Co.—printed on the front of every package.

THE THIEF RIVER FALLS NEWS.

VOL. XIX. THIEF RIVER FALLS, MINN., THURSDAY, JANUARY 16, 1902. NUMBER 2

BIG THING FOR THIEF RIVER.

Fosston Woolen Mill to Remove Here.

DECISION MADE YESTERDAY.

Plant Will Be Doubled in Size and Employ Over Sixty Hands.---Thief River Falls Is in Luck.

The Fosston Woolen Mills plant is to be doubled in size and removed from Fosston to Thief River Falls.

Albert Bergh, Lewis Lohn, L. W. Larson and S. S. Stadsvold, the four principal stockholders of of this company, were in the city Monday and made a proposition to remove the mills here providing the citizens of Thief River Falls would subscribe for enough shares of stock to double the size and capacity of the present mill. A meeting of the Commercial Club was held Tuesday evening to consider the matter and a committee of six, consisting of Mayor Kratka S. F. Staples, C. A. Nason, Louis Hanson, James Meehan, Jr., and John Morgan was appointed to solicit subscriptions for stock. This committee was at work yesterday and, while the exact full amount was not subscribed, enough have signified a willingness to take additional stock to guarantee that the full amount will be raised while several prominent business men of the town are out of the city and will be sure to take stock upon their return.

Albert Bergh, the manager of the Fosston Woolen Mills, was here yesterday and he stated to the News that the plant would be removed here as early as convenient, which will be sometime in August. The mill will be located in a building south of Kretzschmar's dam on what is known as the island. It will be a three story building, 60x100 feet, with basement. A large warehouse will also be built. The company will employ about sixty hands for fifty weeks of the year, and that it will be a good thing for Thief River Falls goes without saying. Crookston and Red Lake Falls business men have been after the plant ever since it decided to remove away from Fosston, and the fact that Thief River Falls was able to secure it was due to our natural advantages and the enterprise of our business men.

IMPROVEMENTS

To Be Made in the Lumber Company's Mill.

Supt. J. J. Crowe returned to this city last week from the Red Lake, where he had been looking after the interests of the Thief River Falls Lumber company for a month. He reports that everything is progressing in a satisfactory manner up river.

Mr. Crowe will remain here during the remaining part of the winter superintending the making of a number of improvements and alterations in the company's mill. Among other improvements a new band mill and a new boiler will be put in. Everything will be placed in ship shape, so that when the ice goes out in the spring, sawing can be commenced. The company has several million feet of pine in the booms here, enough to last until some of this winter's cut can be floated down.

An ad writer for a Minneapolis cold storage company crowded a sermon into a sentence when he penned this headline: "Don't keep cows; make them keep you." If every farmer in the bread and butter state would figure to live up to the spirit of that saying the dairy interests of the state would expand rapidly. It has about the same relation to dairying as the aphorism, "We don't keep goods, we sell them," does to the mercantile business. The cow that isn't making her owner a nice profit were far better dead.—Morris Tribune.

CENTRAL MERCANTILE COMPANY

SYSTEM WRONG.

Congressman Eddy Has Practical Views.

Congressman Frank Eddy has some ideas about dealing with the red man. He has come to the conclusion that the present system is fundamentally wrong. Mr. Eddy says.

I do not know whether it is too late to change or not, but I am inclined to think a change might still be made to advantage. Up to this time the whole idea of the government seems to have been to drive the Indians together on reservations which were kept separate from the rest of the world. For educational purposes, certain Indians are taken from these aggregations at times and put into schools. They are taught civilization; then they are taken back and put with their fellow tribesmen, as if with the idea that they would leaven the whole lump and uplift their people. Instead of this happening, they themselves go back and revert to barbarism. So the race as a whole has remained uncivilized, and the only solution of the Indian problem seems to be in extinction.

Now, this is all wrong. It is clearly demonstrated that the Indian may be civilized. When he is brought in contact with civilization he contracts it and becomes a decent, industrious, educated citizen. Therefore he should be brought and kept in contact with civilization. He should not be sequestered. Instead of setting aside reservations from which the white man is excluded, as if by a high, impassable wall, the Indian should be forced to dwell alongside of whites.

If I had my way, Indian reservations would be divided into alternate sections; every other section would be opened to settlement for homesteaders. Thus the Indian would be brought into close and constant touch with civilization. He would see how things are done. He would be employed on the farms and in the mines and factories of the settlers, and would learn to go and do likewise on his land. The Indian will work; but at present he will not work continuously. He will make a stake and then go off and spend it. He is not regarded as the equal of white labor; but the Indian is largely the creature of his environment. If supported he will not work and will not try to learn. Neither can he learn in a minute to overcome all the faults of his ancestry and breeding; but when brought into a proper environment he is capable of making a good citizen, and it is the fault of the government if he is not one.

SOME FAWNS

From Moose Dung's Reservation Initiated.

There was trouble in Crookston last night, according to all reports and some prominent Thief River Falls citizens were handled decidedly rough. The occasion was the initiation of Mayor Kratka, H. G. Dobner and W. C. Smiley, of this city, and Julius Pleth and Emil Brink, of St. Hilaire into the Elks lodge. S. F. Staples and James Meehan went down to assist their Crookston brothers.

Again' It.

As usual, Red Lake Falls is against anything that does not originate in that place. The following dispatch to the Minneapolis Journal from that town explains itself.

Red Lake Falls, Minn., Jan. 13. —The Board of Trade held a meeting to discuss the question of putting in a lock and dam at the outlet of Red Lake a project which is being vigorously pushed in the hope of forwarding a congressional appropriation. Red Lake Falls is opposed to the measure, and the meeting unanimously passed resolutions against it

A Lengthy Contest.

One of the longest land contest cases in the history of the U. S. land office here was closed Saturday night. It was that of Joseph Josephson vs. John A. Bjerkland, involving a quarter section near Ware, Marshall county. It occupied the entire week and the report contains 158 type written pages, besides quite a lengthy deposition which is not in yet. No decision has been made by the local land office.—Crookston Times.

Blooded Bulls.

BAD CHECK

Passed on H. I. Simonson & Co. yesterday.

A young man about 20 years of age purchased goods of H. I. Simonson & Co., yesterday as follows: One pair of shoes, $3.50; two pair of hose, $1.00; two shirts, $1.50; one pair of pants, $1.75; two suits of under wear, $1.80; one pair of overshoes, $1.25, and one coat, $2. In payment he wrote out a check on the First National bank for the sum, signing it Walter Decker. At the bank it was found that no such person had an account there, and a warrant was at once issued for the arrest of Decker.

INDIAN TIMBER

Two Bills By Representative Eddy.

Representative Eddy has presented his bill providing for the cutting and sale of the pine on the ceded Indian reservations in Minnesota. It is similar to the Morris bill, except in that provision relating to the construction of mills on the reservation. Mr. Morris leaves it discretionary with the secretary of the interior whether operators all be required to erect mills for manufacturing lumber on Indian lands. The Eddy bill leaves it discretionary with the purchasers in the matter of mill construction. Mr. Eddy expreses the opinion that if the operators have the right to elect whether they operate mills on the reservations or not, that it will increase the value of the timber at least 20 per cent. He regards this feature of his bill as important, and will insist that it shall be incorporated in any legislation that is passed.

Another bill, which Mr. Eddy will introduce, provides for the cutting of timber on the diminished Red Lake and White Earth reservations. It limits the cut at White Earth to ten million feet at Red Lake. It fixes the minimum price at $5 per thousand feet, board measure. This bill failed of passage in the last congress.

Has Good Serv'ce.

While on a recent visit at Thief River Falls a Journal representative was impressed with the excellent character of its electric light and also its telephone service. Both of these utilities are still in their infancy but have reached a commendable degree of perfection. Manager Fant, who is also proprietor of the telephone system, now has 80 subscribers, and is extending his lines and increasing the number of patrons as fast as possible. He is also planning to build a long distance line to Roseau in the spring. The rate charged for local service is $2.00 per month for business houses and $1.50 for residences. A crew of men are now engaged in setting poles and it will soon be possible even for those living in the most remote parts of the village to secure telephone service.—Crookston Journal.

The address issued by the Populist state committee at Topeka, Kansas, the other day, clearly indicates that the politicians of that party have decided to abandon their organization and go into the Democratic camp. While the committee, for the sake of appearances has called a delegate convention for Febuary 21 to finally determine this question there is no mistaking the fact that the politicians have prejudged the situation with a full decision to join the Democratic cause. Indeed, the address is an argument to show there is nothing else for Kansas Populism to do.

ANARCHY FEARED

UPRISING IN VENEZUELA MUCH MORE SERIOUS THAN WAS THOUGHT.

STRONG NAVAL FORCE SENT OUT

NORTH ATLANTIC SQUADRON ORDERED HELD IN READINESS FOR A MOVE.

CO-OPERATE WITH OTHER POWERS

UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT IS PREPARED FOR TROUBLE.

Washington, Jan. 12. — The government has information that the uprising in Venezuela against the rule of President Castro is much more serious than has been generally understood, and in view of the possible danger of an outbreak of disorder in Caracas and La Guayra, where American interests are considerable, orders have been or will be sent to Rear Admiral Higginson, commander-in-chief of the North Atlantic naval station, who is at Culebra island, near Porto Rico, with his squadron, to prepare for a movement to La Guayra. The utmost reticence is shown by officials here, but enough is known to justify the assertion that the government fears that a condition of anarchy is imminent in the Venezuelan capital, the result of marked demonstrations against Castro. The orders to Admiral Higginson are intended as precautionary with a view to meeting any condition that may arise.

It is evident that the government contemplates the contingency of being obliged to land armed forces at La Guayra, and it is desired to have an American officer on the spot of sufficient rank to be senior to the highest ranking officer of any other navy who may also find it expedient

To Land His Forces.

French, German and English ships are being kept in the vicinity of the Venezuelan coast, and it is probable that should the necessity arise a joint force from these and the American ships will be sent ashore. As the officer of highest rank Admiral Higginson would be in command.

The government has suspected for some time that the Venezuelan insurrection had been well planned and that results might be expected from it. This suspicion has now been confirmed by specific advices. Within the past week extra detachments of marines have been shipped from Norfolk and elsewhere to the North Atlantic squadron with a view to having on hand a large landing party.

These measures of the government have no bearing on the proposed operations of Germany to bring Venezuela to terms or to any desire to participate in the internal troubles with which Castro is beset. They are intended solely to prevent the occurrence of any riotous outbreak in Caracas and La Guayra, a condition that may be expected if Castro is overthrown.

OVATION FOR SCHLEY.

Naval Hero Is Warmly Greeted at Savannah.

Savannah, Ga., Jan. 12.—Rear Admiral W. S. Schley, accompanied by his wife, arrived in this city yesterday afternoon. The depot was thronged with people who waited patiently to greet him. As he alighted the cheering was deafening. Mayor Myers and a delegation of aldermen extended the admiral a cordial official welcome and asked his consent for a formal reception this afternoon at the city hall. The admiral agreed. In the evening Admiral and Mrs. Schley occupied a box at the theater, where Mme. Lillian Nordica sang. As the audience recognized him there was enthusiastic cheering of such volume and persistence as temporarily to delay the performance. After an encore, Mme. Nordica crossed to the box and shook hands with Admiral Schley, while the audience stood and cheered. Upon the conclusion of the evening's performance apparently the whole audience waited at the door and cheered the admiral as he entered his carriage and drove away.

INTERSTATE COMMISSION.

Thinks Compulsory Competition Is Not Advantageous.

Washington, Jan. 6.—Martin A. Knapp, chairman of the interstate commerce commission, in referring to the Chicago meeting of that body, says:

"It is my personal conviction that the effect of consolidation is to lower rates and to make conditions more favorable for the shipper. Compulsory competition is not to the advantage of shippers in general. It is sure to result in injustice and inequalities in rates. The shipper who is best able to pay high rates gets low ones, and the little man pays high rates. I believe the history of ten years' attempts to enforce competition between railroads where such competition is not natural will prove that consolidation will result in economy in carriage and advantage to the shipper. Consolidation and proper supervision is the proper thing for shippers."

ELOPING COUPLE JAILED.

South Dakotans Alleged to Have Deserted Their Own.

Sioux Falls, S. D., Jan. 11. — Philip Knedel and Sophia Serr, an eloping couple from Hutchinson county, who were recently arrested at Sutton, Neb., and brought back to South Dakota, at their preliminary hearing waived examination and were held for appearance at the next term of circuit court in Hutchinson county. Their bonds were fixed at $1,000 each, but they were unable to furnish them and have been lodged in jail. Knedel, it is charged, deserted a wife and four children, while the woman with whom he eloped is said to have deserted her husband.

CONGRESS

RESUME OF THE WEEK'S PROCEEDINGS.

In the House.

Washington, Jan. 9.—The census but the Nicaragua canal bill in the house was opened in lively fashion yesterday by Mr. Hepburn, chairman of the interstate and foreign commerce commission, which reported the bill. For two hours he held the floor, replying to a volley of questions concerning the recent offer of the Panama Canal company to sell its property and franchises to the United States for $40,000,000.

The interest in the debate centered almost entirely in this new phase of the subject. Mr. Hepburn maintained that the alleged new offer of the Panama company was part of the plan of delay. All his utterances along that line were liberally applauded. He pointed out what he claimed was the suspicious circumstance that the Panama company held out for $109,000,000 until it was decided before the holiday recess to consider the Nicaragua bill, and then suddenly dropped the price to $40,000,000. Mr. Morris of Minnesota gave notice that at the proper time he would offer an amendment to authorize the president, if he could procure the property for $40,000,000, if concessions could be procured from Colombia and if the Walker commission so recommended, to purchase and proceed to complete the Panama canal. The other speakers were Messrs. Davis of Florida, Richardson of Alabama, Mann of Illinois and Adams of Pennsylvania.

In the Senate.

The first notes of the contest between the Nicaragua and Panama routes for the isthmian canal were heard in the senate yesterday. Mr. Morgan offered and secured the adoption of a resolution which indicated his purpose to have the committee on interoceanic canals inquire into the relations alleged to exist between the trancontinental railroad companies of the United States and Canada and the Panama Canal company. In explanation of the resolution Mr. Morgan declared that the alleged relations were a "wicked monopoly" which already had cost the people of the Pacific coast millions of dollars. The resolutions involve the control by the Panama Canal company of the Panama Railroad company, and the agreement existing between certain railroads of the United States and the Pacific Mail Steamship company.

In the House.

Washington, Jan. 9. — The debate on the Nicaraguan canal bill in the house yesterday developed sentiment in favor of giving consideration to the recent offer of the Panama company to sell its franchises and property for $40,000,000, this sentiment taking the form of advocating the Morris amendment to empower the president to select the latter route if the canal commission, upon considering the company's offer, recommends it and the required concessions can be obtained from Colombia. Of sixteen members who spoke yesterday nine favored the Morris amendment. It was agreed that general debate should close to-day at 2 o'clock, after which the bill will be open to amendment under the five-minute rule. The final vote probably will be taken to-day.

In the Senate.

During consideration by the senate of private pension legislation some important statements were made by Mr. Gallinger, chairman of the committee on pensions, in respect to regulations adopted by the committee to govern it in consideration of private pension bills. He announced that none but absolutely meritorious cases would be presented to the senate for its consideration, and that the closest scrutiny would be given by the committee to every bill introduced. He said that no pension exceeding $50 a month would be recommended by the committee for the widow of a general officer, and that pensions for the widows of other officers would be scaled down proportionately.

In the House.

Washington, Jan. 10.—The Hepburn Nicaragua canal bill passed the house late yesterday afternoon by practically a unanimous vote. Only two members out of 310 voted against it. Messrs. Fletcher (Rep., Minn.) and Lassiter (Dem., Va.) were the two voting in the negative. The opposition to committing the government to the Nicaraguan route attempted to secure amendments to lodge with the president the discretionary power to purchase and complete the Panama canal, if it could be purchased for $40,000,000. The test came on the first vote when the advocates of an alternative route polled 102 against 170 votes. At each succeeding vote their strength dwindled until Mr. Cannon of Illinois, under whose leadership the fight was made, was unable to get the ayes and noes on a motion to recommit. All other amendments failed and the bill passed exactly as it came from the committee. None of the votes except that on final passage of the bill was a record vote.

The debate which preceded the taking of the final vote was made memorable by a clash between Mr. Hepburn, the author of the bill, and Mr. Cannon, chairman of the appropriations committee. On several previous occasions they have measured swords over canal legislation. Two years ago a similar bill was passed by a vote of 224 to 36. The bill as passed yesterday authorizes the president to secure from the States of Costa Rica and Nicaragua in behalf of the United States, control of such a portion of the territory belonging to said states as may be desirable and necessary in which to excavate, construct and prospect a canal suitable to the wants of modern navigation and commerce, and appropriate such a sum as may be necessary to secure the control of said territory.

Section 2 authorizes the president, after securing control of the needed territory, to direct the secretary of war to construct such canal from the Caribbean sea, at a point near Greytown, in Nicaragua, by way of Lake Nicaragua, to a point on the Pacific ocean near Brito, and also to construct proper harbors at the terminal of said canal and to make necessary provisions for the defense of the canal and harbors.

Sections 3 and 4 authorize the president to make such surveys as may be necessary and to employ such persons in constructing the canal as may to him seem wise, and directs that in the construction of the canal the River San Juan and Lake Nicaragua shall be used as far as they are available.

Section 5 authorizes the president to guarantee to the States of Costa Rica and Nicaragua the use of the canal and harbors, upon terms to be agreed upon, for all vessels owned by said states and by citizens thereof.

The last section makes a present appropriation of $10,000,000 to carry on this work and authorizes the secretary of war to enter into proper contracts for material and work as may be deemed necessary therefor, such work and material to be paid for as appropriations may be made from time to time. The section fixes the aggregate cost at $180,000,000, to be drawn from the treasury on warrants of the president.

In the Senate.

The open session of the senate yesterday was devoted to routine business. After an executive session the senate at 1:50 adjourned until Monday.

CARNEGIE'S GREAT GIFT.

Board of Trustees Named for the Carnegie Institution.

Washington, Jan. 11. — Official announcement was made yesterday of the board of trustees of the Carnegie Institution, which has been incorporated here under the $10,000,000 gift of Andrew Carnegie. The only indication as to the form of the gift is that it will be in "5 per cent bonds." This is referred to in a single sentence as follows:

"It is the purpose of Mr. Carnegie to transfer ten million dollars in 5 per cent bonds to the board of trustees for the purposes above mentioned."

The announcement was made in the form of a statement given out by Dr. Charles D. Walcott, secretary of the incorporators, in accordance with the expressed wish of Mr. Carnegie. The statement says:

"In the development of his plans Mr. Carnegie has consulted with a number of gentlemen in different parts of the country, including the heads of universities and other scientific institutions, and particularly with Hon. Abram S. Hewitt, Dr. Daniel C. Gilman, Dr. John S. Billings, Dr. Charles D. Walcott and Hon. Carroll D. Wright.

FINANCIAL MEASURE.

First Bill of Importance Is Reported to the House.

Washington, Jan. 11.—The first financial measure of importance to be reported to the house is that agreed upon yesterday by the committee on coinage, weights and measures, providing for the maintenance of the legal tender silver dollar at a parity with gold and for the increase of the subsidiary silver coinage. The measure was introduced by Representative Hill of Connecticut. It was considered last year in congress and attracted widespread attention among bankers and financial authorities. It authorizes the coinage of subsidiary silver coin without regard to limit and as public necessity may require.

REDS ARE UNRULY

TROOPS CALLED FOR BY THE LAME DEER INDIAN AGENCY IN MONTANA.

OUTBREAK MAY HAVE OCCURRED

INDIAN REFUSES TO OBEY A SUMMONS ISSUED BY THE AGENT.

INDIAN POSSE SENT TO GET HIM

THEIR APPEARANCE GREETED BY A VOLLEY IN WHICH ONE IS KILLED.

Miles City, Mont., Jan. 11. — Fort Keogh yesterday received a telegram from Forsyth asking that soldiers be immediately dispatched to the Lame Deer Indian agency. Word has arrived from the agency that trouble was brewing and that an outbreak of the Cheyennes was imminent if it had not already occurred. Lieut. Chapman of the post stated that the request for troops had been communicated to department headquarters and that soldiers were making preparations for immediate departure on the receipt of orders.

F. Beatty, a prominent citizen of Ashland, near the Lame Deer agency, said that the disturbance originated by an Indian named White being sent for by the agent in charge. The Indian refused to obey the summons and an Indian posse was dispatched to bring him in. White opened fire upon the appearance of the posse, killing one of the Indian policemen. The warring Indian then turned upon his own wife and daughter, killing them both and finally shot himself, dying instantly.

GEN. FUNSTON ARRIVES.

Doughty Little Warrior Greatly Improved in Health.

San Francisco, Jan. 11. — Brig. Gen. Frederick Funston arrived here last night from Manila on the transport Warren. Gen. Funston comes home on sick leave. While his condition has greatly improved since leaving Manila, he has not yet entirely recovered. On arrival here Gen. Funston immediately went to Oakland to greet his family. He stated that he would remain here about two weeks and then visit his old home and friends in Kansas for a few days, after which he would go to Washington on important business, the nature of which he would not divulge.

ENTERS IT IN EARNEST.

Marconi Will Have a Wireless System on Practical Scale.

Ottawa, Ont., Jan. 11.—Sig. Marconi left for New York yesterday afternoon. The plans for his new station at Glace Bay, Cape Breton, will be prepared at once, and his expectation is that the station will be ready for communication across the Atlantic by the beginning of June. On his return to England, Mr. Marconi will have the electric power at his Cornwall station greatly increased so that by the time that the Cape Breton station is finished he will be ready to resume transatlantic tests of his wireless telegraphic system on a practical scale.

ANOTHER DR. HOLMES?

Chicago Man May Be the Murderer of a Few Wives.

Chicago, Jan. 11.—Will Louis Thoms, the man charged with the murder of Carrie Larson, prove to be another Dr. H. H. Holmes? This is the question that confronts the score of detectives who have been investigating his past. That he has had at least three or, perhaps, four wives they know. Two of these women are dead. Developments in the case lead the officers to the conclusion that they were murdered.

ANOTHER CAVE-IN.

Bodies of Buried Miners at Negaunee May Not Be Recovered.

Negaunee, Mich., Jan. 11. — Another large block of ground caved in at the Negaunee mine, going direct to the left and where the bodies of nine workingmen are entombed. The blacksmith shop, which stood on the bank a few feet from the opening, went down, and it is feared the dry house will also go. The drift is filling with water, and with the shaft in bad shape it may be weeks before the bodies are recovered.

A REAL PIONEER.

Sylvanus Johnson Located in Iowa in 1836—He Was 92 Years Old.

Iowa City, Iowa, Jan. 11.—Sylvanus Johnson, the man who built the first brick kiln and the first brick house in Johnson county, passed away at his home in East Lucas township yesterday. He was one of the oldest residents of the county, being ninety-two years of age. He came to the state in 1836, and has since been closely identified with Iowa City's growth and prosperity.

MINER KILLED.

Explosion at Arcadian Mine in Northern Michigan.

Calumet, Mich., Jan. 11.—Isaac Saranis was killed and Andrew Lara seriously injured by an explosion at the Arcadian mine, eight miles south of here. The miners encountered an undischarged blast while drilling. Saranis leaves a wife and a large family of children.

"DR." DOWIE IS SUED.

Alienation of a Woman's Affections Is Alleged.

Chicago, Jan. 11.—Benjamin F. Williams, formerly a school teacher in Mansfield, Ohio, and a former follower of "Dr." Dowie, yesterday began suit in the circuit court of Cook county for damages in the sum of $50,000 against "Dr." Dowie and Elders John C. Speicher and Charles B. Frockler of the Christian Catholic Church of America for alleged conspiracy to alienate his wife's affections. Williams alleged that by the teachings of Dowie and his followers Edith R. Williams was influenced to treat him as a stranger. He avers that the cause of this influence was that he did not contribute tithes to Dowie's numerous business enterprises.

VIOLET RAY FOR CANCER.

The New Treatment Being Tried With Promising Results.

New York, Jan. 11.—As a last resort, John E. Richardson of Brooklyn, who has been a suffered from cancer for many years and whose life is despaired of, is submitting to a test of the newly discovered violet ray treatment. The physicians here informed him that his case was hopeless, and that he might die at any moment. He then determined to try the new treatment. A violet ray machine was installed in the house, and every fair day the rays are concentrated and projected down Mr. Richardson's throat. After several months of treatment it is declared that his condition is so much improved that hope is entertained for his recovery.

SOLD HIS VOTE.

Ex-Alderman Confesses to Having Accepted a Bribe.

Louisville, Ky., Jan. 11.— In the trial yesterday of J. M. McKnight, ex-president of the German National bank, whose funds he is charged with embezzling, ex-Ald. John W. Reeder testified that he signed an agreement to vote for McKnight for mayor for $1,000, $925 of which was paid to him, and $75 to Sterling B. Edmunds, who engineered the deal. McKnight was a candidate before the aldermen for mayor in 1896, when the office became vacant by the death of Mayor Tyler.

FORMER GOVERNOR FALLS LOW.

Franklin J. Moses, Once Governor of South Carolina, Sentenced for Theft in Boston.

Boston, Jan. 11.—Admitting that his picture was in the rogue's gallery, and that for a period of years he had been familiar with the "lowest depths of New York opium joints," yet pleading for mercy from the court, Franklin J. Moses, once governor of South Carolina, was sentenced here yesterday to four months' imprisonment for the larceny of an overcoat.

PREVENTING COLLISIONS.

Austrian Inventor Claims to Have a Good Railroad System.

New York, Jan. 11. — From Vienna comes the news that Herr Bartelmus, an Australian electrician, has invented a system for preventing railway accidents, says the London correspondent of the Tribune. The invention, it is said, makes it possible to prevent accidents arising from trains meeting one another or from one train running into the rear of another.

CHILEAN THREAT.

Compulsory Arbitration Not Tolerated in Any Form.

Mexico City, Jan. 11.—The memorandum of the Chileans threatening to withdraw from the Pan-American conference, whatever might be the form in which the plan of compulsory arbitration was presented, was delivered yesterday to Finance Minister Limantour, who has been carrying on the negotiations on behalf of the Mexican government, and to W. I. Buchanan of the United States delegation.

For North Dakota Men.

Fare Is Reduced.

Deadwood, S. D., Jan. 11.—A reduction has been made in the passenger rates by the railroads in the Black Hills from 5 cents to 4 cents a mile, becoming effective the first of the year.

HYPNOTIC MARVEL

UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO FRESHMAN POSSESSES WONDERFUL POWER.

GIVES CO-EDS THE HORRORS

MAKES SUBJECTS WALK TIGHT ROPES AND DO RIDICULOUS THINGS.

GETS EVEN WITH TORMENTERS

EXHIBITS HIS POWERS AFTER BEING INITIATED IN A FRATERNITY.

Chicago, Jan. 11. — Julian F. Brode, a freshman of the University of Chicago, credited with possessing an unusual degree of hypnotic power, caused a sensation among his fellow students to-day when he brought several of them under his influence and compelled them to walk a tight rope, make human bridges, and perform other and more humiliating acts.

For several hours Brode cast his spell over different students who submitted themselves to his experiments. His feats were the subject of much discussion. The "Co-eds" of the Midway school especially expressed themselves as horrified at the discovery that a man of such power was attending the university.

Brode was to-day initiated into the university chapter of the Phi Kappa Psi fraternity lodge, and it was in the privacy of the fraternity lodge that he

of hypnotism. Immediately following the exercises of initiation, one of the men who had heard of the young student's hypnotic power challenged Brode to demonstrate his ability to put him under a spell.

Smarting from the blows he had received shortly before, Brode accepted the challenge, and soon had one of his fellows rigid as a block of wood and bridging the distance between two chairs. It was said that before he finished Brode evened matters up for the humiliation attending his initiation.

The human bridge is one of Brode's most remarkable feats. Without apparent difficulty he obtained a rigidity of the body in his subject which permitted him to be stretched out with supports only beneath his ankles and neck. In former exhibitions of this feat Brode declares that he allowed three men to stand on the body of the person under such influence. Several other students were set to performing on a tight rope in a way that made those who looked on dizzy with fear.

His First Musical Effort.

Brode then ordered one subject, who never in his normal state had been able to sing a note, to give one of the current comic opera songs, and it was sung completely and correctly. Other students were ordered to make speeches or recite chapters from their text books. Still others were ordered to beg for coins while under the spell, and when released proceeded immediately to obey the order.

Julian Brode entered the university from Memphis, Tenn., last October. Last year he spent some time at Harvard university, and it was there that he learned the art of hypnotism. Brode simply looks his subject in the eyes while talking to him in a low tone. He makes no passes with the hands.

NO PENSION FOR MRS. M'KINLEY.

Congressmen Are Opposed to the Proposition.

Washington, Jan. 11.—There is a sentiment among the members of the house that the bill pensioning Mrs. McKinley should not be passed and while this sentiment has not gained sufficient ground to be taken as the sense of the house, it is strong enough to delay consideration of the bill. Motives of delicacy and respect for the late president prevent outspoken objections being made to the bill, but a number of the members who will probably vote for the bill if it comes before the house are of the opinion that its passage would be an undesirable precedent. They point out that no claim is made that Mrs. McKinley needs the money, having all the property necessary to support her in comfort, and they remember that in the case of Mrs. Garfield, the bill to pension her was made the vehicle to carry through pensions for other widows of former presidents. The only ground for the passage of the bill is a desire of expressing the sympathy of the house with Mrs. McKinley, and these members say that if congress appropriates the balance of the salary which Mr. McKinley would have received had he lived until March 4, 1902, for Mrs. McKinley's benefit, a sum approximating $80,000, it will have expressed its sympathy in a substantial form.

AFTER MORE DUCKS.

Ex-President Cleveland Plans for Another Hunting Trip.

New York, Jan. 11.—Former President Cleveland is so far recovered from the effects of his recent attack of pneumonia as to have arranged for a hunting trip in the South. He will leave his home at Princeton, N. J., Jan. 22, for an island off the coast of South Carolina, where with a party of friends, he will remain several days.

Fatal Family Quarrel.

Galesburg, Ill., Jan. 11. — Edward Cheney, formerly a prisoner in the state penitentiary, last night shot his wife and her sister, Mrs. Lettie Goshorn, both through the back and lungs. He then shot himself through the head, dying instantly. Both women are fatally hurt. The tragedy was the result of a family quarrel.

Done Away With.

Oklahoma City, Okla., Jan. 11.—W. T. Peoples, aged forty-five, one of the heaviest cotton buyers in this section, yesterday shot Eugene F. McLaughlin, aged thirty-seven, a clerk in a drug store, twice through the heart. Peoples refused to make a statement except to say that McLaughlin had ruined his life.

Texas Town Suffers.

Mount Vernon, Tex., Jan. 11.—Fire, which started yesterday afternoon, destroyed the Shields and the Hill hotels and six business houses. The total loss is estimated at $100,000.

Postal Increase.

Washington, Jan. 11.—Postal receipts for the Twin Cities for the month of December show big gains—Minneapolis, 20 per cent, and St. Paul about 16 per cent.

CONGRESS.

House Considers Bill for Permanent Census Bureau.

Washington, Jan. 11. — The house spent the day considering the Hopkins bill to create a permanent census bureau. While the general sentiment was in favor of a permanent bureau, there was strong opposition to the bill as drawn, on the ground that it was not well matured. There also was an overwhelming demand for a provision to place the present employes of the census bureau under the protection of the civil service law, and the bill was finally recommitted with instructions to report back a bill containing a plan for a detailed organization of a permanent census bureau, to include also a provision to place the present employes under the civil service. The fight to recommit was made under the leadership of Mr. Burkett of Nebraska, the new member of the appropriations committee. A bill was passed unanimously to give Mrs. McKinley the free mailing privilege during the remainder of her life. The house then adjourned until Monday.

DEFICIT IN FRANCE.

Large Decrease in the Revenue Returns for Last Year.

Paris, Jan. 12. — A decrease in the revenue returns is again shown by the figures of the last three months, which are 8,271,848 francs below the estimates, and 20,150,000 francs below the returns for the same period of 1900. The total deficit for 1901, compared with the estimates, is 11,000,000 francs. The falling off is attributed to the non-importation of wine in consequence of the exceptional crops of 1900 and 1901, to the rearrangement of the excise liquor duties and to the sugar bounty policy. The latter is responsible for 42,000,000 francs of the deficit.

COLD BLOODED MURDER.

Miner Deliberately Kills His Gang Boss.

Uniontown, Pa., Jan. 12. — A cold-blooded murder was committed at the new Sharon Steel company mines eight miles west of here last evening. Henry Grant almost instantly killed William Jenkins. Jenkins was shift boss on the gang sinking the shaft, and Grant had been in charge of the drilling machine. He proved unsuitable and was reduced to helper, while Jenkins put his brother in Grant's place. As the men quit work last evening Grant slipped up behind Jenkins, plunged a big knife into his body and ran, escaping in the confusion.

INCREASE IN POSTAL RECEIPTS.

Fifty Principal Postoffices Make a Good Showing.

Washington, Jan. 12.—A general increase of almost 15 per cent in the postal receipts at the fifty principal postoffices of the United States during December last is shown in an official statement issued yesterday, which compares the receipts with those of December, 1900. Chicago, with almost 23 per cent, reports the greatest proportionate advance, the total for last month being $783,994. New York advanced almost 14 per cent to $1,120,900. Jersey City, New Haven, Conn., and Dayton, Ohio, are the only cities reporting decreases.

HITCH AT PEKIN.

French Insistence on Chinese Compliance With Certain Demands.

Pekin, Jan. 12.—The French minister, M. Beau, refuses to present his credentials until China fulfills certain demands of the French government. The joint audience of the foreign and new Chinese ministers, which had been arranged, has been postponed because of M. Beau's action. His colleagues are discussing whether to support him or not. A repetition of the Turkish incident is considered possible.

BRIGANDS GIVING UP CAPTIVES.

Miss Stone and Her Companion to Be Set At Liberty.

London, Jan. 12.—The release of Miss Ellen M. Stone by the brigands who have held her in captivity since Sept. 3, is believed here to be only a question of hours. An official telegram received in London from Constantinople says the release of Miss Stone is imminent.

CHINESE ARE TRIED.

Celestials Are Arraigned Before North Dakota Judge.

Fargo, N. D., Jan. 12.—In the United States court yesterday nine Celestials were arraigned before Judge Amidon. Some of them have been in jail as long as four months. All were charged with being in the United States illegally. Li Wood and Li Wing proved that they were students of the University of Chicago, one to become a lawyer and the other a doctor. Three others were permitted to remain, four being returned for further hearing.

Keeling Acquitted.

Hastings, Minn., Jan. 12.—The jury in the case of the State vs. A. Keeling, indicted for assault in the first degree upon H. P. Smith, for shooting him with a revolver in the mouth on July 5, returned a verdict of not guilty. Keeling is proprietor of the Commercial hotel and Smith is engaged in the livery business in Farmington.

Ice Men Troubled.

Winona, Minn., Jan. 12.—Ice men are beginning to become alarmed at the continued mild weather, which, if it continues, may seriously interfere with the crop. So far it has been impossible to do any cutting on account of the unsafe condition of the river ice.

Webster Drills for Water.

Webster, S. D., Jan. 12.—Work was commenced on the new two-inch artesian well for the Webster Mill company, and the drill is already down 100 feet. It is expected a flow will be reached at about 1,700 feet.

Frozen to Death While Intoxicated.

Ottumwa, Iowa, Jan. 12. — Lee Clark was found frozen in the river near the Benton street bridge. His hand and head had to be chopped out of the ice before the body could be removed. He fell in while intoxicated.

Had Planned to Die.

Bemidji, Minn., Jan. 12.—Mrs. Zellmaburgan attempted to commit suicide but prompt medical aid prevented the act. She was recently deserted by her husband and despondency led to the act.

NEW TAX STATUTE

COMMISSION PRESENTS A LENGTHY REPORT TO GOV. VAN SANT.

PROPOSES RADICAL CHANGES

SHIFT THE BURDEN OF TAXATION FROM THE MAN OF MODERATE MEANS.

PUBLICITY IS PROVIDED FOR EVERY MAN MAY KNOW IF HIS NEIGHBOR IS PAYING HIS JUST SHARE.

St. Paul, Jan. 12.—The state tax commission has reported. A document containing 85,000 words was deposited on Gov. Van Sant's desk yesterday. It is signed by Gideon S. Ives, Henry W. Childs and William J. Hahn, who have been laboring since last April to construct a new and improved tax code for Minnesota.

The changes made by the new code are in some respects radical and far-reaching. The commissioners believe they will result in shifting the burden of taxation from the man of moderate means, and adding many millions to the assessment rolls by reaching interests heretofore inadequately taxed. This will so increase the total valuation that the rate may be decreased.

The salient features of the new system are:

First—Improved machinery.

Second—Publicity.

Third—Assessment at full value.

Fourth—Assessment of franchise values.

The state board of equalization is abolished because of its tendency to keep down values, each locality striving so to do through its representative. The local board of equalization is for the same reason. The whole machinery of assessment is constructed as a compact agency for ferreting out true values and equalizing the burdens. The state tax commission is a permanent body, in constant supervision. It visits localities, requires reports to be made by all corporations, and personally attends to all abatements and rebates.

Done Away With.

Under the state board is the county supervisor of assessments. He is elected by the people but is subordinate to the state tax commission. He must oversee the work of the assessors and see to it that values are uniform. He also watches to see that no interest escapes, and sits with the county board of equalization.

More time is allowed all assessing officers for performing their work. Listing is to be done April 1, before the spring movement of goods. The assessor has until July 1 to make his return to the county auditor. The county board of review will meet on the third Monday in July, and the state board of review on the third Tuesday in September. The time when taxes are due is changed from Jan. 1 to Jan. 15.

An oath is absolutely required of each taxpayer at the time he certifies to his list.

Publicity is attained, not through the newspapers, but through the mails. When assessments are reported to the county auditor he is to printed, and mail it to every taxpayer in the county, that each one may see what his neighbors are paying. It is intended by this that a man shall be worth as much to the assessor as he is to his bank, or to the commercial agency.

Have the Full List

All property must be assessed at its full market value. Any other method, the report declares, is productive of inequalities. This will increase the personal property valuation many fold.

Corporations will be reached in every manner possible to exact the full valuation.

First, exhaustive reports will be required, not only of the tangible assets, but of amount of business done, capitalization, etc. These will serve to inform the assessing officers of the real value.

Franchises of gas, water, electric heating, power, wharf and boom companies will be assessed. The value of each will be reached by adding together the value of the capital stock and the funded or bonded debt, and deducting therefrom the value of real and personal property. This will, in effect, assess the companies on the market value of their stocks and bonds.

The street railways wanted a gross earnings tax, but are held to the same system of ad valorem taxation, including franchises. This will increase the assessed valuation of such companies many fold.

Telegraph, telephone, express, sleeping car, freight line and equipment companies

Will Report Direct

to the state auditor, and will be assessed by the tax commission on the basis of the value of the capital stock and funded debt. This will then be apportioned to localities on a mileage basis. This is a radical change from the present gross earnings system.

The commission would have preferred to tax mines on their output, but was obliged to adopt an ad valorem basis. The assessment will be made, not by local officers, but by the state board of review, which will be informed as to the actual value of the properties and will assess them as real estate. The assessment may be changed from year to year, however, however.

With regard to the collection of taxes, the tax title shark is discouraged. Such safeguards surround tax sales that a tax title will be practically as good as a warranty deed. Instead of selling to the highest bidder, the sheriff will sell to the person bidding the property in for the amount charged, at the lowest rate of interest.

The machinery of the new act is not expensive. The state tax commissioners will each receive $3,000 per year. County supervisors of assessments will receive $4 per day for the time employed, except in counties of over 75,000, where they will be kept at work continually. These are the only officials added.

In view of the importance of the changes there is no doubt about the calling of an extra session. After sufficient time for reading the report and forming ideas upon it, the legislature will be called together to adopt or reject it.

EXTRA SESSION NEXT MONTH.

Governor Will Issue the Call in a Few Days.

St. Paul, Jan. 12. — Gov. Van Sant will issue a call in a few days for the special session of the legislature to consider the report of the tax commission submitted yesterday to the governor. This announcement was made at the governor's office. The legislature will meet about the middle of February and the date of assembling will be Feb. 11 or 18. The report of the tax commission will be ready Monday to be sent to the members. The governor's idea is that thirty days will be time enough for the members to study it before they are called together to consider it. A month, it is thought, will give them time enough to digest its provisions, so that when they meet they may be in a position to act on it understandingly.

J. J. HILL IS INDORSED.

Grain Growers Pass Commendatory Resolutions.

Fargo, N. D., Jan. 12.—The Tri-State Grain Growers yesterday morning divided on the question of indorsing President Hill's plans for the Northern Securities company.

When the resolutions were offered there was a plank favoring railroad consolidation. This caused the trouble. When the question was put on the adoption of the resolutions the chair declared them carried after a division on the Hill plank. Henry Henderson Halstad, Minn., moved a reconsideration of the Hill plank. He was ruled out of order on the ground that he had voted with the negative. After a short interim, O. H. Jason, Nelson county this state, made the same motion which was carried, but the following motion to expunge was tabled and an adjournment taken without further action.

ONE PLEADS GUILTY.

Eau Claire Men Accused of Conspiracy to Steal Goods.

Eau Claire, Wis., Jan. 12.—John Miller and Ole Anderson, employes of the Eau Claire Grocery company, and David Grust, a Hungarian peddler, were in the municipal court yesterday on a charge of stealing goods from the Eau Claire Grocery company, a wholesale house. The two employes, it is alleged have turned over the goods through the back door to Grust at the noon hour, when most of the people in the office were at lunch. Grust was caught in the act of driving away from the back alley with a load of stolen goods. He pleaded not guilty and gave bail. Miller is in jail. Anderson pleaded guilty and paid a fine.

Fought Over a Love Affair.

Armour, S. D., Jan. 12.—The sports of Armour were treated to a genuine prize fight. Jim Ptock, a cigarmaker, and Riley Shuler, a farmer, agreed to fight to a finish over some love affair and put up a forfeit of $5. When the first round was about finished the sheriff appeared and arrested the two young men. They appeared before Judge Hill, who fined them $10 each. The fight took place on the Armour Driving and Fair association track, outside the city limits.

Charged With Forgery.

Fargo, N. D., Jan. 12.—Charles Reynolds was arrested here on the charge of forging the name of his employer in the southwestern part of the county last fall. After being paid off, it is alleged, he took an order to the elevator agent purporting to have been signed by the farmer for whom he worked. He got the money and left that section. Later he was arrested on a charge of larceny, but was released.

Logging Roads Destroyed.

Black River Falls, Wis., Jan. 12.—The extreme nice and open winter is playing havoc with the lumbering interests on Black river. Save for a cold snap for a few days some weeks ago the weather resembles the latter days of March so far this winter. Little or no hauling has been done and the winter cut will fall short of the estimate by more than one-half unless snow comes within the next few days.

Ask for a Franchise.

Deadwood, S. D., Jan. 12. — The city council has been asked to grant a franchise for an electric car line to be built by Milton C. Conners and associates, connecting Deadwood, Central City and Spearfish. Spearfish and Chicago capitalists intend to build the line.

Grand Opening of Depot.

Litchfield, Minn., Jan. 12.—The fine new depot built by the Great Northern is completed, and A. J. Whitaker, the agent, gave the people of this city a grand opening in the way of a house warming.

Bonds Sold at Par.

Milbank, S. D., Jan. 12.—Forty thousand dollars of Roberts county courthouse bonds were sold at Sisseton to the Minnesota Loan and Trust company at par. They are 4 per cent bonds.

Wide Range of Exhibits.

Fargo, N. D., Jan. 12.—Attendance at the North Dakota and Northern Minnesota Poultry association keeps up. The management is extremely pleased with the extended range of exhibitions.

Fatal Runaway Accident.

Bird Island, Minn., Jan. 12. — John Rice, an old resident of Melville township, was thrown from his buggy in a runaway and died soon after. He was about seventy-five years of age.

Accept Carnegie's Offer.

Madison, Wis., Jan. 12. — The city council by a unanimous vote accepted Andrew Carnegie's offer of $75,000 for a public library. The conditions of Mr. Carnegie's offer were that Madison raise $7,500 yearly toward the support of the library.

Sold Indians Firewater.

Fargo, N. D., Jan. 12.—Lizotte and Jeanotte, a pair of Canadian halfbreeds, were yesterday fined $150 each for selling liquor to the Turtle Mountain Indians. Ole Gunderson got sixty days for a similar offense.

JAMES J. HILL to the GRAIN GROWERS

Mr. Hill's Speech Before the Grain Growers' Convention at Fargo, North Dakota.

Fargo, N. D., Special, Jan. 10.—This was Hill day in the Tri-state Grain and Stock Growers' convention. It was the final wind-up of a most successful four day's session, and the close was in the nature of an ovation to the president of the Great Northern railway and the recently organized Northern Securities company. Great interest was aroused in Mr. Hill's appearance here and had increased since its original announcement. Each day since the convention started had augmented the attendance, and to-day was the banner one of the meeting.

Mayor Johnson introduced President Hill in a complimentary eulogistic speech, as the man the audience had come to hear. His reference to the liberality of Mr. Hill in providing free excursions for North Dakota farmers to the North Dakota agricultural college brought forth a lot of applause. When President Hill arose to speak there was another ovation. He said:

Mr. Hill's Speech.

I want to present to you to-day some important figures which I think will establish many facts that are of great interest to all the people of this country, and more especially to the people of the Northwest.

An advance in the material prosperity of our country has always marked an improvement in the condition of the people. Every United States census from 1790 to 1900 shows an average growth which has practically doubled the population of the country about every thirty years. At the close of the Civil war this country contained, say 34,000,000 of people; since that time we have added fully 40,000,000 of people. At the average rate of the increase of the past one hundred years we should have at least 150,000,000 of people by 1930. The present increase is more than one and a half millions annually.

The all-important question presenting itself to every individual and to every community is: Where will they go and what will they do to secure for themselves comfortable homes and the ability to educate their children and to bring them up in such manner as will make them good, useful citizens of the republic?

At the close of the war a large portion of the States of Iowa, Wisconsin and Minnesota were government lands, open for homesteads, and practically all the country west of these states to the Pacific ocean was open to settlement. The census reports show that a large portion of the increased population has gone into this new country and built up cities and states, opened up prosperous farming communities and dotted the land with schools and churches—every evidence of American Enterprise and Progress.

Nearly one-half of the capital of the country is invested in agricultural land and what goes with it for the purpose of making it productive. Nearly one-half of the population of the country is directly or indirectly connected with the cultivation of the soil, and if we judge from all the experience of the past, the agricultural half of the population has done more than its share in everything that goes to benefit the country as a whole; that half has always shown itself more intelligent, more patriotic, and in every way the sheet-anchor of the nation. When men have been called to defend the flag of our country the farmers' sons have always been ready to step to the front and answer to the call. While the farmers are ready to go ten miles on election day to cast their votes, others hang around the polls in the cities waiting to sell their votes. From the farmers' sons in New England and the Middle and Western states are constantly recruited the numbers of those who engage in the professions and the various walks of business, and their individual successes clearly establish their right to be placed in the front rank wherever they have been called. My observation leads me to believe that the nation at large has more to expect from those who cultivate the soil than from all others combined.

The largest area of unoccupied land where green trees and green grass grows, and where clear water runs, lies in the zone between Lake Superior and the Pacific ocean, and to the settlement and development of this country we must look for the increase of our traffic and the future value of our investment in railways.

How are we to provide homes for our Rapidly Increasing Population?

Most of the lands that will produce crops every year and are susceptible of cultivation are already occupied. The important question to-day before the statesmen of the nation is: How can the remaining lands best be made to furnish homes for the rapidly crowding population? A little reflection will show every individual man that it is only by the wisest action on the part of the general government by well-matured plans for irrigation and every other means which will make available every portion of the country that is or can be made susceptible of cultivation. There is a movement among a few of our statesmen to secure this end. In some localities in the West this movement is opposed by cattle and sheepmen who desire to retain these lands for their own purposes. In some cases an effort is being made to induce congress to convey the lands to the several states, to be disposed of by them. This latter movement can only end in failure. The lands would be frittered away or practically given away or appropriated without benefiting any considerable number of people. I consider the future welfare of the country depends more upon the wise disposition of the public domain, so as to secure homes for the people, than upon any other single condition in our nation. Our country is large; our population and occupations differ as widely as the climate and natural conditions differ. Every congress shows an active effort being made to secure some advantage to some local district, overlooking, as I think, the broad general fact that the nation should and must prosper as a whole.

In 1896 this country settled the question of a gold standard; the universal want of confidence prior to that time came to an end; people who had money to invest were no longer afraid that if they put out a 100-cent dollar they would be compelled to take a 50-cent dollar in return, and now the business of the country is marching forward at a rate greater than has ever been known in our history or in the history of the world. Our attention is frequently called to the enormous balance of trade in our favor; in other words, the amount of money we receive for what we sell is above that which we pay for what we buy, thus making our country rich beyond all precedent. If we carefully inquire into the source from which this enormous balance of trade comes, we find that about three-fourths of our exports are furnished directly and indirectly from the cultivation of the land; the farmers have done the work and have benefited the nation. Now let us consider what the nation has done in return for the farmers, or what it can do in their behalf. The first and great object is to provide them means to sell the product of their land and their labor, at the Highest Possible Prices

it will bring. I will ask you to look over the statute books of the nation and the different states, and find, if you can, any intelligent step that has been taken to find new markets for our agricultural exports. I have examined these records carefully and up to the present time I do not find one intelligent sentence or line the object of which has been to find new markets for the products of the land, except as to Southern sugar and rice, and some wool. In order to advance the price of every commodity the first step is to increase the demand for it; as long as there is a surplus in the market seeking a buyer the price must remain low, and whenever there is a shortage and the demand is greater than the supply it follows that prices must advance. Great Britain buys about 70 per cent of all our exports. She is our one great customer, and the single nation that does not in her markets or through her tariffs discriminate against the product of our soil. In order to buy from us she must be able to sell her own products and get the wherewith to pay for her purchases. England and Germany seek for markets over all the world; they are nations of merchants, and their ships go to all parts of the earth where a harbor can be found and trade relations established. During the past ten or fifteen years our consular service has been greatly improved, and is now furnishing valuable information as to the conditions under which might be extended, but our consular agents are comparatively few and their action in that regard limited.

Twenty years ago the foreign trade of Japan was not to exceed $1 per capita of its population; to-day this trade is equal to $6 or $7 per capita of its population. Twenty years ago it amounted to about $40,000,000 and to-day it amounts to about $250,000,000, of which the United States' share is less than one-fifth. The total foreign trade of China in 1900 was about 75 cents per capita; should it increase in the next twenty years in the proportion of one-half that the trade of Japan has increased in the past twenty years the foreign trade of China would amount to $1,200,000,000. The Chinese race is a commercial race. Their merchants in point of commercial ability and integrity will rank with those of any other nation. The Russian-Siberian line will soon extend through Siberia to Manchuria and Port Arthur, an open port all the year round. This will give Russia an opportunity to distribute more of her products in China and will place her in a strong position. The treaty between China and Japan at the close of the Japanese war secured to Japan the right to trade in China and to make use of ports and rivers and provide facilities for that purpose. Under the most favored nation clause in the treaty, each nation has the same privilege, as respects trade relations, as is secured by Japan by its treaty.

> If we are to enjoy a fair share of the benefits of the development of Oriental trade it must come from finding a market for the necessities of life, nearly all of which come from the farms.

The farm bears a relation to the market, and a vital point of national prosperity and a happy social condition will be in proportion to our success in securing our share of this trade. In the Orient men get from 10 to 50 cents per day; they cannot buy luxuries; their wants are restricted to the mere necessities of life—food and clothing. A few years ago I sent a man to China and Japan, keeping him there a year, to find out and report upon the commercial conditions of those countries and to learn what was necessary for this country to do in order to create a new market for our rapidly increasing products which were being sent to Europe and sold, not to the highest, but I might say to the lowest bidder, because of the surplus we had to sell. During the past six years the flour trade of the Orient has grown to fifteen or twenty millions bushels of wheat per annum, and if there was a supply of cheap ocean transportation, this amount could, in my judgment, be very much increased. If we could take twenty-five or thirty million bushels a year out of the surplus that is sent to Europe, it would nearly offset the average exports of Argentina. If the new order of things following the recent war in China is to secure a stable government and protection for life and property, the development of China cannot fail to be very great, and I see no reason why it may not be as great as that of Japan. In that case we would be called on to furnish one-half of our entire surplus grain, taking this amount out of the European markets and greatly advancing the price of every bushel exported from this country.

A few years ago some very intelligent Japanese gentlemen were in my office and I asked them why they did not use American cotton to mix with the short staple cotton from India. They did not seem to know that our cotton was so much superior to that which they were in the habit of using. I told them if they would try a few carloads of our cotton, and if they did not find it to their advantage to use it I would pay the cost of the cotton. They ordered a few carloads; the result has been that we have not been able to find transportation to supply the Oriental demand for American cotton from that time to this. During the months of September, October and November just passed, we shipped about sixty thousand bales of cotton to the Orient. This was all we could find ship-room to carry; the amount could have been doubled had the ship-room been available. During this time other roads have also carried their share of cotton to the Far East and their experience has been practically the same as our own.

> Five years ago land in the Red river valley and in North Dakota was selling at from $3 to $20 per acre; to-day, the demand for these lands have made them worth from $10 to $50 per acre.

As we have extended our railway lines throughout the Northwest our first object has been to settle up the country along these lines. A comparison of the census reports of 1890 and 1900 shows that in Minnesota in forty-three counties reached by our lines there has been an increase of 280,000 people, in North Dakota in twenty counties over 80,000 people. In fifteen of the counties in North Dakota most depending upon the Great Northern for their railway service I find that the vacant land in 1893 was 9,350,000 acres; in 1901, 4,300,000 acres, showing that in the eight years there had been settled upon in fifteen counties on the lines of the Great Northern road 5,050,000 acres. In Montana the increase in counties on the line of the Great Northern was about 70,000 people and in Washington 110,000 people. This year the indications are that the influx of new people will be greater than at any previous time in the history of the country. More people will come in to make their homes with you and help you as neighbors and fellow workers in the development of your state than ever before.

> At the present time we hear much about the "community of interests" between the railroads. I want to say to you here and now that the only community of interests that there is or ever can exist is the community of interests between the producer of tonnage and the carrier; the man on the farm, in the forest and in the mine must be able at all times to sell the products of his labor and his lands at a profit, or he will cease to labor and have nothing to sell.

The railroads depend for their existence on the products of the lands served by their lines; it has no other source of income. Individuals may come and go, we will all sooner or later pass from active life, but the land—the country—its resources and the railroads will be here permanently, and they will either prosper together or be poor together. There is no other community of interests that can ever exist against this one. While it is necessary for the railroads that the farmers, the lumbermen and the miners shall be prosperous, it is also necessary that the railroads should prosper.

> Much is being said about the combination between railroads, and that the country for its prosperity must rely upon a continuance of competition. The law of the survival of the fittest must inevitably end such competition as exists by the destruction of the weaker by the stronger.

This has already been done in the East to the extent that throughout all of New England the hundreds of original railway corporations are now mostly consolidated into three or four, and the people are better off than ever before. Twenty-five years ago it was supposed that competition was necessary to reduce rates. I think we have shown in the Northwest that, without competition, rates have been reduced faster than anywhere else in this country.

> To-day the farmers can ship their grain from the Red river valley to the Twin Cities and the Head of the Lakes at from 15 to 20 per cent lower rates than farmers living in the Des Moines valley and Western Iowa, where there are many lines, can ship to Chicago, the same distance.

The effect of this has been to bring thousands of farmers from the Middle Western states, including Iowa, Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, Wisconsin, Michigan, Indiana and Illinois to find homes in Minnesota and North Dakota. This, more than anything else, has doubled the price of your lands in a comparatively few years. We have about twelve hundred miles of railway in North Dakota. The average cost of our railway, including terminals, equipment, shops, elevators, etc., is about thirty-five thousand dollars per mile, as shown by its capitalization. In the fifteen counties depending almost entirely for their transportation upon the Great Northern railway, there are, in round numbers, sixteen million acres of land. If the building of the railway and what has followed it has added $10 per acre to the value of this land it is worth $100,000,000 more than it would have been without the railway, and you have the benefit of this advance. I am glad that it is yours and hope it will enable you to enjoy your old age in comfort and to make those who follow after you good and worthy citizens of your state.

> There has recently been an attempt to show that we have no interest in building up the prosperity of the people of your state and of the Northwest. If we did not do everything in our power to build you up we would be false to our best interests. Our object in acquiring the Burlington, jointly with the Northern Pacific railway, was to insure an outlet to the best markets for the grain, live stock and lumber of the Northern lines, and to increase the volume of our traffic to the end that we might at all times be able to establish the lowest rates and most favorable conditions under which the traffic must be carried.

The Burlington, with its own rails reaches Chicago, Peoria, Rock Island, Davenport, Quincy, Alton, Hannibal, St. Louis, St. Joseph, Kansas City, Des Moines, Omaha, and Denver, and then connects with the main arteries of traffic of the whole country.

Assuming that the line of the Burlington had not been constructed and that the Great Northern and Northern Pacific jointly had raised the money and were engaged in the construction of it, would there be anything to meet the disapproval of the states traversed by the lines of the Great Northern and Northern Pacific? On the contrary, would not such a course have been hailed with approval as a means of opening up markets for Northwestern produce and of reaching markets in the South and Southwest and of securing business, increasing the volume of traffic of the Great Northern and Northern Pacific, thus making reduction of rates and adding to the general prosperity of the Northwest? Instead of building the Burlington system or a line of railway alongside of it, the Great Northern and Northern Pacific purchased the capital stock of a line already constructed, instead of issuing stock or bonds for the purpose of raising money to build a line reaching the same country bonds were issued to purchase the stock of a constructed line.

Convincing Reasons.

The capital stock of railway companies, as of other corporations, will be held by somebody and somewhere. Railway companies as carriers are subject to supervision and control by the public for the purpose of insuring the performance of their obligations to the public. Railroads make public through published rates the price charged for transportation, the only thing they have to sell, and must report the amount they receive for what they sell and what has been done with it. Courts are open for the purpose of determining whether railway companies as carriers observe their obligations to the public. The question of the reasonableness of rates and service does not depend upon whether one man owns the capital stock of a railway or another—whether the capital stock is owned by ten men or one thousand, by persons or by corporations. The capital stock of a railway company is personal property, to be sold, transferred from one man to another, and any one may purchase and hold all that he has means to buy and pay for. The capital stock of the Northern Pacific and the Great Northern will be held by somebody, persons or corporations, if not by the present owners, by other owners. Suppose by death of present owners the stock should be scattered and a majority of it find its way into the hands of those interested in competing lines serving the country to the north or to the south of the territory served by the Great Northern and the Northern Pacific. Would the people along the lines of those railways be benefited? If the present owners of a majority of the stock of the two companies could be compelled to sell it or dispose of it on the market, would it fall into hands more interested in the development and prosperity of the Northwest than its present owners? How is it that the lines have been extended and improved? What brought about the present condition of the property of the two companies? What has enabled them to serve the people along the lines as they have been served? Plainly the willingness and ability of those controlling large interests in the stock of the companies, who found it to their advantage to build up the lines and promote the settlement of the territory tributary to it and who will continue it.

Broad-Gauge Competition.

The great freight producing area of the country is along the Atlantic seaboard and in the territory south of Lake Erie. The freight that is the product of all the manufacturing enterprises which find a market west of the Mississippi river to a large extent must pass through the lakes to Duluth and to St. Paul and Minneapolis and into the territory between these cities and the Pacific, or around Lake Michigan and at that point going largely to Southwestern lines. The question of stock ownership, so far as the public along the lines served by the Great Northern and Northern Pacific is concerned, is to be considered in the light of a great competitive condition between the territory served by the Northern lines and those of the South and West—between lines whose interest it is to secure traffic as against the Northern lines, to populate and build up the country in which the people along the Northern lines have no special immediate interest.

A few years ago the transportation on Lake Superior was mainly in the hands of what was known as the Lake Superior Transit company, a pool line made up by steamers operated by Eastern trunk lines, who also operated boats running from Chicago, and whenever we reduced the rates from the wheat fields to Lake Superior a corresponding advance in the water rate was made to offset our reduction on land and equalize the rate by Lake Superior and by Chicago. We built six steel steamers, which at that time were the largest on the lakes. The first cargo we landed at Buffalo we were told that it would have to pay the local rate from Buffalo to New York, which was practically the same as the through rate from Duluth to New York. We found a way to get around this, and the result was to break up the Transit company and break down the rates on the lakes to a reasonable figure. Later the elevator charges at the head of Lake Superior were 1½ cents per bushel, and at Buffalo 1¼ cents per bushel, with an additional charge for shoveling of ¼ cent. We built large elevators at both places, the effect of which has been to reduce the rates to ½ cent each in Buffalo and at the head of Lake Superior; in other words, where the grain paid 2¾ cents per bushel it is now paying 1 cent. The difference to the Northwest on the 200,000,000 bushels of wheat is $3,500,000 per year. The proportion of this we handle through our elevators is probably 15 per cent. We did not build the elevators for the purpose of grinding the faces off the farmers of the Northwest, but in order that they might have fair play and that their grain might go forward without undue and unnecessary taxation. I say this to show you that we are at all times mindful of everything that will add to your material prosperity.

> In 1880 the average rates on grain from the Red river valley to Duluth were from 25 cents to 35 cents per hundred; to-day they are from 14 cents to 16 cents per hundred, or about one-half the rates of twenty years ago. The rates on coal and lumber have been reduced in the same proportion.

Reductions in rates of transportation must be made with the greatest care in order to avoid unfair discrimination against persons or localities. A reduction in the rates of the whole country of 10 cents for moving a ton of freight 100 miles would make a reduction of over $150,000,000 on the traffic handled during the past year, and would wipe out a large part of the income of the railroads.

General Railroad Conditions.

The conditions of the general railroad situation in the United States at the present time are hardly understood: For the year ending June 30, 1890, the number of tons carried one mile by all the railroads was 76,207,000,000 ton miles; in 1900 it was 141,000,000,000 as shown by the interstate commerce commission reports. In 1901 a safe estimate will bring this to 165,000,000,000 tons carried one mile, an increase of 120 per cent in eleven years. During this time the mileage of the railroads in the United States increased 18 per cent. While the tons moved shows an increase of 120 per cent, the earnings show an increase of less than 40 per cent. During this time the rates have been reduced to the extent of that difference. During that period of eleven years, notwithstanding the enormous increase in traffic, four of the so-called trunk lines have through destructive competition failed, and been reorganized, and all but one of them have been absorbed by the stronger surviving lines. Destructive competition has forced the weakest lines into bankruptcy, and to-day they are owned by the lines that were able to maintain their position and credit, giving the ability to acquire these bankrupt roads. The Baltimore & Ohio and the Pennsylvania for half a century have been rival roads. Both states and cities have actively aided in building them up. Destructive competition between them has finally resulted in the Pennsylvania road owning the Baltimore & Ohio. Have the rates advanced? Have the people along the line of the Baltimore & Ohio suffered? On the contrary, the first step has been to furnish money to cut down the grades, to double track the line from the Ohio river to Chicago and to furnish cars and terminal facilities to handle the business to the best advantage, and at such rates as will enable the shippers along the line to open up their mines and increase their business in every branch of trade, and to rely upon the solvent company for the facilities necessary to transact their business.

Hardly a day passes without a railroad accident, many of which are attended with much loss of life. What is the cause? In an effort to handle the business of the public trains are run in such numbers and at a rate of speed which is entirely beyond the capacity of the roads—to-day there is an absolute blockade of traffic between Chicago and the Mississippi river points in the West and the Atlantic seaboard. Furnaces within a short distance of the coke ovens are cold and thousands of men are idle for want of transportation. There is a coal famine from Pittsburg to Denver. People say it is due to shortage of cars. Ten years ago, with a ton mile movement of seventy-six billions, the average freight car movement was about thirty miles per day; at this time it is not more than twenty miles per day. It is not more cars that is wanted, but more movement of the cars now in use. Freight trains move certainly an average of sixteen miles an hour while on the road. Twenty miles car movement daily means that the cars move one hour and a quarter out of the twenty-four hours.

> No business in the world can thrive under conditions when it can use its facilities for earning money less than one hour out of the twelve.

When many of the roads were built capital was scarce and high. A very large proportion of the original railway enterprises failed, losing a large part of the investment—they had no idea of the future growth, and from want of money and want of forethought the terminal facilities are to-day totally inadequate. If the cars could be moved at the principal terminals the main lines would be able to do better than at present. However, with a continuance for three or five years of the present volume of traffic between the East and West added to industrial traffic in the great manufacturing districts, this country will find itself confronted with the most serious commercial question it has yet been called upon to solve. Terminals in the larger Eastern cities are both difficult and expensive to acquire. The Pennsylvania railway, in order to get into New York, onto Manhattan island, is building a tunnel from Jersey City to Brooklyn at a cost of forty or fifty million dollars. Will it bring new business or must the expense of operation and interest on cost be levied on present traffic?

A careful examination of the railway problem from a national standpoint will, I believe, show beyond question that the business of the country has outgrown the facilities on most of the trunk lines and that new facilities not now apparent will be necessary to relieve the situation.

Rates in the United States are much lower than in any other country. Wages are higher—the cost of most of the material is higher than in Europe, still the average rate charged in Europe is fully twice as high as in America. The conditions in this country change very rapidly—while rates have been cut in two in twenty years all kinds of labor and material used by railways have advanced from 30 to 50 per cent. Nothing but the increased volume of traffic has made it possible to reduce rates as they have been reduced. To-day we find the volume of traffic so great east of Chicago that the railways are not able to move it under the present conditions. How will these conditions be changed and at whose cost? Who will build new lines or increase old ones? These are the questions which I will not undertake to answer farther than to say that the West must have the facilities or suffer for the want of them.

> The public must always bear in mind that a bankrupt road cannot furnish good service. The railroad must be able to furnish the service demanded from it at fair and reasonable rates. The problem we have had to solve has been how to reduce the cost of operation so that we can furnish transportation at the lowest prices.

This can be done only by increasing the volume of traffic. The question is as simple as raising a given amount of money by taxation. The more dollars' worth of property taxed the lower the rate of taxation will be, and the greater number of tons carried the lower the rate of transportation will be. This is one of the main reasons why we are so anxious to develop the enormous through business that is rapidly growing up along our lines. Every ton of new business that we bring, contributes its proportion of net revenue and enables us to reduce the rate of transportation on our local business. The interstate business on our lines in North Dakota to-day constitutes 65 per cent of the whole and still you enjoy all the facilities furnished, both passenger and freight, with the increased number of trains necessary to handle this business, every one of which is an additional accommodation to you.

It will be thirty-two years next March since I first saw the Red River Valley. At that time there was not a single house on the west side of the Red river from the Bois de Sioux to Pembina. During the past twenty years all of my time and effort has been given to building up the Northwest and no part of the Northwest has given me more satisfaction or is giving me more satisfaction to-day than North Dakota. Its growth in the past has been marvelous. The first years in all new countries are marked by hardship and self-denial, but during the past few years you are getting the reward of your labor; people are coming into the state by thousands, the value of your land has advanced and will advance beyond your reasonable expectations and I hope that together your property and our property will work side by side and shoulder to shoulder to carry forward the best interests of North Dakota. No man, no hundred men in your state, represent the same interest in your welfare that it is my good fortune to represent and I hope in the future that with better methods of cultivation and more knowledge of what is required, your condition may be constantly improved and if your condition is improved, ours will certainly share it with you. As the volume of traffic increases our rates will be reduced.

> Remember that whatever helps you helps the railroad, and whatever hurts or restricts your growth restricts the growth of the railroad serving you. We will always prosper together or be poor together.

Annoyances of the President's Life.

Among the annoyances of a president's life are the intrusions of well-intentioned people upon his private and personal affairs. He is the common property of the nation. He has no home, or as little of one as the public is compelled to leave him; he is worse off than any private citizen in the country in this respect, for when he or his wife asks some friends to call on them on a certain day of the week, persons who are not asked, and who do not know them, accept the invitation which was not given them and go also. Not so annoying, perhaps, are the people who open upon the president as teachers of morality. They have no delicacy; they rush in where they are not asked; and they insist that now the president is in the White House he shall conform his life to theirs, shall live as they think is right, and is a monster of iniquity if he does not accept their tutelage. There is not a president who has escaped them, and there never will be until we have a score or so of presidents, each of whom will not heed them, who will not answer their letters, who will insist on having his own habits, and on living according to his own light and not according to the light of another. We have recently had a temperance president who has been called a drunkard because some one said he saw him drink a glass of champagne at dinner. Denials of the truth of the statement merely whetted the appetite for objurgation. And now we have another president, a very abstemious man, who receives letters nearly every day whose writers express the regret that we have a "wine-bibber" in the White House. These letters, we are told, are not answered, but a reply was sent to the woman who reminded the president of the commandment, "Six days shalt thou labor," and then lectured him for Sabbath-breaking. The reply was written by Secretary Cortelyou, and was this:

"I am directed by the president to say that he goes to church on Sunday morning, and takes his wife and children into the country Sunday afternoon.

Cholly—I think I may change my mind. Miss Marbleheart (earnestly)—I would, if I were you.—Judge.

AN EXTRA SESSION

GOV. VAN SANT ISSUES FORMAL CALL FOR MEETING OF LEGISLATURE.

WILL COME TOGETHER FEB. 4

TO CONSIDER REPORT OF TAX COMMISSION AND REVISE TAXATION LAWS.

MAY ALSO TACKLE THE MERGER

GOVERNOR'S MESSAGE WILL SUM UP THE RAILROAD SITUATION.

St. Paul, Jan. 14.—Gov. Van Sant Saturday issued a formal call for a special session of the legislature on Feb 4 to consider the report of the tax commission and to revise the law governing taxation. The call is in accordance with an agreement whereby the legislature cut short its extra session of last winter. The early date of the extra session is necessary, because the proposed tax law changes the time of beginning an assessment. The assessor, under the bill submitted by the tax commission, will begin his work April 1 instead of May 1, as formerly. The governor deemed it expedient to call the session as soon as possible, in order that the proposed tax laws may take effect before the next assessment is made.

Gov. Van Sant declined to discuss the scope of the work that has been mapped out for the special session. As soon as the call was issued he began the work of preparing his message to the legislature. The message will deal not alone with the work of the tax commission and the necessity of doing aw y with the present system, but it will s m up the railroad situation in the state and the railway merger. The governor suggests that his call includes only the matters that are most important to the state, yet it will be possible for the legislature to pass upon a great many things.

TORTURE BY RED DEVILS.

Sacrifice of a Medicine Man at Hands of a Band of Yuma Indians.

Phoenix, Ariz., Jan. 14.—Pardee, a big medicine man of the Yuma Indians who lives on a reservation near Yuma, Ariz., has been offered as a sacrifice to the spirit in accordance with their customs, and has expiated the sins of the tribe which are held responsible for the epidemic of smallpox. The medicine man suspected the intentions of the Indians several days ago and fled to the mountains, but in a half-starved condition wandered back to the Indian village and pleaded for mercy. He was promptly bound hand and foot and conveyed by a delegation of Indians to Mexico, where he was bound to a tree and cruelly tortured to death. Padre had a warm place in the hearts of his tribesmen, but their customs required them to make a heavy sacrifice.

BAYKINAHWAUNH DIES.

Old Warrior of White Earth Who Desired Modern Growth.

White Earth, Minn., Jan. 14.—Baykinahwaunh, a well known chief among the White Earth Chippewa Indians, and one of a few remaining early day warriors, died Saturday morning, aged seventy years. He was among the first to remove to the White Earth reservation when it was first set aside for the Chippewas. He was an earnest advocate of education and cherished constant interest in all movements looking to the elevation of his race.

AGED KANSAN IS MURDERED.

John Booth Killed With Ax at Ottawa and Body Thrown Into Well.

Ottawa, Kan., Jan. 14.—John Booth, an old man, was robbed and murdered and his body thrown into a well on the premises of Mrs. McCoy, a block from her home. A bloody axe was found near the well, and stains were found on the kitchen door of the McCoy house. Mrs. McCoy and a daughter were arrested. The Kansas City authorities have been notified to arrest another daughter, who is believed to have left for that city on an early train.

MANGLED BY BLAST.

One Man Killed and Several Others Hurt by Dynamite.

Fort Dodge, Iowa, Jan. 14.—James Burgess was killed and two companions were injured by the explosion of a blast in the mines of the Webster County Coal and Land company at Lehigh. The men had placed the blast, which did not explode at once, and they started forward to ascertain the trouble, reaching it just as the explosion occurred. Burgess' body was badly mangled, but the others were not seriously injured.

IOWA SALOON MEN ENJOINED.

Personal Injunctions Issued Against Ottumwa Liquor Dealers.

Ottumwa, Iowa, Jan. 14.—Personal injunctions were issued from the district court here against five of the thirty-six saloonkeepers against whom proceedings were recently commenced by the local anti-saloon league, restraining them from in any manner disobeying the mulct law. Plans for like decrees in other cases are under consideration.

Fire of Mysterious Origin.

St. Louis, Jan. 14.—A fire of mysterious origin yesterday caused damage estimated at $130,000 in the building occupied by the E. C. W. Meier China and Glass company.

Farmer's Fatal Mistake.

New Richmond, Wis., Jan. 14.—Carelessness in getting the wrong bottle will probably cost Arthur McConnell, a prosperous farmer residing one mile east of Cylon, his life. He had been taking medicine and got carbolic acid.

Settlers for North Dakota.

Mandan, N. D., Jan. 14.—Over fifty Iowa landseekers arrived in Mandan the last three days to view the 60,000 acres recently sold by the Morton County Land company to W. H. Brown. Nearly all purchased small tracts.

GRAIN GROWERS' CONVENTION

Symposium for Farmers of Minnesota, North and South Dakota.

The Tri-State Grain and Stock Growers' convention was held in Fargo last week. The attendance was large, fully 1,500 delegates being in attendance from the States of Minnesota, North and South Dakota. The first session was held Tuesday.

Appreciating his efforts in behalf of the movement, the convention honored Mayor Johnson with election as president. Maj. Fleming of Fargo was made secretary, and J. W. Scott of Grand Forks and T. A. Hovedstad of the Minnesota experiment station at Crookston were elected vice presidents. James Holes, one of the pioneer valley farmers, told how to raise potatoes in all forms, from seed selection and preparation of the soil, through the cultivation to marketing. Commissioner of Agriculture Turner sent a paper on the state's advantages and prosperity which went into recent statistics in interesting comparisons, showing the rapid advancement in North Dakota for the last decade. John Armstrong of Desmet, S. D., editor of the Dairy Column in the Dakota Farmer, sent an interesting article on dairying in the Dakotas, with especial emphasis on selection and treatment of cattle as to feeding and care.

Hon. L. A. Ueland of Lamoure county gave an interesting lecture on corn culture, selection of seed and cultivation. Maj. Fleming's paper on corn growing and ensilage was an interesting one, as it gave results of his practical experience for a score of years. His showing on the value of ensilage for feeding purposes was a strong argument in its favor for both cattle and horses. Prof. D. A. Saunders of the South Dakota agricultural college made a decided hit with his address on macaroni wheat. He treated the subject from a historic and analytical standpoint and showed the great advantages of the grain in many respects. Summed up it was shown that macaroni could be grown to great advantage in the Dakotas and Minnesota, in fact all the way from the national boundary to Texas, but it did best between the ninety-fifth and one hundredth meridians. Some remarks were made on the same subject by M. A. Carleton, the cerealist of the department of agriculture, who spoke of the demand for the wheat and the excellent price it brought. Those who had experimented with the wheat had a little side session, and many interesting points were developed.

J. E. Phelan, ex-secretary of the railroad commission, discussed finishing live stock for the Eastern markets and gave his experience, gained in years of cattle raising, and brought out many facts of interest. Prof. J. H. Shepperd of the North Dakota agricultural college followed with an interesting paper on corn raising in connection with cattle and demonstrated the folly of attempting to feed and make money out of scrub stock.

Each paper elicited much discussion in which prominent men participated. Following the afternoon adjournment, Hon. G. S. Barnes notified the convention that he had secured a special train for a two hours' run to his stock farm at Glyndon Thursday morning, and asked as many of the delegates as were interested in Brown-Swiss cattle to be his guests.

There was an increased attendance at the evening session. E. G. Schollander of the North Dakota agricultural college spoke on seed selection. He was followed by President Worst on the same subject. Prof. Ten Eyck of the college discussed conservatism of moisture by cultivation and the advantages and disadvantages of different methods of culture. His remarks were especially directed to the length of the roots of the different plants, showing they range to as great a length as eighty-two inches. He was followed on the same subject by M. A. Carleton of Washington. Prof. Grindeland of Warren, Minn., discussed evergreen tree culture.

The first paper Wednesday morning was by W. M. House of Lidgerwood on "Agriculture and Education." The speaker was formerly a well known educator and has been a practical farmer for many years. His address was most able.

R. S. Barnes of Fargo spoke on "Diversified Farming," and convinced his hearers, as he had been himself for some years, that the one-crop idea for the Northwest was a failure.

Budd Reeve, the sage of Buxton and the inimitable soothsayer of the Northwest, was the next speaker. President Hill was the subject of his address. He did the subject justice from almost any standpoint, and his effort was one of the brightest of the convention.

Frank R. Strong of Scoville, N. D., followed with an address on macaroni wheat. In the absence of Hon. S. M. Owen of Minneapolis his paper was read by President Worst of the agricultural college.

A charming paper, entitled "Our Farm Life; How to Decrease Its Ills and Increase Its Blessings," was read by E. T. Curtiss of Moorhead, Minn.

M. A. Carleton, cerealist of the department of agriculture at Washington, who was sent here by Secretary Wilson to assist in the convention, spoke on drouth resistent cereals. He described his experience in Southern Russia, which was topographically similar to the Dakotas. Continued efforts on the part of the government there had produced a wheat that was especially adapted to North and South Dakota. Macaroni wheat had been found so successful and profitable that the department was putting forth every effort to interest Dakota farmers in its growth.

The afternoon's work was concluded by an address by George A. Ralph of Crookston on "Drainage in the Red River Valley," in which the absolute necessity of some method of protection of settlers and prevention of floods was thoroughly exploited. The convention then adjourned until 11 o'clock Thursday morning, as the first two hours were to be taken up in an excursion to the farm of Hon. G. S. Barnes at Glyndon, Minn.

The stock growers had an inning Thursday forenoon and the grain growers two in the afternoon and evening. From 8 o'clock till noon more than a thousand delegates to the convention were the guests of Hon. G. S. Barnes at his Glyndon (Minn.) farm. He secured a seven-car special train and took all who wished to go. There they saw a combination bonanza grain farm and stock farm. Buildings and Brown Swiss cattle and pedigreed swine were inspected generally, and later fine specimens were brought out on a platform and thoroughly explained by Prof. Shaw of the Minnesota station and Prof. Shepperd of the North Dakota agricultural college. The discussion which followed was spirited and demonstrated the interest taken in improved stock by farmers of the Northwest. Mr. Barnes was tendered a vote of thanks for the diversion his hospitality had given the delegates and for the instructive forenoon spent.

In the afternoon the first paper was by H. D. Hurley of Duane, Traill county, N. D., on farm telephones. Mr. Hurley was a pioneer in that respect, having extended a line from Hillsboro to his farm. Others became interested, until finally a company was organized, and all the farms connected with each other and with Hillsboro and the entire Northwestern telephone system. He expatiated on the many advantages of being able to sit by his own fireside and converse with friends in Fargo or the Twin Cities and to make rush orders for supplies and repairs. As a time and money saver the farm telephone is a huge success.

Dr. T. D. Hinebaugh of Tower City, ex-state veterinarian, read an instructive paper on feeding millet to stock and created a most animated discussion, many giving the convention the benefit of their experience. Superintendent of Public Instruction Devine made an able address on the education of boys on the farm. Diversified-farming was the subject of the address of P. J. Beltz of Buxton, who pictured its advantages in a manner that proved his ability to discuss the question thoroughly.

One of the most timely addresses was that of E. E. Kaufman, state dairy commissioner, on the dairy interests of the state. His efforts to arouse enthusiasm were successful. The creamery question is a vital one in the state now and the statistics given by Mr. Kaufman, with the record of North Dakota butter at the Pan-American, gave the speaker ample scope for his address. Ex-State Treasurer K. J. Nomland discussed corn culture in an eminently practical manner, giving the benefit of his experience of many years on a Traill county farm. Great discussion followed.

Charles McKissick, of the big Grandin farms near Mayville, spoke on grain and stock and showed what the combination could do. Before the afternoon adjournment Vice President Hoverstad appointed an executive committee composed of J. H. Worst of Fargo, chairman; T. A. Hoverstad of Crookston, and Prof. Saunders of Brookings, S. D. The resolutions committee is composed of Capt. D. L. Wellman of Frazee, Minn., chairman; H. L. Forket of Lamoure, N. D.; T. A. Hoverstad of Crookston, Minn.; George Earl of Oriska, N. D., and James Kennedy of Fargo.

The first speaker in the evening was G. C. Hanley of St. Paul, president of the Allied National Agricultural association. The Nicaragua canal and its effect on Oriental trade was his subject. He opposed the canal scheme, and thought the United States was being used as a cat's-paw. His address was a plea for the development of the Pacific trade to the Orient.

"Sheep on the Farm," a favorite topic with the speaker, was discussed by Prof. Thomas Shaw of the Minnesota agricultural college in an able and interesting manner. He said in part:

"It may sound like a contradiction of terms to speak of keeping sheep on the grain farm. And yet it is not, since no kind of live stock, except the horses which are required to do the work, can be kept with so much advantage on the grain farm as sheep. The benefits from keeping them on the same are fourfold. First, they act the part of weed destroyers; second, they bring fertility to the land; third, they may be made to regulate the growth of the crops; fourth, they are a source of profit far above the outlay involved in keeping them. It may seem a waste of time to talk about fertility in the Red river valley. It is, as you farmers know, a land, the natural fertility of which has never been exceeded probably since the world was created. Not a few of the men who till the lands in this valley will look you straight in the face and tell you that the fertility of this valley will never wear out. And the endless succession of grain crops which they grow, and the periodical burning of straw stacks which occurs every year are evidences of the sincerity of their convictions. Notwithstanding, just as surely as the waters of the Mississippi flow southward and those of the Red river flow northward, just so surely will the lands of this unrivaled valley be depleted of their fertility unless this system of never-ending grain growing and grain seeding is modified. With all the powers of my being, I want to raise my voice in remonstrance against what must some day bring ruin to the agriculture of this valley if long enough continued."

Michael P. Moran of Graceville, Minn., and president of the National Grain Growers' association, spoke on the development of Oriental trade and its influence on the Northwest.

Prof. Ten Eyck of the North Dakota agricultural college discussed room development of cereals and vegetables, and Prof. Bolley of the same institution had a learned article on fungus infestation of soils, including flax wilt. The evening session concluded with an illustrated lecture by M. A. Carleton of Washington on that part of Russia in which wheat is raised.

VIEW OF NORTH DAKOTA.

Resolutions Endorsing J. J. Hill's Railroad Operations.

Fargo, N. D.—At the North Dakota Grain Growers' convention at Fargo, on the 10th inst., a series of resolutions were adopted which concluded as follows:

It is the sense of this meeting that, in resisting the attempts of the Union Pacific road and its allies, on the one hand, and the Canadian Pacific railroad and its feeders on the other, to secure control of the Northern Pacific railroad, James J. Hill has performed a notable public service, and once more displayed the far-sighted and business-like policy that has characterized his long career as the great developer of Northwestern resources and the most watchful guardian of Northwestern interests.

Mr. Hill built a great transcontinental road through a wilderness, that has grown, through his efforts, into the richest empire on earth, and never asked a bonus or subsidy. He has connected that railroad at one end with a fleet of vessels that carry American products to the Orient, and bring back the trade of the Orient to the Northwest, and to the whole nation, and at the other end with shipping facilities by water to the Atlantic seaboard—all of this, too, without a dollar of bonus or the semblance of a subsidy. Trusting to the resources of the country for the traffic to justify extension, he has entered every section that needed transportation facilities, and constructed, often at a loss to himself, lines into sparsely-settled and unproductive communities. During all the years of railroad building, there has been a regular, marked reduction of freight tariffs, according as the volume of traffic increased and warranted it, and a uniform disposition to make temporary sacrifices for the permanent improvement of the country.

In view of this record, and in recognition of the honorable and upright course of James J. Hill in his dealings with the farmers of the Northwest, we congratulate the country upon his success in preventing the absorption of the Northern Pacific by Union Pacific interests, on the one hand, and the Canadian Pacific manipulators on the other, and express our confidence in the purpose and ability of Mr. Hill to give to the States of Minnesota and North and South Dakota, the best and cheapest transportation facilities to be had by the people of any section of the nation.

Two years ago Mr. Hill came to our convention and gave us some good points on diversified farming and other matters of interest to the farmers of the Northwest, and stated that he would furnish free transportation to delegations of farmers from the different counties of the state to visit the agricultural college and state farm, which offer many farmers have accepted, to their great satisfaction and benefit.

He also stated that he expected to build some large steam vessels, costing a number of millions of dollars, to put on the Pacific ocean trade, from this country to the Orient. We notice, by the daily press that this statement is being fulfilled, and it will make a new market for the farmers of the Northwest, to their benefit.

CHINESE ARE TRIED.

Celestials Are Arraigned Before North Dakota Judge.

Fargo, N. D., Jan. 12.—In the United States court yesterday nine Celestials were arraigned before Judge Amidon. Some of them have been in jail as long as four months. All were charged with being in the United States illegally. Li Wood and Li Wing proved that they were students of the University of Chicago, one to become a lawyer and the other a doctor. Three others were permitted to remain, four being returned for further hearing.

Keeling Acquitted.

Hastings, Minn., Jan. 12.—The jury in the case of the State vs. A. Keeling, indicted for assault in the first degree upon H. P. Smith, for shooting him with a revolver in the mouth on July 5, returned a verdict of not guilty. Keeling is proprietor of the Commercial hotel and Smith is engaged in the livery business in Farmington.

Ice Men Troubled.

Winona, Minn., Jan. 12.—Ice men are beginning to become alarmed at the continued mild weather, which, if it continues, may seriously interfere with the crop. So far it has been impossible to do any cutting on account of the unsafe condition of the river ice.

Webster Drills for Water.

Webster, S. D., Jan. 12.—Work was commenced on the new two-inch artesian well for the Webster Mill company, and the drill is already down 100 feet. It is expected a flow will be reached at about 1,700 feet.

Farmer's Fatal Mistake.

New Richmond, Wis., Jan. 14.—Carelessness in getting the wrong bottle will probably cost Arthur McConnell, a prosperous farmer residing one mile east of Cylon, his life. He had been taking medicine and got carbolic acid.

Settlers for North Dakota.

Wife Murder and Suicide.

Eureka, Cal., Jan. 14.—J. H. G. Saffel, a restaurantkeeper, shot and killed his wife in the presence of his seven young children and then ended his life. Domestic infelicity was the cause of the tragedy.

STOLE CHINESE STUFF.

German Looter Is Sentenced to Five and a Half Years' Imprisonment.

Berlin, Jan. 14.—A court martial at Erfurt sentenced a military reservist to five and a half years' imprisonment for looting in the recent expedition in China.

The Distilling Company of America has filed a certificate in Trenton, N. J., amending its charter and decreasing its authorized capital stock from $125,000,000 to $25,000,000.

TROOPS ARE SENT

CALL FROM LAME DEER INDIAN AGENCY PROMPTLY ANSWERED.

INDIANS VERY MUCH EXCITED

FEARS THAT THEY MAY WREAK VENGEANCE ON THE AGENT.

GEN. OTIS ACTS VERY QUICKLY

TROOP OF CAVALRY STARTS ON A NINETY-MILE OVERLAND MARCH.

St. Paul, Jan. 12.—The reported fears of an uprising among the Indians of the Lame Deer or Tongue River reservation, Montana, were followed by prompt action yesterday by Maj. Gen. Otis, commanding this department. In obedience to orders telegraphed by Gen. Otis from his headquarters at Chicago, First Lieutenant Charles A. Romeyn and one company of the Thirteenth cavalry, left Fort Keogh, Mont., at 9 o'clock yesterday morning for the Lame Deer Agency.

News of the possible disturbances came Thursday in the form of a telegram from Forsythe, Mont., requesting that soldiers be sent at once to the Tongue River agency, ninety miles southwest of Keogh. It appears that the Indian, White, after refusing to obey the summons of the post agent, opened fire upon the posse sent to arrest him, shot one of the Indian policemen and then killed himself. Out of respect for the dead brave, the wife and also the daughter committed suicide. This tragedy caused the greatest excitement among the Cheyennes.

Although the affair would seem thus to have terminated itself, fears were expressed that the Indians would hold the agent accountable for the tragedy and would follow White's example of militant disobedience.

The troopers marching overland with Lieut. Romeyn must go ninety miles across a country, part of which is rolling prairie and part "bad lands." The road being extremely rough for a portion of the distance, the troops can scarce reach the agency before to-morrow morning, and they may be delayed until to-morrow night.

A very small detachment—two noncommissioned officers and twelve men of the Thirteenth cavalry—are already at the reservation. They are the garrison of Camp Merritt, a subpost of Fort Keogh, which is situated in the northeastern portion of the reservation close to the village and postoffice of Lame Deer.

WILL PROSECUTE DENTISTS.

South Dakota Board of Examiners to Get After Lawbreakers.

Madison, S. D., Jan. 12.—The state board of dental examiners adjourned yesterday. The new lines of action laid down by the board are that all practicing dentists will be required to pay annually a $15 fee, that the diplomas of the dental school will be recognized in applications for license to practice, but that each applicant must stand an examination for present qualifications. The board also decided to begin at once prosecutions against those practicing without license from the state board.

ANOKA SUBURBAN ROAD.

Promoters Promise a Line From Minneapolis to Anoka.

Anoka, Minn., Jan. 12.—A mass meeting of citizens of Anoka, Champlin and vicinity has been called to meet here Saturday evening to discuss a proposition for a Minneapolis & Anoka suburban railway company. A meeting of a few business men was held last night and the scheme is considered sufficiently feasible to warrant further action. The names of the projectors are E. T. Smart of Seattle, Wash.; H. M. Femison of Neola, Iowa; E. H. Fuller of Minneapolis, and J. J. Elliott, Minneapolis.

IN MEMORY OF M'KINLEY.

Gov. Van Sant Fixes a Day for Exercises.

St. Paul, Jan. 12.—Gov. Van Sant yesterday issued a proclamation calling upon the people of the state to observe Wednesday, Jan. 29, as a day for special exercises in the schools in memory of President McKinley. He especially urges that upon that day contributions be made to a fund for the erection of a McKinley monument, and that on the preceding Sunday contributions be asked in the churches throughout the state. The day named is the birthday of President McKinley.

YOUNGERS MUST WAIT.

State Board of Pardons Will Not Meet Until Jan. 27.

St. Paul, Jan. 12.—The state board of pardons will not meet Monday as scheduled on account of the absence of Attorney General Douglas. Mr. Douglas has informed the governor that he will await in Washington further progress in the merger case before the supreme court. The meeting has been postponed until Jan. 27. The application of the Youngers is expected to be considered at the meeting.

ALL RAILROADS MAY BE UNITED

St. Paul Man Claims Morgan and Hill Plan Great Transportation Trust.

St. Paul, Jan. 14.—J. Pierpont Morgan, James J. Hill and other railroad magnates are planning to control the transportation facilities of the world, according to a St. Paul railroad man who has just returned from a visit to Washington and New York for the purpose of studying the "merger" plan. According to his man, Morgan plans to combine the Northern, Central, Southern, Southeastern and Southwestern Securities companies into one great securities company, and ultimately to form the "International Securities company," which shall control the railroad and steamship lines of the world. The railroad magnate who makes the statement says the success of the plan depends largely upon the result of the suit against the Northern Securities company.

TRY TO WRECK A FAST TRAIN.

Tramps Put Heavy Truck on Track, but Attempt Is Frustrated.

Kenosha, Wis., Jan. 14.—An attempt was made here to wreck a Northwestern south-bound passenger train, but, thanks to the timely arrival of a heavy freight train, which struck the obstruction which had been placed on the track, the attempt came to naught. A crowd of boisterous tramps and lofers had been about the station, and when the fast freight passed through the city during the night a heavy baggage truck was found blocking the track. The engineer of the freight failed to see the obstruction and struck it when the train was running at a high rate of speed. Had the lighter passenger train struck the obstruction a wreck would doubtless have resulted.

SETTLERS FOR SOUTH DAKOTA.

Many Inquiries as to Land Received From Eastern States.

Aberdeen, S. D., Jan. 14.—Hon. Harry Hunter, representing the land department of the Milwaukee company, has arranged to open an office here for the handling of South Dakota lands and the locating of settlers from the more Eastern states. The activity displayed in real estate circles is something remarkable, especially at this season of the year. B. H. Lien, J. H. Sharon and other Sioux Falls capitalists have closed a deal for sixty-five quarters of land and it is understood that Lea & Prentes, M. L. Fox and others of Vermillion have secured option on about fifty quarters, all west of this city. Active efforts will be put forth to dispose of these lands to actual settlers, thus developing the country as never before.

WOMAN ROASTED TO DEATH.

Circumstances Show That She Had Made an Awful Struggle for Life.

Marinette, Wis., Jan. 14.—Mrs. Lena Christel, aged seventy, was literally roasted to death Saturday night. Her charred remains were found in her room by a policeman who had seen smoke issuing from the place. The woman's death was a mysterious one, and Martin Christel, her son, is in jail to await an investigation. She was a Russian. Circumstances indicate that she had made an awful struggle for life as her body was found some distance from the bed, where she had been lying sick.

WAS ONCE MAID FOR VICTORIA.

Racine Woman, Now Too Old to Work, Finds Refuge in Hospital.

Racine, Wis., Jan. 14.—Miss Mary Harrison, seventy-four years old, who has no friends or money, has found a home at St. Mary's hospital, where she has been the past five years. Miss Harrison claims that when a young woman she was a servant in the household of Queen Victoria. During that time she became engaged to marry a young man. The engagement was broken and she came to America and never married. Five years ago she became too old to work.

Died in a Smelter.

Rapid City, S. D., Jan. 14.—James J. Donahue died suddenly at the new smelter building here Thursday evening. He was found several minutes afterward lying face downward, having evidently fallen forward. There were several slight cuts on the face, but the coroner's jury investigated the case carefully and concluded that death was caused by heart disease. Donahue came from Springfield, Mass., three weeks ago and was assisting in the erection of the steel structure for the smelter.

Children Forced to Steal.

Ottumwa, Iowa, Jan. 14.—The members of thirteen families are under arrest here, charged with the wholesale theft of coal from the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul chutes at Ottumwa Junction. An average of thirty tons a week has been stolen, and it is claimed that wagons and horses had been purchased for the purpose of hauling the stolen coal and that the children of the families were compelled to commit the thefts.

Indians Are Quiet.

Forsythe, Mont., Jan. 14.—Charles Straw, who arrived in Forsythe yesterday from Cheyenne agency at Lame Deer, says Friday was issue day for the Indians, and appeared at the post excepting two or three, who, their companions claimed, were hunting and had lost horses in the hills. Everything is quiet at present and no more trouble is feared.

Curfew Rings Every Night.

Madison, Wis., Jan. 14.—Madison has a curfew law. The common council has passed an audience requiring children to be off the street by 8 o'clock in the evening in winter, and 9 o'clock in summer. The vote of the aldermen was a tie, and mayor Bull cast the deciding vote in favor of the ordinance.

Robbery at Belleville, Mich.

Belleville, Mich., Jan. 14.—The store of F. L. Robbe was entered by three masked men, who held up the occupants of the room and decamped with the money sack at the cashier's desk.

A Babe Abandoned.

Hastings, Minn., Jan. 14.—Considerable of a sensation was caused here over the discovery of an infant girl babe, aged about five or six weeks, which had been abandoned by a transient couple at a leading hotel here.

Horses for South Africa.

Spearfish, S. D., Jan. 14.—J. P. Gammon is buying saddle-and-work horses for the English government and shipping to a receiving officer at Denver. He shipped one car load last week and will make another shipment to-day.

NORDICA IN WRECK

FAMOUS SINGER INJURED IN A BAD RAILROAD COLLISION.

ENGINEER MAKES BAD GUESS

ONE MAN IS KILLED AND THREE OTHERS RECEIVE SERIOUS INJURIES.

DIVA THROWN FROM HER BERTH

BOTH ENGINES BADLY WRECKED AND TWELVE CARS ARE BURNED.

Rome, Ga., Jan. 14.—As a result of a collision between a passenger and a freight on the Southern railway at an early hour yesterday morning near Reeves Station, twenty miles north of Rome, Mme. Lillian Nordica, the singer, was injured, her accompanist, E. Romaine Simmons, sustained a bruised hand, an engineer was killed and three other employes of the road were injured.

The train, to which Mme. Nordica's private car, the Brunhilde, was attached, was a mixed passenger and freight, and left Atlanta at 11:30 Saturday night for Chattanooga. It arrived at Reeve's Station at 3:30 yesterday morning, where it had orders to meet freight No. 55. A freight train which proved to be an extra was on the siding at Reeve's when the passenger arrived, and the engineer of the passenger evidently assuming that it was No. 55, did not stop, but continued his run toward Chattanooga.

Crashed Together.

A mile north of Reeve's Station, while going at a rapid rate, the passenger met the freight on a sharp curve. The two engines crashed into each other and Engineer Tracey in attempting to jump was caught between the two locomotives and crushed to death.

Mme. Nordica's car was attached to the rear of the passenger train. She sang at Atlanta Saturday night and was on her way to Nashville, where she is booked to fill an engagement to-night. When the collision occurred Mme. Nordica was asleep in her bed in the private stateroom of the car. The sudden jar threw the diva from her bed to the floor. It is understood that she sustained a and the muscles of her neck are said to have been strained. Dr. Garlington, the Southern railway's surgeon here, was immediately summoned and attended the singer. The doctor stated that Mme. Nordica was not badly hurt, and that he thought she would be able to fill her engagement to-night.

Mr. Simmons, her accompanist, sustained injuries to his right hand. The exact condition of the injured member was not ascertained here, but it is understood he will be able to play to-night.

Mme. Nordica's car was not derailed, and, together with two other Pullmans, was returned to Rome and sent over the Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis to Nashville. Both engines were badly wrecked and twelve cars, it is said, were burned. The engineer and fireman of the freight escaped by jumping, but were both badly bruised.

EXPEDITION SUCCESSFUL.

American Soldiers Destroy Property in Batangas Province.

Manila, Jan. 14.—The news received from Batangas province is cheerful. The expedition of Loboo in Batangas has been a complete success. The columns under Colonels Wint and Wells have destroyed a large number of barracks and hamlets and enough rations to keep 20,000 Filipinos for six months. There was not a single American casualty during the entire expedition. The enemy fled before the Americans, many of them were killed and several surrendered.

Maj. Henry Allen, formerly governor of the Island of Leyte and now chief of the insular constabulary, who has been making a tour of inspection through the Islands of Leyte and Mindanao, has returned to Manila and reports that the native constabulary is fully able to control the situation in the Province of Misamis, in Northern Mindanao, where he thinks the situation has been much exaggerated. Previous reports concerning this province caused Generals Davis and Wade to request that it be returned from civil to military control.

With the exception of the church, the entire town of Quinque, in Bulucan province, Luzon, has burned to the ground, and thousands of Filipinos have been rendered homeless.

EX-BOSS CROKER.

Tammany Leader for Third of a Century Announces His Retirement.

New York, Jan. 14.—Richard Croker announced his retirement from the formal leadership of Tammany Hall on Saturday afternoon. The announcement was made at the meeting of the executive committee at which the plan of organization for the year 1902 was agreed upon. Lewis Nixon was chosen as Mr. Croker's successor as chairman of the finance committee. This position, by long usage, carries with it the leadership of the organization. In announcing the name of Mr. Nixon for the chairmanship of the finance committee, George M. Van Hosen, president of the general committee, said that the step was taken at the desire of Mr. Croker himself.

Two Men Fatally Injured.

Chicago, Jan. 14.—A fast Pennsylvania passenger train from New York crashed into the rear of another express from Cincinnati at Wentworth avenue. Two trainmen were perhaps fatally injured. No passengers were injured.

Heavy Loss by Fire.

Brinkley, Ark., Jan. 14.—Fire has destroyed several buildings here, including the Arlington hotel, entailing a loss estimated at $50,000 to $75,000. Charles Starkey of Stuttgart, Ark., perished in the hotel.

Rickerby's Folly

By TOM GALLON

CHAPTER X. (Continued.)

Anthony Taggett sat all the rest of the day, and far into the evening, turning over certain thoughts in his mind. That mind was, as has been shown, an imaginative and speculative one; and it saw possibilities in matters that ordinary man would have dismissed as commonplace. Above all things, he saw, in this curious suggestion of ghostly presences in the house, possibilities too great to be thought of lightly; three or four times that evening, while he sat deep in thought, he changed the whole plan of that wonderful first act of his—seeing ghostly effects, limelight, gauzes, and other things which should make for illusion. In all probability, he had no distinct belief in the matter; he merely regarded all he had heard as mere suggestion, to be used for his own purposes.

Night drew on, and the lights gradually went out in the house; but still Mr. Taggett sat brooding over the last lighted half-inch of candle in the candlestick and planning surprising effects. Mrs. Taggett had long since gone to bed, and the last outside business which appealed to Mr. Taggett's waking senses, was the chiming of a clock somewhere outside, giving forth the hour of 2. Mr. Taggett woke from his species of half-doze and started to his feet. The thought that had come to him in that dreadful silence of the place had sent a sort of cold chill down his spine; but he did not think of that. In the cause of art and realism he was brave.

"If I could see for myself what the place looks like," he muttered. "The lights streaming in from moon and stars outside through the windows; the night wind rustling through broken windows and rotten shutters, the rats scuttling behind the wainscot, the furniture taking on dim shapes in the semi-darkness. (I will! I will!" Mr. Taggett clapped himself on the breast. "Then let the critics howl—let them rave; I shall be able to say: 'This is no effort of the mere imagination! All this have I seen—and felt—and heard!'"

Now, Mr. Taggett felt bound in all things he did to act the part, whatever it might be, to the life. In eating the most simple meal he set about it with a flourish as though he presided at a state banquet; poured out table beer with the air of one filling golden goblets with rich wines; and spread his legs and his elbows to the best advantage. The mere putting on of his clothes was a business which he performed with an indescribable air; and he went to bed in the attitude of a man who expected to be roused from slumber thirty seconds later with the limelight full on him, the dagger of a hired assassin at his throat, and a battle all over the stage in prospect. Thus, on this occasion, knowing that he had, in a sense, to play the ghost, he determined to play it in conventional form.

There was an old press in the corner of the room—a press which had about it a suggestion of household linen. He went to it and cautiously pulled it open. There he found some carefully-folded sheets; taking out one of them, he shook it out to its full length, and then drew it about him. He put it on, in the fashion of those extraordinary cloaks, of no known shape, are sometimes worn on the stage, with one end thrown over his left shoulder and a long tail trailing behind. Thus equipped, he felt that he could meet any respectable ghost that happened to be about, and look it in the face without shame or confusion.

Lastly, as a precautionary measure, and in order that he might glide along in that silent fashion, most in favor with the ghostly fraternity, he slipped off his shoes, and stood in his stocking feet.

"Now am I ready. I have a thought that I shall see such things this night as few men have ever seen. But I care not; I go forth in the sacred cause of art; and I know that this will bear good fruit in the future. I am studying at first hand."

Mr. Anthony Taggett crept downstairs, stopping, with a quaking heart, whenever a board creaked or whenever he stumbled against any article of furniture in the darkness. But all was still as the grave. At last he gained the lower floor, and was making for the door which gave on to the garden with greater confidence, when he became aware of a light bobbing along slowly towards him. In an agony of dread, he drew back flat against the wall, with a fervent prayer on his lips that whatever was coming might pass him by and not see him.

But it was not to be; the light came on, and behind it he saw the figure of the woman called Jemima, whom he had seen about the house before. Mr. Taggett fully anticipated a scream, a dropping of the light, a rousing of the house; he braced himself to be prepared for anything.

But instead of that, Jemima stopped, calmly, in front of him, and slowly waved the candle about, to take him in from all points of view; murmured, as if to herself, "That there Taggett man!" calmly took a corner of the sheet between her finger and thumb, and remarked, in the same tone, "And one of the 'ouse's best sheets!" With that, she dropped the corner of the sheet and went bobbing along again, undisturbed, to bed.

"A most singular female," muttered Mr. Taggett, looking after her. "I wonder what she'd do if the house caught fire!"

He softly drew back the bolts of the big outer door and felt the cold night wind blowing upon him. He had no suspicion that there was any special way into that uninhabited second house; he had determined to get out into the garden and endeavor to find a way into the place from there. It was pitch dark, and he had to find his way along against the wall of the house, trusting merely to luck to guide him.

He was groping about near what he believed to be a doorway, when the door itself was sharply opened from within; stumbling back hastily into the shadows, he saw a flood of light pour out—light which evidently came from a lantern, for it was shut off immediately. Then he heard the sound of feet, and two men came out of the doorway, bearing something between them. He could see, dimly, that one man was very tall and the other very short. They laid what they carried softly on the ground, and the taller one closed the door; then Anthony Taggett heard brief whispers between them.

"Where—where will you bury him?" asked the little man.

"Over there," whispered the other, stretching out a shadowy arm, to indicate the place he meant; "there, behind those bushes, near the wall. Come—bring him along."

Mr. Taggett had had enough; with a sort of suppressed shriek, he turned to run; got himself twisted up in some extraordinary fashion, in the tail of the sheet, and pitched forward, heavily, into the arms of the tall man, who caught him and held him in a grip like a vice.

CHAPTER XI.

The Burial in the Garden.

Constitutionally, Mr. Anthony Taggett was not a brave man; whatever bravado he put on for the profession he put on with the clothes which were a part of the bravado, and shed it, as he shed them, when the curtain fell. So that, at the moment when he was caught in that strong grip and entangled in that disastrous sheet—he felt himself helpless and at the mercy of an apparently desperate man—he capitulated rapidly and completely. He fell upon his knees and sputtered out a prayer that he might be mercifully dealt with.

After what seemed a very eternity of time he was jerked to his feet and found himself facing the strong rays of the lantern, which had been picked up and turned on again. Then he heard an exclamation of astonishment, and the light was turned off swiftly; yet still the tall man kept that grip upon his arm. And still the body lay almost at his feet.

"You don't know me, Mr. Anthony Taggett?" said a voice which seemed familiar to him—"at least, you won't know me at present. But you see that I know you."

"Y—yes—I—I—see you do," said Mr. Taggett, nervously. "Let me assure you at once that I had—had no desire to—to intrude in any way upon you—or upon the other excellent gentleman I can dimly see at your elbow. We—all have our little—our little private businesses—to attend to"—he glanced at that dim shape on the ground—"and I would not for the world interfere—in any such matters."

"Unfortunately, Mr. Taggett," said the voice again, "you have interfered; or rather you have blundered upon a matter which, for obvious reasons, we wanted to keep to ourselves. Mr. Taggett, there is a dead man lying at your feet—(don't jump like that, man!)—and we are about to bury him. I'm afraid that we must press you into the service. You were ever a man with a taste for realism, Mr. Taggett; you'll have it, with a vengeance, to-night!"

"Gentlemen," said the unhappy actor, "if you will permit me to return to the house and to take my place by the side of the sleeping Mrs. Taggett, I swear to you that I will be asleep in as short a space of time as is compatible with my over-wrought nerves; and that I will forget everything that I have seen or heard to-night. Gentlemen, I am a peaceful citizen; and whatever may be my desires in the way of realism on the stage, I can assure you, that I have had more than enough of it to-night. Gentlemen, I would dissemble!"

The tall man laughed grimly, and seemed to take a tighter hold of Anthony Taggett's arm. "Presently, Mr. Taggett," he said, "you shall look on my face; you shall hear strange things; shall have old lies refuted—shall look upon a man you never thought to see again. Meanwhile, I pledge you my word that if you will be silent, and will help me if necessary you shall not regret it, and you will not be doing anything which should be against the conscience of a good man."

Mr. Taggett had suddenly begun to tremble very much; he stretched out one hand, and, in a shaking whisper, exclaimed: "Give me that lantern—quick!"

"What do you want with the lantern?" asked the voice again.

"I want to see your face," whispered Mr. Taggett, trembling, yet still in a bolder voice. "I know your voice now; I am shaken all to pieces—but, alive or dead, Gilbert Rickerby, I know you! Give me the lantern!"

"Let him have it," said the voice again, apparently speaking to the little man, who had been silent all this time. Then the light was turned on with a click, and Mr. Taggett stretched out his hand for it, seized it, and tremblingly turned the light upon the figure of the tall man.

"Keep it down, keep it down!" whispered the man. "Do you want to rouse the house, and bring them out upon us in the midst of this business? That's it"—as the light fell upon his face. Do you know me now?"

"My Laertes!" exclaimed Mr. Taggett, with emotion. "To look again upon the face of one who has been, in more prosperous times, my chief walking-gent! To see the man who has held Medora Taggett in his arms on occasion, what time she scorned the offer of his love! But, my friend, how come you to revisit thus the glimpses of the moon, to stalk at night—"

"Taggett—you are the same old Taggett I remember so well; and you are, unconsciously, raising your voice. There is no gallery here, Taggett; this is a matter of silence, with all lights down." He caught hold of the lantern, as he spoke, and shut off the light. "Yes, there's no doubt about it that I am alive in spite of all that anyone may say to the contrary. But I am in hiding here, and to-night I have to perform the gruesome task of burying a murdered man."

"You—you are not rehearsing anything, are you, Rickerby?" asked Taggett, as a gleam of hope shot into his mind.

"No. This is solid, sober earnest, unfortunately. The man we are to bury to-night was killed in mistake for me, and hidden in that empty house. This good friend of mine, Mr. Reeks, knows all about it, and is helping me." Mr. George Reeks was seen in the semi-darkness, to bow, in acknowledgment of the introduction; he appeared, at the same time, to shiver, violently.

"There is no time to explain matters now," went on Gilbert. "We must get this thing done. Tell me, as quickly as possible, what you're doing here, and waht mad prank you were playing in that sheet when you stumbled into my arms."

"My dear young friend," began Anthony Taggett, lowering his voice to suit the occasion—"I had heard a great deal about the haunting of this house."

"Haunted, indeed—poor, unhappy, old place!" exclaimed Gilbert, glancing round at the dark windows. "What is to be the end of it all, I wonder, what other fate awaits you? Black murder and midnight burial, and men flying from the place with terror-stricken faces to die violent deaths! Forgive me, Taggett," he broke off, and glanced round at the two men. "I have seen such things in this place as few men see anywhere. But, no matter how you come, I am glad to see you; I have need of all my friends about me now, if I ever had need of them in my life. Now, tell me, how did you come here, and who is with you?"

Mr. Taggett, as briefly as possible, and not without much dramatic gesture and much waving of a white-sheeted arm towards the night-sky, gave a full and particular account of all that had happened to him since he set out to walk from Bristol; of the meeting on the road with Ursula Sewell; the coming to the house; even the meeting that day with the strange son of old Cornelius Veevers. This last piece of news appeared to puzzle Gilbert Rickerby more than anything else.

"Old Veevers' son!" he exclaimed. "There must surely be some mistake. I was always led to believe that Jemima's child died when it was a mere baby. You're quite sure he said he was a son?"

"Absolutely certain," replied Taggett. "The woman you call Jeminma appeared to recognize him, and spoke with delight of the way in which he had grown."

After puzzling over the matter a moment or two in silence, Gilbert Rickerby appeared to cast the thing out of his mind; turning about, in a business-like fashion, he stooped over the body and spoke sharply to Mr. Reeks:

"Come, we have no time to lose," he said. "I'm sorry to drag you into this business, Mr. Reeks, but you know how I am situated, and what I have to do."

"I was thinking," said Mr. Reeks, hesitatingly, "that your good friend, Mr. Taggett, might care to take my place. So far as I can see in this light, there is more of an official look about him, and he is, besides, a much bigger man."

"My dear sir," said Anthony Taggett, hastily, "I have no desire to step in and take your duties from you. My costume is, I admit, somewhat ridiculous; but I feel that I shall grace this occasion more as a spectator, and, by hovering about, to prevent surprise, than by taking any actual active part in it."

"Very well, sir," replied Mr. Reeks, resignedly. He stooped and picked up one end of the burden; together he and Gilbert Rickerby lifted it and began to bear it away towards an angle of the high wall, where a clump of bushes was planted thickly. Mr. Taggett, who had got hold of the lantern again, followed slowly, tucking up one end of the sheet over his arm, and plowing his way among the weeds and the dead leaves of many past years.

Just as they reached the clump of bushes the three of them stopped dead; there had come, from the other side of the double house, a violent ringing of a bell—the bell which was attached to the outer gate. As if by common consent, they laid their burden down, in the shadow of the bushes, and dropped silently down on the ground themselves.

"For heaven's sake, Taggett, take off that ridiculous sheet," whispered Gilbert, impatiently. "It will draw attention to us, for certain, if you go fluttering about in that fashion! Take it off, man!"

"I have already explained to you, Mr. Rickerby," came the whispered reply, "that I merely donned it for purposes of my art. As it is likely to compromise you, and as it is, moreover, confoundedly in the way of my legs, I obey with pleasure." He slipped out of the garment as he spoke, and thrust it behind him.

After quite a long time, during which the ringing of the bell was once or twice renewed, the three men, crouching down in the darkness, heard the sounds of the drawing of bolts and the creaking of a door; saw a light go dancing across the darkness in the distance. Then a man's growling tones and the shrill voice of a female in reply.

"Don't tell me, old Guy Fawkes!" exclaimed an angry voice. "I tell you the man came here hours ago—and I have seen nothing of him since. I don't leave this place until I have him, alive or dead!"

Mr. Reeks seemed to sink lower towards the ground, and groaned softly. "I thought I knew that voice," he murmured.

"I know it, too," said Gilbert, with a laugh. "She appears to be fond of you, Mr. Reeks."

"Sir, she adores me!" was the whispered reply. "I only hope she'll go away; she's the sort of woman who would stop here all night, and pull the house down, if she thought they were detaining me. You don't know my Lily."

"I'm afraid I've let you in for a lot of trouble," said Gilbert, penitently. "How will you explain matters to her?"

"Heaven knows!" exclaimed Mr. Reeks, with another groan. "What does it matter? Whatever I tell her she's not likely to believe; if I told her one-half of what has happened to me to-night she'd say I was raving mad. I really think, gentlemen," he added, "that you had better put me quietly out of my misery and bury me with the other man!"

In a few minutes however, the voice of the lady at the gate had died down to a more reasonable tone; she was even heard to express an apology for having disturbed anyone at such a late hour. They heard Cornelius shut the gate; saw his lantern bobbing about in the darkness as he went grumbling back to the house; heard him talk to someone, who callenged him from a window above, and explain who the visitor had been and what was wanted; heard the house door bang—and then silence.

They got up from the ground and set about their ghastly work. The light of the lantern was turned on again, and it was set upon the ground, so that the rays would fall upon the lower part of the wall and attract no attention; Gilbert pulled out an old, rusty spade from the shelter of the bushes, where it had evidently been placed in readiness for the work; and, with vigorous strokes, began to turn the hard earth.

Then came another interruption—and this time a more startling one than the first. Out from that dark house, from which they had carried the body, came a figure straight towards them; in its hand it carried another lantern, which threw broader beams of light about its path than their own feeble, glimmering ray could have done. Terrified, they drew together, and stopped the work, and waited its coming.

"Keep steady, and stand clear of my arm," whispered Gilbert, straightening his back and grasping the spade. "If this is old Cornelius, or that villain, his master, Heaven have mercy on them!"

They stood, in absolute silence, awaiting the coming of the figure. But when it got to within a few yards of where they stood, and Gilbert Rickerby had already raised the spade in his hands to strike, they saw by the light of the lantern, that this was no man come to spy upon them, no creature to be dealt with by blows. Instead, the bowed figure of an old woman, who came, quite calmly, up to them, and, after a glance at the body, while they stood in stupefaction, looking at her, said, quietly, in a sort of gentle murmur:

"You don't seem to 'ave a good light 'ere, Master Gilbert. Don't you mind me; if you stands a-staring like that you won't never git done afore daylight."

Still they stared at her; and at last Gilbert asked, in a low voice of wonder: "But do you know, Jemima, what we're doing? Do you know that this man—"

"Don't talk—don't talk!" she replied, with an impatient gesture of her hand. "There's many things I know and see, and yet say nothing about. But, oh—the time is comin'—the time is comin' fast!" She raised her eyes to the dark sky above her, and seemed to whisper the words to herself.

Without further words, Gilbert went to work at a great rate, and soon cleared out a space deep enough to serve for a grave. Reverently they laid the burden in; and then, before replacing the earth, Gilbert Rickerby knelt and made shift to say some sort of prayer over the man who had served him faithfully and who had met his death in his service.

"Oh, God," he whispered, "let it be, that what I say, humbly and sorrowfully, over this poor clay to-night, may reach high Heaven and find favor. There is no service like that this poor fellow gave—which gives all, even life itself, and seeks for nothing in return. Grant that he may rest as lightly here as he might in any place where Thy children sleep. And, oh, God!"—he started to his feet and savagely clenched his hands—"give me the power and the strength to track down the man who did this thing—give me the power—give me the—"

He broke down utterly there and covered his face with his hands and sobbed aloud. After a few moments he recovered himself, and set to work to obliterate all traces of the burial, as much as possible, distributing the earth among the roots of the bushes and making the general surface of the ground as level as he could. That done, he thrust the spade into its former hiding place, then stood up and addressed the three who watched him:

"Remember," he said, "that I swear you all to secrecy about this thing until I can speak of it myself. Mr. Reeks, here, knows why I have hidden the body of my poor servant like this. It is for the sake of a young and innocent girl; and for her sake, I remain now in this accursed place, instead of leaving the shadow of it forever behind me, as I wish to do. Mr. Taggett, the time may come when I may have need of your help—and I know you will not fail me. For the present, Mr. Reeks is going to help me; he has promised to take charge of this young lady for a little time, until I can take charge of her myself. Taggett, you were ever a good actor—"

"Sir," replied Anthony Taggett, with emotion, and with a hand on his breast, "you are one of the few who have deigned to say so."

"And you will, I am sure, play a good part here. Dissemble, my friend, as much as possible; whether your stay in this house be long or short, keep a watchful eye on Nugent Leathwood, and say nothing of the events of to-night."

"Trust me, Mr. Rickerby," replied Taggett. "I will twine my way about his heart and find out from him all that is to be found out. In this, fortunately for myself, Providence is again good to me; I see a great part, in that drama which has yet to be written—the part of a man—a very sleuth hound of sleuth hounds, who remorselessly tracks down his victim, who woos his secret from him, and at last, in the final act, practically falls upon him and rends him; always—mind you—in a gentlemanly fashion. I think he will probably smoke a cigarette."

It was at this moment that Jemima, who had been standing quietly, listening, did an extraordinary thing. She dropped down upon the ground, so as to obscure the light of the two lanterns; after fumbling for a moment, both were out, and the three conspirators drew, instinctively, closer together and looked at the old woman, who had risen again to her feet.

"What is it?" asked Gilbert, in the mere breath of a whisper.

"Someone is dodging about among the trees across there," she answered, in the same cautious tone, with a nod of the head in the direction she meant to indicate. "I thought I seed 'im just now—but I wasn't sure. My eyes is pretty good; I think it's someone in a long, gray coat."

"Yes, I see him," said Gilbert, between his teeth. "How long do you think he has been there?"

"Nothing ain't moved there this ever so long," whispered the old woman. "I thought it was the lighter shadder between two of the trees; it must 'ave bin there nearly all the time."

"Good Heavens!—probably seen everything," muttered Gilbert. "Mr. Taggett, will you make a circuit in that direction, towards the gate, so as to cut him off if he makes for that? Mr. Reeks, stay here; I know he's taller than you are—but you can catch him by the legs and throw him if he should come towards you. I'm going straight up to him."

Slowly, and in absolute silence, the three men started to do as arranged. Gilbert moved straight towards that gray shadow among the trees. The gray shadow saw the movement and started forward into the light, then turned and began to make for the gate at a smart pace, Mr. Taggett doubling hard in the same direction.

Chamberlain Aided by His Wife.

It is said that Mr. Joseph Chamberlain goes over the contents of his speeches in the presence of his wife, and takes kindly to her criticisms and suggestions. This being the case, Mr. Chamberlain's best friends regard it as unfortunate that she does not induce him to forego the acrid and uncharitable and cheap flings at opponents, with which he degrades the tone of his public utterances. In one part of his Edinburgh speech, Mr. Chamberlain, considering the manner of the recent dismissal of Sir Redvers Buller from the army, laid himself open to attack. He admitted that the government had made many mistakes. He said to his audience: "Why do you not recognize the good things we have done? We have erred; we are the first to admit it. But we think, in the light of what we have accomplished, we should be forgiven and should be trusted further by the people." If Mr. Chamberlain had urged a view similar to this when certain members of his cabinet were discussing the fate of Buller, the old general would probably still command.—London Correspondence Chicago Daily News.

That Wonderful Woman.

This is what the economical young woman did. She needed one of those pretty little jackets of silk, wadded and warm, to wear under a light outside coat. She found just what she wished in one of the shops, but, alas! it cost six whole dollars! She had made up her mind to take it the first time she saw it, for it was the identical thing she needed, but she hesitated at the price, and decided to think it over. But this was the case in which the woman who hesitates is saved.

"I could make you one of those with but very little trouble and for half the price," exclaimed the young woman's sister, hearing of the coat. That was too good an offer not to accept at once. The materials were purchased, and almost in less time than it would have taken to go to the shop and buy it, a pretty jacket was made, exactly as good as any that could have been found in the best of shops, and it cost only $1.50. It was made of China silk, it will wear for a long time, and the girl feels that she has made a clear $4.50.—New York Times.

What the Serious Youth Wanted.

The editor glanced up. A grave-looking youth stood in the doorway. He wore a broad-brimmed black hat and a white tie, in addition to some other things, and nodded with dignity as he caught the editor's eye.

The young man stepped forward, and the editor's heart warmed to him. He thought that here, brightly contrasted with the frivolity of most men of his age, stood the serious youth. Life was not all a playground for him.

"What can I do for you, sir?" he asked.

The youth coughed to clear his throat.

"Sir," he said, "Mr. Editor, some of the girls down to our place hev mislaid their rules for flirtin' with th' handkerchief, an' they'd like to have you publish 'em again."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Taught King Edward VII.

In the couse of an address delivered at Toronto by Prof. Goldwin Smith—professor emeritus of history at Cornell university—the fact was brought to light a few days ago that King Edward VII. had studied history under him. The professor said:

"As professor of history at Oxford I had one interesting and delightful student—our present king. While he was at Oxford I used to lecture him privately, and afterward had to go and examine him. He never allowed me to see that he was bored, and the king who could be bored by a professor without showing that he was bored should be able to listen to a municipal address."—New York Times.

She Knew Better.

"But I can't cast Binks for that part," protested the manager of the amateur theatrical company, in answer to the request of the heroine. "He doesn't know how to play the lover."

"He doesn't?" she exclaimed. "Well, that's all you know about it. Why, he—"

Then she stopped and blushed.

"I mean in public," said the manager.

Thereupon she blushed some more.—Chicago Post.

FOUND AMERICANS BUYING LAND AT SASKATCHEWAN, WESTERN CANADA.

A Michigan Farmer Visits Saskatoon and is Well Pleased.

Mr. S. K. Lent was a delegate sent from the farmers of Allegan County, Michigan, to Western Canada, to report on the prospects for successful settlement. His report is as follows: I went from Winnipeg to Edmonton, thence east one hundred miles, by wagon. I found the country in that vicinity a rich, black loam, varying from 12 inches to 3 feet deep; the crops are simply something enormous; wheat and oats by actual measurement often standing five feet in height. I have been a farmer for forty years, and consider myself a fair judge of the yield of grain, and I saw wheat that would yield 50 bushels per acre, and oats that would yield 100 bushels per acre; not one alone, but a good many. As for root crops and garden truck, in no country have I ever seen their equal for all kinds except corn and tomatoes; the nights being too cool for these to ripen well. As a stock country it has no equal. East of Edmonton, on the head waters of the Vermillion River, I saw hay meadows containing from 10 to 100 acres, the grass standing 4 feet high, and would often cut 3 to 4 tons to the acre. From Edmonton I passed through some fine locations, namely, Wetaskiwin, Lacombe and other points.

From McLeod I went to Regina, thence to Prince Albert, 247 miles north of the main line. For the first fifty miles is fine farming country, but the next hundred miles is more of a stock country. Then at Saskatoon, Rosthern and Duck Lake I found some very fine farming country, so good that I found a party of Americans from Minnesota buying land for themselves—one party buying 12 sections, and the other 20 sections of land for themselves, which they proposed to improve at once.

I have traveled over twenty-three different States and Territories in our Union, and never in my life time have I ever seen such magnificent crops and especially as fine a stock country.

The Petition Was Granted.

A pretty little anecdote is going the rounds of the Roman press. An old lady, the widow of an officer, who had for many years appealed to the Italian government for recognition of her husband's services, but had never received an answer. A bright idea came to her, and she wrote to "Her Royal Highness, the Princess Yolanda."

When the letter was handed to the king, he read it with a smile, and then bade his chamberlain take it to the princess and read it to her. The chamberlain went to the baby and gravely read the letter aloud to her, and then returned to the king.

"Well," said the king, "what did the princess say?"

"Nothing, your majesty."

"Very well. Silence gives consent. See that the lady's petition is attended to."—New York Press.

An Important Discovery.

Detroit, Mich., Jan. 13.—A sensational statement is made by Mr. Benjamin Major, whose home is at the corner of Jane and Hurlbut Ave., this city.

Mr. Major says that he has found a remedy which will positively cure all Kidney and Bladder troubles. He suffered himself for a long time with these diseases in the most painful form, and during his illness experimented with a great many medicines without getting any relief. Finally, he tried Dodd's Kidney Pills, and, to his great joy, was cured completely.

The statement he makes seems to have ample confirmation in reports being published every day of wonderful cures by this remedy.

ANOTHER REMARKABLE CASE

Which the Doctors Failed to Cure or Understand.

A Medical man as a rule dislikes to acknowledge the value of a proprietary medicine—in fact, professional etiquette debars him from doing so. Yet there are many eminent physicians, those most advanced in their professions, who give full credit to the great curative properties of Vogeler's Curative Compound, from the fact that it is manufactured by an old and reliable company, proprietors of St. Jacob's Oil, from the formula of a brother physician, who to-day stands in the front ranks of the most eminent medical men in London, and on account of its intrinsic merit, it is largely prescribed by the medical profession; but, in the case which we are about to relate, the attending physician called it "rubbish," but, as it turned out, Mrs. Nettleton tells the doctor that "rubbish or not, it saved her life."

Mrs. Nettleton graphically relates the particulars of her own case, which will doubtless be of interest to many of our lady readers:

"I had been an intense sufferer for many years from dyspepsia, liver and kidney troubles, when a little pamphlet was placed in my hands, and, *although at that time I had been bed*ridden for more than six months, I determined, after reading some of the wonderful testimonials therein of cases similar to mine, which had been completely cured by the timely use of Vogeler's Curative Compound, to try some, especially as my doctors failed to even benefit me, and I had almost given up all hope of ever being well again. It is most interesting, and, in fact, marvelous to relate, that the very first dose of fifteen drops relieved me. It was not long before I was able to get up and about; three months from taking the first dose I was enjoying better health than I had been for fourteen years. I continued well until a few months back, when I was taken ill again, my troubles being dyspepsia and constipation. I had a doctor attending me for a month, but continued to grow worse, until I again found myself bedridden, when I bethought myself of my old medicine, Vogeler's Curative Compound, which I immediately sent for and took in place of the doctor's medicine; at that time I had not had a movement of the bowels for five days, but Vogeler's Curative Compound soon put me on my feet again—in fact, completely cured me a second time, but, of course, this attack was not as bad as the first, yet I fully believe I should not have been alive today had it not been for Vogeler's Curative Compound. If I had only thought to have taken it when my last illness took place, I should not only have been saved much suffering, but a $75 doctor's bill."

Mrs. Nettleton said: "I have recommended Vogeler's Curative Compound for indigestion and eczema, and in every case it has proved a cure beyond a doubt. Mr. Swinbank, our chemist, has sent me the names of no end of people who have been cured by Vogeler's Curative Compound. By the way, the proprietors have so much confidence in this great London physician's discovery, that they will send a sample free to any person sending name and address and naming this paper." St. Jacob's Oil Co, 205 Clay Street, Baltimore, Md.

Mrs. Nettleton is a confectioner, in the Brighton Road, where she has been established many years, and is honored and respected by all classes. Her statements as regards Vogeler's Curative Compound may, therefore, be regarded as reliable evidence of its great value. The public, however, may look upon this remarkable statement as one of the many which we are constantly receiving from grateful people all over the world, who have been cured of various maladies by the use of this wonderful remedy, which is the result of an eminent physician's life-long experience. These people are nearly always representative and well-known citizens.

FARM AND GARDEN.

MATTERS OF INTEREST TO AGRICULTURISTS.

Some Up-to-Date Hints About Cultivation of the Soil and Yields Thereof—Horticulture, Viticulture and Floriculture.

Suggestions by Gaylord.

From Farmers' Review: I am past 76 years of age and have been up since before daylight shredding fodder all day. I have finished milking seven cows, and am now seated at my desk looking over my many farm papers. As usual, I catch up the Farmers' Review among the first, for the reason that I always find something practical, interesting and instructive, especially in its horticultural columns. The article in a recent issue headed "Leaf Crumpler" is worth its weight in gold. The leaf crumpler has done me hundreds of dollars' worth of injury, and till now I have never known how to destroy it. I have seen the crumpled leaves and have examined them, but did not know that they had been rolled up by the insects that have eaten out and ruined so many grafts before the buds had little more than started. I shall go over my orchard and gather every crumpled leaf and burn it.

In your issue of November 27 I find two very interesting articles; one headed "Distance Apart to Plant Apple Trees." So far as the article goes, where the writer of it lives, it is probably all right. However, in all the great Northwest the theory there advocated is inapplicable. The writer, in speaking of an orchard set 25 by 25 feet, says the man does not know what to do with it, it is set so closely. I would say to our friend Doerr, "Just move that orchard over here, for it is just the thing for us. We would, however, recommend a slight change. We would set the trees thirty feet apart east and west and only 20 feet apart north and south. He advises cutting off the long branches. We accept this advice, as in very many cases here we need to thicken up the top, especially on the sunny side, so as to shut out the sun and avoid one of the worst difficulties that faces us—sunkilling, which kills more bearing trees than any other thing.

All experienced orchardists in this part of the Northwest head their apple trees very low, so as to shade the ground on the sun-side as much as possible. We strive to close up all openings on the sun-side, and shade the ground on the sun-side to keep the roots as cool and deep as possible. We always "head in" here, if at all, on the sun-side, so as not to let in the sun, but to thicken the branches and close up open spaces in the top. If we thin at all it is on the northeast side, for two important reasons. First, to open the top so as to give the picker a chance to get up into the tree to pick apples or destroy insects. Second, to force the sap into the branches on the sun side, so as to increase the branches on that side. In many instances here this is an imperative necessity.—Edson Gaylord, Floyd County, Iowa.

Difficulties of Cranberry Growers.

Reports concerning cranberry yields from various parts of the country indicate that the crop of 1901 in Wisconsin and other Western states is below that of last year. The Western cranberry crop has been pretty well cleaned up, but a considerable portion of the Eastern crop, which was large, is being held by growers in expectation of higher prices. The marketing of the fruit has given occasion for complaint over the uncertain standards of quality. Judge Gaynor of Grand Rapids, Wisconsin, it is said, will endeavor to have the National Cranberry Growers' Association at its next annual meeting in January, pass resolutions defining:

1st. "Pie Berries" as berries that will go through a ⅝ inch screen or as berries whose longest diameter is ⅝ of an inch or less.

2d. "Standard Berries" as "crop run," with the "pie berries" out. All the pie berries can not be taken out by screening, but not more than five in a hundred should be left in.

3d. "Crop run" berries as being all the berries in a given crop, just as they come from the field, with the dirt and chaff removed, without being run through a sizing screen.

4th. "Fancy Berries" as berries well colored and of a diameter of ⅝ inch and upwards.

5th. "Sound Berries" as berries in which there appears not more than 2 per cent discolored and decayed and not more than 5 per cent soft berries, not discolored or but slightly discolored, and not more than 10 per cent defective or blemished berries.

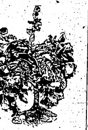
Growing Demand for Foresters.

The interest in forestry is rapidly increasng in this country. New forestry schools are constantly being opened. The attendance of students at these schools this fall is greater than ever before, though as yet the total number of students in the whole country is not large. This is due to the fact that the forestry school is a thing of the last few years. The number can only increase as the popular interest in forestry grows, as there will be no place for these young men to occupy, or in which to put their knowledge to use unless the opportunities for service are increased. Nearly every state in the Union should be doing much in forestry, and the work is so immense that its proper control should make room for the employment of thousands of educated foresters. Every state that has a large forest area can make no better investment than to spend money freely in paying the salaries of such men. Take the value of the timber wiped out by any one of our recent great forest fires and consider it in relation to the salaries of foresters. Then take the value of all the timber destroyed annually in this country and set it against the salaries of the foresters that should be the employed, and what is the result? The inevitable answer is that we must employ skilled labor to prevent waste.

Rape.

The rape plant has come into a good deal of prominence during the last ten years. Rape is known botanically as Brassica campestris, variety napus. Brassica is the family name for the cabbage, turnip and mustards. The rape plant is so closely allied to the cabbage and turnip that in the early stages of their growth the similarity in appearance is very striking. There are many varieties of rape, just as there are many varieties of cabbages and turnips. These varieties have been largely created by European cultivators.

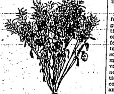
While the rape plant has been known in America for little more than ten years it has been known and appreciated in Europe for a long time. Some varieties are grown in Europe for their oily seeds, from which is made an oil of commerce. European stock-raisers have long been developing some varieties of rape for a stock feed. One of the best varieties is that developed in England in the vicinity of Essex, and hence known as dwarf Essex rape. This variety has a decided advantage over all others, at least over all others known on this side of the water. It has a heavy, thick, succulent leaf. The plant itself is a biennial, while there are many varieties of rape that are annuals. For forage uses the biennial is far superior to the annual for this reason: The biennial makes only a succulent growth the first year, making a woody growth and forming seed the second year. The period of wood and seed formation is a stage at which it is of very little use for forage. But this can be avoided by pasturing it only the first year, making a new seeding each year. The annuals, on the other hand, make all of their growth during a single season. They give material for pasturage while they are in the succulent stage, but soon become woody and begin to form seed, when they are of very little value for live stock.



Dwarf Essex Rape.

The Dwarf Essex rape is very succulent, both as to its leaves and stems. On ordinary soil it will produce ten tons of green fodder, and on very rich land has been known to produce twenty tons. Great care is needed in securing seed. For some years it was almost impossible to get the true Dwarf Essex when it was ordered. To illustrate the difficulty of getting good seed, we cite the fact of one of our American experiment stations that sent to Canada and obtained seed from the same importing firm that had been supplying the station at Guelph. They purchased 300 pounds; but the rape that came up proved to be an annual variety of rape known as Hybrid Bird Rape.

Rape may be sown from early spring till late summer, even as late as August. The best results as to crop are obtained by seeding about July first. Sowing broadcast is practiced, but drill sowing is preferred, for the reason that less seed is required; the plants can be readily cultivated; and the animals in pasturing do not trample it down so readily.



Hybrid Bird Rape.

We are certain that the rape plant should be given a larger place in our American agriculture than it now occupies. It is a plant well adapted to varied conditions, and especially servicable in emergencies.

Late information from Miss Ellen M. Stone, the missionary, and Mme. Tsilka indicates that their condition has been so far ameliorated that they are able to obtain rude comforts. The brigands complain that Miss Stone is trying to convert them to Christianity.

A young woman in New York who allowed herself to be inoculated by a physician with tuberculosis germs from an infected cow, in November, is said by the doctor to have developed the disease. He thinks that he has proved conclusively that Dr. Koch's theory is wrong.

The hay harvested in the United States in 1901 amounted to 50,000,000 tons.

Pasturing Wheat.

While it is not possible to accurately forecast the outcome of the wheat crop, reasonable prudence would suggest that for the present, wheat should not be pastured to any great extent. The conditions have been such during the summer and fall just past that much wheat was sown in soil that had been poorly prepared, and even with the best of preparation, there has not been sufficient moisture for vigorous growth. There were heavy rains during the fall of 1900 and the soil was filled with moisture and thoroughly saturated. With these conditions and favorable winter weather, wheat furnished an unusual amount of pasture last winter and was in some cases, actually benefited by pasturing. The conditions are entirely different at present. In general, the fall rains have been sufficient only to moisten the soil to a depth of about six inches while the subsoil has scarcely been reached by the water. The wheat is thus dependent upon the rains that come during the winter and while it is possible that there may be plenty of rain for the purpose, the average rainfall of past seasons has been insufficient. It is true that food is scarce and high in price and the wheat pasture sells for good prices. Some prefer to take what is to be had in the way of pasture from the wheat crop and to plant some other crop if the wheat is harmed by pasturing, fearing that possibly wheat may not yield well next harvest even if not pastured. Looked at in this light, pasturing wheat is profitable, even though it kills the wheat. But it will not do to follow the practice of last winter when it was scarcely possible to pasture wheat too heavily in Oklahoma.—Oklahoma Station Bulletin.

Cold as a Stimulant.

One rule cannot be established that will apply to all farm animals. The dairy cow is at one end of the line and the sheep at the other. A certain amount of cold is a stimulant to farm animals, especially to those with warm coverings. The natural covering of the sheep is a much better protection from the cold of winter than that possessed by most other domestic animals. It is evident that with a covering that permits little escape of heat, the food required to supply heat is greatly lessened. Among the keepers of sheep there is a wide divergence of opinion concerning the extent to which they should be housed in winter. There are cases extant where sheep have been fattened in open pens and compared with sheep fattened in closed pens. The ones the most exposed made the largest gains. Also, where sheep have been fattened under natural conditions as to temperature, a close record of the gains and of the daily temperature have shown the greatest gains during the coldest periods. In such cases it is evident that the cold was a stimulant. If so, then cold has as certain a value in feeding operations as have the various feeds. The problem is to find just where cold ceases to be a virtue, and becomes a menace. This field of inquiry is as yet practically untouched.

It has been suggested that sugar might sometimes be made out of sugar melons. This perhaps has naturally suggested itself because of the great sweetness to the taste of the white-fleshed melons. The fact, however, that the sugar in all melons is in the form of dextrose is likely to interfere with the plan of making sugar out of them. Of the edible part of any kind of a melon two things constitute about the whole—water and sugar. The analysis of the edible portion of a large number of sugar melons gave an average of water 95.15 per cent, sugar (dextrose) 3.430 per cent, a total for the two of 98.58 per cent. This leaves only 1.42 per cent to be divided between the potein, fat, nitrogen-free extract, crude fibre and ash. It may be surprising to learn that analysis of a large number of water melons showed them to have a larger amount of dextrose than did the sugar melons, giving water 93.690; dextrose 4.210.

Varied rations give best results in feeding for eggs. This is a truth quite generally proven. We cannot reason the matter out because we know little of the action on each other of the different kinds of foods. It is not enough to say that one kind of food contains so much nitrogen and another kind so much. That does not indicate the real value of any food. There are unknown actions produced by food combinations. Of oats it has been said, "They contain a stimulant not shown by the analysis." Some have even tried to name this stimulant "avoin." We do not know much about it. We do not see it. We only see its effects. This may not be a condition confined to oats. It may be possessed in some form by other foods. When we feed a variety we are very likely to be building better than we know. Make the poultry ration as varied as possible.

French Snail Gardens.

As is well known, certain species of snail form a favorite dish with French gourmets, and the cultivation of these land mollusca is conducted on a large scale in the outlying suburbs of Paris, particularly in the Department of Aube, where there are large snail gardens, with plantations of thyme, mint, parsley and chervil for the animals to feed on. When a Frenchman takes snails wild, he leaves them, if prudent, a few days to digest their last meal, for there is a current belief that they may be dangerous if they have recently fed on poisonous plants.

For the present year to date the fire losses of the United States amount to $154,559,472, as compared with $150,929,895 in 1900.

New Use for Money.

Nearly half a billion dollars' worth of soiled and torn bank notes is destroyed annually by our government. They are reduced to pulp and then used for making railroad car wheels. This transformation is about as radical as the one brought about in the case of sickly people who will use Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. Good health is sure to follow its use. Be sure to try it. It will cure indigestion, dyspepsia, constipation, biliousness and malaria.

SALZER'S New 20th Century OATS
TEST YIELD 300 BUS. PER ACRE
CLEAR THE TRACK!
Here's the monarch—nothing like it on earth. Salzer's New 20th Century Oat takes the cake, carries first prizes as the biggest yielder everywhere. The fact is, Salzer's oats are bred to produce. The U. S. Department of Agriculture claims that out of over 400 samples and kinds tested, Salzer's were the best. How do you like that, Mr. Farmer? Our new 20th Century Oat is bound to completely revolutionize oat growing and we expect dozens of farmers to report yields in 1902 ranging from 300 to 500 bushels per acre. Price is dirt cheap. Be in the swim and buy this variety this spring to sell to your neighbors the coming fall for seed. It will surely pay you.
Salzer's Marvel Wheat—42 bus. per Acre
The only spring wheat on earth that will yield a paying crop north, east, south, and west and in every state in the Union. We also have the celebrated Macaroni wheat, yielding on our farms, 63 bushels per acre.
SPELTZ
The most marvelous cereal and hay food on earth, producing from [illegible] to [illegible] bushels of grain and 4 tons of rich hay per acre.
VEGETABLE SEEDS.
We are the largest growers and our stock of earliest Peas, Beans, Sweet corn and all money making vegetables is enormous. Prices are very low. Onion seed 60 cents and up a pound. Catalogue tells.
For 10c—Worth $10
Our great catalogue contains full description of our Beardless Barley, yielding [illegible] bushels; our Triple Income Corn, going [illegible] bushels; our potatoes, yielding [illegible] bushels per acre; our grass and clover mixtures, producing 6 tons of magnificent hay; our Pea Oat, with its 3 tons of hay, and Teosinte with [illegible] tons of green fodder per acre. Salzer's great catalogue, worth $100 to any wide awake gardener or farmer, with 10 farm seed samples,—worth $10 to get a start—is mailed you on receipt of 10c. postage.

THE THIEF RIVER FALLS NEWS.

VOL. XIX. THIEF RIVER FALLS, MINN., THURSDAY, JANUARY 23, 1902. NUMBER 3

WOOLEN MILL.

Thief River Falls Will Surely Have One.

Last week the News announced that the Fosston Woolen Mills would be removed to this city, and while it may yet come, the matter is not entirely settled. One thing is certain, however, Thief River Falls will have a woolen mill, for if the Fosston mill does not come local business men will build one.

The stockholders of the mill who were in the city last week, through their spokesman, Lewis Lohn, made a proposition to the effect that if the people of Thief River Falls would subscribe for one half of the stock of the concern, the mill be removed to Thief River Falls and doubled in size. This the business men have done, and it now appears that this man Lohn who owns of one-third interest in the mill and is also heavily interested in Fosston property, desires to go back upon his agreement. A move is on foot to purchase Lohn's interest, but whether or not this is accomplished a mill be built here and will be running by next fall.

Lost $300.

Knute Gunderson, better known as "Blacksmith Knute," sold his farm last week and started home with the proceeds, $390 in cash and a certificate of deposit for $700. He lost it all out of his pocket, but the next day he found $90 of the money. Payment has been stopped on the certificate of deposit, so he is out only $300.

Missed Their Fish.

Conrad Lajumbo says, the Red Lake Indians are this year without their customary supply of white fish. Their fishing operations were in full blast, with nets all out in the lake when the annual allotment was made. The Reds during the celebration that followed did not observe that a sudden freeze up was threatening to involve the nets inextricably in the fast congealing ice, and the gaiety was kept up until the nets were frozen up and ruined. Red Lake Falls Gazette.

If you have a farm for sale call on the Northern Real Estate & Mortgage Co. Office next First State Bank.

NO OPPOSITION.

To the Opening up of the Red Lake Reservation.

C. L. Dobner is in receipt of letters from both Senators Nelson and Clapp concerning the opening of the Red lake reservation. Senator Clapp says that he finds there is no opposition to the opening up of the Red lake reservation in Washington, but that the outcome as to the Leach Lake reservation is quite doubtful. He is of the opinion that action will be taken in regard to the Red Lake reservation at this session.

Senator Nelson also says that there is little or no opposition to the opening of the Red lake lands and thinks that a provision can be attached to the Indian appropriation bill authorizing the president to appoint a committee to treat with the Indians.

Teachers' Examinations.

Notice is hereby given that the semi-annual teachers' examination for Red Lake county will be held in the high school building at Red Lake Falls and Thief River Falls, on Thursday, Friday and Saturday, February 6, 7 and 8, 1902. LEO IS IT.

Appointed Superintendent of Police.

Mayor Kratka on Tuesday morning appointed Leo Kuklinski superintendent of police, and at the same time issued an order suspending Chief Benzie.

The city council has not authorized Mr. Kratka to appoint two policemen, this august body taking the position that the city engineer should be required to earn his salary by acting as night watchman.

The councilmen also favor the plan of having time clocks placed at different corners in the business part of the city, thus insuring that the night watchman does his duty and makes the rounds regularly. This is an excellent idea, and would be sure to insure the city good fire protection.

BIG DITCH

Would Drain the Whole of Excel Township.

The farmers in the town of Excel are preparing a petition which they will present to the county commissioners of Marshall county in the near future. It is for the establishing of a ditch in town, and it will be run in such a course that every section of land in the whole township would be drained. There is no opposition to it.

Farewell Sermon.

Rev. C. W. Dade preached his farewell sermon Sunday evening to the members of the Presbyterian congregation, and for a while will engage in a different advocation. The change is made on account of poor health, Mr. Dade being a sufferer from nervous prostration, and he hopes by engaging in some out door occupation to regain his health. He will continue to reside in this city.

The following is adapted from an exchange: Who sympathized with you when your little child was sick? Was it your home merchant or was it T. M. Roberts of Minneapolis? Who carried you last winter when you were out of a job and had no money? Was it Montgomery Ward & Co. of Chicago, or was it your home merchant? When you want to raise money for the church or for some needy person in town do you write to the Fair store in Chicago or do you go to your home merchant? How much does Siegel, Cooper & Co. give toward keeping up the side walks of the town or paying the minister's salary? When you were sick how many nights did Sears, Roebuck & Co. sit up with you? When your loved one was buried was it your home merchant that dropped the tear of sympathy and uttered the cheering word or was it Marshal Field & Co. of Chicago.

There is no excuse for any man to live in a town, if he does not like it. If you have no word of commendation to say of your town its institutions or its people, emigrate. You won't stop the town clock by going away, the church bell will have the same musical ring, the little dogs will play as briskly, and the pure air, bright sunshine and sparkling water will have the same health giving properties. Speak a good word for your neighbor if you can; if you can't don't everlastingly enlarge on his faults. If you have become so thoroughly sour and disgruntled move away; go somewhere things suit you.

LONG HAIR.

Indians Will Have to Have It Cut off.

In one sense of the word the happy days of the Indian are over.

He will not be allowed to have long hair. He cannot paint his face, even though such a privilode is granted to some women. And he cannot wear funny clothes.

Such are the orders of the secretary of the interior.

Commissioner Jones has sent to the agents in charge of nearly every Indian reservation a circular letter directing him to forbid, in the name of the interior department, the wearing of long hair by the male Indian under his charge and the painting of their faces by Indians of either sex.

To accomplish the cessation of these practices the agent is directed to employ all the means at hand; to suspend rations and other supplies; to confine the younger recalcitrants in the guardhouse at hard labor; and by tact, perseverance and firmness to induce the old men to give up the customs which bind them to barbarism.

City Council.

The city council held an important meeting Monday evening and elected offices for the next two years. The News was made the official paper and the proceedings will be found in another column.

Grain Commission Firm.

Geo. E. Squires, representing the well known grain commission firm of Edwards Wood & Co. was in the city Tuesday and made arrangements to open up a branch office in this city. Emil Sweaas was appointed local agent and he will have an office with his father.

Public Schools.

The following is the total for all departments in the public schools:

Enrollment	558
Average daily attendance	468.35
Cases of Absence	610
No. Neither absent or tardy	230

The wide difference between the enrollment and average daily attendence in some of the departments is due to the entrance of many new students after Jan. 1st and with withdrawal of a few at the end of the year. Our fourth month did not end until the close of the first week week in January. A number who failed to return the first week of the new year were not enrolled as is the case with several who entered on the closing days of the month.

DIAMOND FIELD IN MONTANA.

Lucky Strike Made by Prospectors in Fergus County.

Helena, Mont., Jan. 19. — A special from Lewiston says: A reliable report has reached here of the discovery of an immense diamond field in the northeastern part of Fergus county, which has driven all the prospectors of Spotted Horse and Maiden wild with excitement. When the report reached the former place that a well-known New York jeweler had pronounced the gems of the first water excitement knew no bounds, and last night a party of prospectors started for the Blood creek country, where the find was made, to locate ground in what has proved to be a genuine diamond field. Several weeks ago Cliff Doe and another prospector visited the Blood creek country on a hunting trip, and while there Doe picked up a number of pebbles. Attracted by their unusual character Doe forwarded the stones to a jewelry establishment in New York. Two days ago he received an answer from the jewelery concern, stating that the pebbles were diamonds of the first water.

Notwithstanding the fact that Doe made every endeavor to keep the news to himself it leaked out, and last night a party of prospectors started for the place of the reported discovery. Blood creek is a small steram in the northeastern part of the county, located in a wild and broken country.

BUFFALO DYING OFF.

Yellowstone National Park Herd Is in Need of New Blood.

Butte, Mont., Jan. 19.—According to reports received from the Yellowstone National Park the buffalo herd within its confines is rapidly disappearing, and, unless congress makes further provision, threatens to become extinct. New blood must be introduced into the little herd frequenting geyserland. Last winter but eighteen buffalos remained in the Hayden valley of the former herd of thirty. The specimens that now exist lack the strength of their former hardy predecessors and are barely able to withstand the rigors of the winter. Elk are reported more numerous than any other animal in the park. There are at least 50,000 of them within the park limits.

BEDBUG DECISION.

Famous Case in Iowa Appealed to Supreme Court.

Sioux City, Iowa, Jan. 19.—A decision has been rendered at Akron, Iowa, in the case of Bly vs. Sears, in which the court held that the presence of bedbugs in a hotel did not furnish grounds for the recovery of damages. The case has been appealed and promises to rival the famous Jones county calf case. The case was brought by Frank Bly against H. D. Sears for recovery of $90 back rent. Sears, who had rented the hotel of Bly, refused to pay the $90 on the unique excuse that the buggy condition of the hotel was a damage; that Bly knew and could not help knowing it was buggy, and that, therefore, the house was leased under fraudulent representations.

IOWA FIRE LOSSES.

Last Year Was a Record Breaker for Town Fires.

Des Moines, Iowa, Jan. 19.—The insurance companies and representatives in Iowa have kept close record of the fire losses in this state during recent years and they find that the losses in the year 1901 were measurably larger than in any year in the history of the state. The heaviest losses were in Des Moines and Davenport, where three-quarters of a million dollars' worth of property was consumed in each city. The total losses aggregate $3,901,000, not including losses on farm property.

FIRE FIGHTER HURT.

Store and Stock in Twin Valley Is Damaged and Lost.

Twin Valley, Minn., Jan. 19. — Fire started in James Nelson's general store early yesterday morning and had gained considerable headway before being discovered. By prompt and efficient work on the part of the fire department the flames were soon under control. The building was badly damaged and the stock nearly a total loss from damage by smoke and water, all covered by insurance. While working with the hose John Moe fell from the roof and sustained a broken ankle.

"All Hail" Not Intoxicating.

Jamestown, N. D., Jan. 19. — After considering the case of Grove Cowles for ten minutes the jury found he was not guilty of fracturing the prohibition law. An attempt was made to secure the conviction of Anthony Spangler on a charge of having sold intoxicating beverages, but the jury found him not guilty. The complaint was regarding Spangler's sale of a liquid called "All Hail," which was claimed to be intoxicating.

Pay High for Farm Land.

Crookston, Minn., Jan. 19.—The Geo. Purvis farm south of this city was sold for $42 per acre, this being the highest price paid for farm lands in any considerable quantity in this section. The farm contains 320 acres. It was sold to Iowa parties, who will plant a part of it, as it adjoins the Great Northern yards at South Crookston.

This Officeholder Resigned.

Newton, Iowa, Jan. 19.—The case of William Deutsch, supervisor of this county, is unique. He went through a hard campaign to get the nomination and election to the board. He was elected, and after serving two weeks, concluded he wasn't fitted for the position and handed in his resignation.

Work Pleads Guilty.

St. Paul, Jan. 19.—William J. Work, the former night clerk at the postoffice, was arraigned before Judge Lochren in the United States district court yesterday morning and pleaded guilty to taking money from the mails. He was sentenced to two years at Stillwater.

Looking for Another Pastor.

Fargo, N. D., Jan. 19.—The resignation of Rev. W. W. Reed of the First Baptist church was accepted at the official meeting and a committee appointed to select another pastor. Mr. Reed's resignation was a surprise.

Used Dehorning Fluid for Eyewater.

Osage, Iowa, Jan. 19.—Guy Webster of this city, who has been taking treatment for his eyes, poured dehorning fluid into them by mistake last night. He is in a very critical condition with no hope of saving his eyes.

BLEW UP THE MAINE

SPANIARD MAKES A STARTLING CONFESSION IN NEBRASKA.

SENT BATTLESHIP TO BOTTOM

WAS ANGERED AT WEYLER AND SOUGHT TO GET EVEN WITH HIM.

HIS SCHEME WAS TO CAUSE WAR

ESCAPED DURING THE EXCITEMENT AND FINALLY LOCATED ON A CATTLE RANCH.

Chadron, Neb., Jan. 16.—Information from Pine Ridge agency reaching here yesterday caused more excitement than if the whole Sioux nation had declared war against its citizens.

It seems almost incredible, but coming from such reliable sources, and the fact that the story is feasible, causes many to believe it.

Shortly after the battleship Maine was destroyed in Havana harbor a dark complexioned and well educated Spaniard put in his appearance on the large stock ranch in Sioux county owned by Bob Yago. He told Mr. Yago that he had been in Cuba about the time the battleship was destroyed, but further than that he was very reticent about his past life.

Spaniard Confesses.

Mr. Yago, owing to his intelligence and wide acquaintance with Cuba and her people, became interested in the Spaniard, and whenever opportunity presented Yago quizzed him in regard to the subject, but the Spaniard would discuss the matter only when in a reminiscent mood. A few days ago he told Mr. Yago things that caused him to watch the Spaniard closely, and his reward was the discovery of some papers which indicated that he was at one time a Spanish officer. Mr. Yago confronted him with the fact that he had been an officer in the Spanish army at one time. This was sufficient to cause the Spaniard to believe that Mr. Yago knew all of his past life, and he made a confession which is startling if true.

Grudge Against Weyler.

The confession is now in the hands of Mr. Yago or Mr. McGinley, and they refuse to give it up. It was learned, however, that the Spaniard's correct name is Manuel De Silvia Braga, and that he was a captain in the Spanish army in Cuba. During Weyler's campaign he became angered with the brutal treatment accorded prisoners, and he so expressed himself. Weyler at once had him put under arrest, together with two sergeants of his command, and they were court-martialed and discharged from the army.

The Spaniard brooded over the injustice so much that he planned a scheme to get even with Weyler. He conceived the idea that the thing for him to do was in some way to cause war between America and Spain. He was familiar with the harbor and knew all about the marine explosives therein. He saw in the Maine the means by which he might accomplish by destroying Weyler's government. He planned to destroy the battleship. He know the batteries that controlled the mines were closely guarded, but he was determined, and, dressed in his old uniform, that of captain, with some old clothes in a small grip, he had no trouble in passing the guards. In a short time thereafter he touched the button that sent the Maine to the bottom of the harbor. Instantly he changed his clothes, and in the excitement scaped on board a schooner as a sailor, and made his way to Mantanzas, from there to San Domingo, thence to New Orleans.

His Cherished Hope.

On organization has been perfected which will go to Sioux county to interview the county authorities with a view to securing their aid in making an official investigation of the matter.

ALLISON AND DOLLIVER.

Nominated to Succeed Themselves by Iowa Republicans.

Des Moines, Iowa, Jan. 16.—Senator William B. Allison was nominated last evening by the Republican caucus for the position of United States senator for the sixth consecutive term and Senator Jonathan P. Dolliver was nominated to succeed himself at the expiration of his appointed term. The vote of the caucus was unanimous in both cases. The Democratic caucus will probably be held this evening or to-morrow morning. The election of United States senators will occur Jan. 21. Senators Allison and Dolliver appeared before the caucus and made brief speeches of thanks.

CHASED BOTHA.

Boer General Was Only Three Miles Ahead of His Pursuers.

London, Jan. 16.—Lord Kitchener, in a dispatch from Johannesburg dated Jan. 13, reports the narrow escape of Gen. Botha from capture by Gen. Bruce-Hamilton. Hearing of a concentration of Boers at Knapdar, Bruce-Hamilton went to the spot, but only to find that the Boers had been given the alarm and that 400 of them were trekking three miles distant, with Gen. Botha in a camp cart leading. Bruce-Hamilton chased the Boers for seven miles until his horses gave out, and captured thirty-two Boers and quantities of ammunition and stock.

Robbed a Bank.

Guthrie, Okla., Jan. 16. — The People's bank at North Enid was robbed yesterday morning of $3,600. The burglars blew the safe open with dynamite. There is no clue to the identity of the robbers.

Cut Her Sister's Throat.

Wichita, Kan., Jan. 16.—Nellie Cornelison, the eleven-year-old daughter of George Cornelison, a laborer, cut the throat of her three-year-old sister yesterday in a stable. No motive is apparent.

NEW WATER ROUTE.

Continuous Navigation Is Proposed From St. Paul to Lake Winnipeg and Red Lake.

The attention of congress will be called at this session to the advisability of making an appropriation for the better drainage of the Red River valleys, and those other portions of the Northwest in which similar conditions prevail, and which can be united under one drainage plan.

From time to time there have been floods in that section of the country but since the white settlers came in the floods have been more frequent and more disastrous, owing, probably, to the denuding of the land to the east of its timber. Before the settlement of the country there were vast reservoirs throughout the Red River valley, and at the headwaters of the streams emptying into the Red, which held the waters of the spring freshets until along into the following summer, and, in many cases, until the next year. Thus, a comparatively uniform stage of water was maintained, and the floods were, as a rule, not serious, and there was sufficient water in the stream at all times to afford good navigation.

When the settlers came and broke up the land the conditions became changed. With the exception of the country at the head of the Red Lake river, the section tributary to the Red river is almost destitute of timber. The flow of the water from the prairies was impeded by the immense growth of grass, which filled the bed of every slough, and there were great areas of land, regarded as swamp, in which there was water at all times.

The plow of the farmer drained many a field in which the water had stood for ages, and the demand for land led to schemes of state and county ditching, so as to make as much land as possible fit for crops. The result of this is that the area of arable land has been very materially increased; but there is another result which is not quite so satisfactory. The water from the melting snow in the spring, which formerly took weeks or months to find its way into the stream, now rushes down in a few days, and the bed of the main stream, which in no place is wide, is filled from bank to bank and floods the surrounding country.

There is also another feature which must be taken into account. The Red river, the outlet of a territory over 50,000 miles in extent, flows north. Its source and its mouth are nearly 300 miles apart. In this distance a considerable difference of climate is noticeable. The ice in the river at the exit from Lake Traverse, near the southern boundary of North Dakota, moves from one to two weeks earlier than that at Winnipeg. The stream is thus open, with the water flowing freely, near its source, while a short distance down stream it is still locked in the icy fetters of winter. There is thus a continuous dam, reaching from one end of the river to the other, which in the spring freshets must be gradually broken away, and which materially impedes the flow of the water, sometimes causing disastrous floods.

The effect of these conditions is readily seen. In years when there is a heavy snowfall, which is taken away suddenly in the spring by rains, the numerous drains and ditches made for the purpose of drying off the land, rapidly carry the water to the coulies and permanent streams, whence it quickly finds its way to the river. The ice gorges here and there, there being no clear water below. The water rises and floods low-lying farms. The supply in what were the natural reservoirs is exhausted, and the water falls to such a low point that navigation is rendered extremely difficult.

The flood of 1897, which is a matter of history, is a case in point. There had been an unusually heavy snowfall. Big drifts formed all over the prairie, and the space between the high banks was filled full of snow, blown in and compacted by the high winds. Spring arrived, and with it came rain. The snow melted and, there being no way to check the flow of water, down it went, millions upon millions of gallons, until the stream began to climb its banks and spread over the adjacent country.

The ordinarily peaceful, sluggish stream was transformed into an angry monster. Farm after farm was inundated, buildings were swept away, cattle, horses and other live stock destroyed, and, in some cases, human lives lost.

In order to remedy this condition of things the people of the valley have been at work for years on a drainage plan, having for its object the construction of canals, locks and reservoirs, for the purpose of retaining as much of this water as possible during the period when floods may be looked for, releasing it through the summer so as to keep the river in a fit state for navigation all through the season.

Col. Jones, of the United States engineer corps, has made several reports on the subject, and, in his opinion, the plan is entirely feasible. The statements in his reports have been made the basis of all the agitation which has been going on for the past few years.

The people of Manitoba have suffered, as well as those on the Dakota side of the line, and the drainage question has been freely discussed there. Some work has been undertaken already, and the engineering authorities of the province have expressed a willingness to co-operate with the people of the Dakota side in giving effect to any plan of drainage which may be decided upon.

The plan of improvement presented contemplates the formation of two great reservoir systems, at Red lake and Lake Traverse, at the headwaters of the tributaries of the Red river.

In connection with the Red lake system it is proposed to construct a reservoir dam, with lock, in Red Lake river, near the outlet of the lake. Navigation up the Red Lake river is to be provided for by the construction of locks and dams at Crookston and Thief River.

For the Lake Traverse system there is in contemplation the diversion of Otter Tail River into the Rabbit and Bois de Sioux rivers by constructing a dam and canal near Breckinridge; the construction of a dam and lock in the Bois de Sioux below the mouth of the Rabbit; the construction of a dam at the foot of Big Stone lake, and the excavating of a canal to connect Big Stone lake with Lake Traverse. By means of this system it is expected to create water transportation lines from Lake Winnipeg to the foot of Big Stone lake, 615 miles; Red Lake river, 225 miles; Red lake, 50 miles.

TORN BY WOLVES

WISCONSIN FARMER HAS A TERRIBLE FIGHT FOR HIS LIFE.

ATTACKED IN HIS BARNYARD

HAD TO FIGHT HIS WAY INCH BY INCH TOWARD THE HOUSE.

INJURIES MAY PROVE FATAL

HIS FLESH IN MANY PLACES IS TORN FROM THE BODY.

La Crosse, Wis., Jan. 19. — After a hard struggle with a pack of wolves, Olaf Halesrud, a well known farmer living about ten miles north of this city, lies in his home in a critical condition. His flesh in many places is torn from his body. Physicians say that he cannot live.

Thursday night Halesrud was awakened by a disturbance in his barnyard and he made an investigation. From a pig pen a dark object slunk off. He found two pigs dead, one half-devoured.

Halesrud heard a growl and looked around to see two balls of fire glaring at him in the darkness. Presently another pair of eyes appeared and he realized that he was being surrounded by wolves. He started on a run for the house, 150 feet distant, but before he had gone twenty feet half a dozen snapping, snarling wolves were about him. The farmer tried to protect himself with a small club which he snached up, but it had little effect. Several times Halesrud was forced to the ground by the animals, but each time he fought them off and regained his feet, and fought his way, inch by inch, toward the house. The door was finally reached, when, half-fainting, he staggered inside and shut the door upon the determined brutes. Mrs. Halesrud helped her husband to bed and dressed the gaping flesh wounds, which practically covered his body.

Wolves have been so numerous in this vicinity during the past few months, and their work so destructive to cattle of smaller variety that the farmers have decided to start an organized movement against them.

BRAGA ESCAPED.

Spaniard Who Says He Blew Up the Maine Has Disappeared.

Chadron, Neb., Jan. 19. — Edward Satterlee, who was a member of the committee chosen to investigate the alleged confession of the Spaniard on Bob Yago's ranch in Sioux county, that it was he who sent the battleship Maine to the bottom of Havana harbor, has returned with the information that Manuel de Silvia Braga was not to be found on that ranch. He was told that the Spaniard had learned of the investigation and had boarded the east-bound Elkhorn train at Glenn, Neb. Mr. Satterlee found letters and other papers at the home of Yago which, he says, convinced him beyond doubt that the Spaniard was in some manner connected with, or knows all about the destruction of the Maine. Pressed with questions, he admitted that the papers prove the Spaniard was in Cuba as a military officer during Weyler's regime; that he left there about the time the Maine was destroyed, and came to this country.

LAKE LINDEN FIRE.

Sixty-Five Thousand Dollars in Property Destroyed in Michigan Town.

Calumet, Mich., Jan. 19.—Lake Linden, five miles south of here, was visited by the third disastrous fire within a year yesterday morning. Fire in the Toplon building was discovered at 3 o'clock, and before it was under control the damage amounted to $60,000. The Lake Linden and Calumet and Hecla companies worked for three hours fighting the fire. The firemen worked under cover of wet blankets owing to the intense heat.

TO TEAR IT UP.

Receiver Frost Hires Men to Despoil the Washburn Road.

Washburn, Wis., Jan. 19.—As a result of the contempt proceedings in the federal court at Madison, in which the district attorney and sheriff of Bayfield county were sentenced to sixty days each in the Dane county jail and six prominent Bayfield county citizens were fined $250 each, the receiver of the Washburn, Bayfield & Iron River railroad is hiring men here to tear up the main line of the road next Monday. A stay of proceedings has been obtained and the officials are still at liberty. Legal proceedings it is understood are under way to thwart the tearing up of the line as contemplated. The court's finding has intensified feeling here.

STEAMER SCUTTLED.

Pere Marquette Railway Vessel Lost —Passengers Saved.

Ludington, Mich., Jan. 19.—Steamer No. 3 of the Pere Marquette railway went ashore yesterday morning near here and was scuttled in ten feet of water. The Ludington lifesavers before daybreak rescued nine passengers, four of them women, and thirty sailors. The sea was running high. The boat and cargo will be a total loss.

Charged With Forgery.

Hampton, Iowa, Jan. 19. — John Harms, who resides near here, has been arrested, charged with forgery and obtaining money from the Farmers and Merchants' bank on misrepresentation. He was committed.

Sentenced to Penitentiary.

Crookston, Minn., Jan. 19. — Henry Larson, accused of entering the barn of George Reville of East Grand Forks one night last summer and stealing various articles, has been found guilty and sentenced to three years.

OUT OF THE WRECK

By EDGAR WELTON COOLEY

(Copyright, 1902, by Daily Story Pub. Co.)

Valentine leaned back in his chair, shoved his hands into his trousers pockets and contemplated, with a suddenly awakened savageness, the unfinished letter before him.

Again and again he read the carefully written lines, the frown on his face deepening with each perusal. One sentence particularly displeased him.

"Looking back with a judgment sobered by the intervening three years," this sentence ran, "I realize that my impetuosity misconstrued your display of just indignation at my unfounded charge of duplicity, and that my temper, always too hasty, forced my lying lips to utter those foolish and heartless words of farewell—words I would give my soul, almost, to recall."

For the twentieth time Valentine read that sentence over. Then he drew the point of his stubby pencil through the words and jumped to his feet. For many moments he paced the floor of his cabin, his eyes cast down, his lips compressed, his hands in his pockets.

And finally he paused at the table and again read the letter slowly, carefully. Then he laid his broad, brown hand upon the sheet, and hesitated, looking out the door at the gathering dusk and thinking, thinking, thinking.

Suddenly his hand closed angrily upon the paper, crumpling, crushing it between his fingers. Silently he scowled at the wall, the letter clutched in his tightly closed fist, a steely glitter in his cold, gray eyes. Then the paper dropped to the floor, and walking to the door, the man gazed meditatively across the plain.

And after awhile he groped his way back into his cabin until he came to the table. Then he struck a match and searched upon the floor until he found the letter he had written. Picking it up by a corner, he touched the burning match to it and held it between his fingers until the flame almost licked his hand; then he dropped it and watched it burn—watched it, until it was all consumed.

"Never!" he cried aloud, again pacing the cabin floor. "No, by h—l! I'll never write her. I'll die right here before I'll let her hear from me again. I'll die and rot—rot like a dead coyote in a gulch.

"What if it is lonely here in this d—d country; what if I do go loco—who in h—l cares? She? Ha! ha! Why, she—she'd laugh if she knew I was as crazy as a thirst-maddened broncho—she'd laugh and shake her yellow curls and go dancing away with some of those Rock Lick fellows.

"I loved her—God knows I loved her. Who wouldn't love her? Who doesn't love the sunshine and the blue sky and the wild birds? Everybody loves those things, and she is all of them together. Nina is—all of them; the sunshine and the blue sky and the wild birds. But she's a flirt, and—and—d—n her!

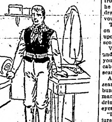
"Write to her? I write to her? Ha! ha! No! No, I say. I'll go out there on the prairie and let the d—d coyotes gnaw at my worthless old carcass before I'll write to her. I told her when I left that I would never let her know where I was, and I won't—so help me God, I won't. I'll stay right here in this God-forsaken country and turn into a dog-eating Indian before I'll write to her. I hate her—God, how I hate her!—and I never want to see her again—never!"

He gritted his teeth and clinched his fists in his rage and his slow pacing increased to a savage stride, and suddenly he took his hat from a peg and dashed out into the night.

* * * * * * * * * * * *

When the two red-eyed engines came together on the curve, awful was the crash. For miles around the impact shook the earth like the rumbling of a volcano, and the cattlemen, awakened, dashed out of their cabins into the night, their nerves tingling with a nameless fear.

Coyotes, dashing from their hiding places, paused a moment in wonder, and with paws uplifted, gazed at the awful scene, then turned and ran, affrighted, into the depths of the friendly shadows. Rabbits scurried from the sage brush, their long ears laid low upon their backs, their bodies quivering with their haste, their eyes shining with the fear that seized them.



He paused at the table.

And the flames of the burning coaches crackled and roared in mad delight, the steam of the shattered engines hissed in hate, and men, women and children, on whose faces but a moment before smiles of happiness had gleamed, now twisted and writhed beneath the heavy timbers, or lay with startled, hopeless faces reflecting the scarlet of the flames, and watched with agony in their hearts and prayers upon their lips the approach of the remorseless, red-tongued messenger of death.

The few who had escaped uninjured or with minor bruises the first awful impact huddled together on the prairie like frightened sheep, their faces pale, emotionless, stricken with the blighting daze of helpless horror.

Like phantoms, through the darkness, came the hurrying forms of the plainsmen—on foot, on horse, from their cabins, came these powerful, fearless, compassionate fellows.

And they fought the fire with strong arms and determined hearts. Beneath their axes' glistening edges timbers snapped in two like twigs, and their rough, brown hands dragged men and matrons and maidens from the wreck, nor paused for thanks or praise.

Fiercely rose the ax.

Swiftly, surely swept the fire onward; sharper, heavier, faster fell the strokes of axes, glistening in the light. But at last the heat became so fierce, so intense, that even the bravest was driven back and forced to listen, helpless and aghast, to the pleadings and the groans of those they could not help.

And so they huddled on the sands, the rescued and the rescuers, weeping, sobbing, praying, pitying, but—helpless.

And above the flames' wild roar; above the groaning of the dying, a woman's piercing cry rang out upon the night.

"God! Save me; oh, some one save me!"

Above the heads of those who huddled round about and through the darkness, over the sage brush and the cactus, the cry sped on its way until at last it fell into the ears of one who lay prone upon the sand—one who had lain for hours, a pain within his heart, his mind oblivious to all surroundings.

He raised his head and listened and in his eyes the vacant stare gave place to the light of reason.

Again the voice came to him: "God! Save me; some one save me!"

He sprang to his feet and, with a cry of "Nina! Nina!" he sped like a coyote towards the red glare that seemed beckoning to him through the darkness.

With the woman's name still upon his lips, he sprang into the midst of those huddled upon the sand and seizing an axe, leaped desperately into the burning wreck.

Fiercely rose and fell his axe; the flames lapped his feet and climbing up and up, fed hungrily upon his garments and his eyebrows and his hair. But still he worked; still his axe rose and fell; still the name of "Nina" came from his parching lips.

And then, with his flesh blistering in the fire; with his muscles quivering from the red-hot kisses of the flames, he reached a woman's hand and dragged her from the reach of the devouring element.

Tenderly he lifted her and laid her on the sand, then he reeled and sank upon the ground, a quivering mass of scorched humanity.

With the dawn a relief train came and among those on board was a tall young man who went eagerly from cabin to cabin, where the injured lay, searching for one he loved.

And the woman for whom he searched was sitting beside a rude bunk, on which a man lay dying. The man had hold of her hand and was drinking in the light of the woman's eyes.

"I am glad you were not badly injured, Nina," he whispered, then pressed his lips tightly together to stifle a sob of pain.

The woman smiled faintly and laid her hand upon his pillow, pityingly.

"I thought—I—hated—you," he faltered, after a pause. "But God—Nina! I don't—I don't—I can't—I—love——"

"Hush," the woman said, firmly, but kindly lowering her eyes before his gaze. He watched her in silence, and when she raised her face again to his, he said, with a painful effort:

"I was to blame—Nina—I thought—I thought you didn't care for me. But—you did—didn't you—Nina?"

His eyes were fixed upon her with a wild intensity, and she trembled.

"Yes, John, I did care for you," she said, quite low. And the man smiled and closed his eyes.

Then it was that the tall young man came softly into the cabin and saw the woman weeping beside the still, white face of the dead.

He spoke her name and a gleam of joy came into his eyes, but she held up a hand and he paused, wonderingly. For a moment she gazed sadly upon the face of the dead, then reverently she covered it with a sheet, and walked softly out into the sunshine where the tall young man was waiting for her.

"I thank God for sparing my wife to me," the tall young man said, happily, as he stooped and kissed her.

And the woman sighed.

CALLING BY PROXY.

Sending a Representative Is One of the Latest Fads.

"The fashion and etiquette writers in some of the English journals are making a big ado over the matter of calling by proxy," said the woman who prides herself on doing things in the right way, "but there is really no cause for all the fuss and feathers. The idea is by no means new. It was tried in this town a long while ago. The custom never grew into great popularity, it is true, but it was introduced, and by women who are supposed to know what is what. I well remember what a shock the innovation gave me at first. I had never heard of the practice until a woman—an English woman, too, by the way—who had me on her calling list, sent a representative around one day to pay her respects. The occasion was of more than usual importance, for I was entertaining friends from the west then, and the calls were intended more for them than for me. Imagine, then, my surprise to receive a woman whom I had never seen before and whose name was totally unknown to me. The English woman's card was presented along with hers, and she hastened to explain the secret of her presence. The Britisher, it seemed, was not well enough to come, and, being unwilling to pass my afternoon altogether, she had delegated a proxy to call in her stead. She must have found the makeshift unsatisfactory, for I subsequently met the same agent at several houses on the same errand. The proxy was a very agreeable woman, and I must say that, aside from the novelty of the plan, no one seemed to regret the substitution. Finally several other women whose social duties pressed too heavily on their hands adopted the scheme of hiring a proxy, and it is still in vogue to a limited extent, although I doubt if there is any danger of the custom ever becoming general here, as the English writers seem to fear will be the case on the other side."—New York Times.

A NEW FIELD IN SCIENCE.

Brainy Men's Claim to New Process of Cheap Gold Manufacture.

The possibility of making gold out of cheap substances is being extensively discussed by scientists in Paris. The topic would have been discussed a few years ago as a crazy revival of medieval alchemy, but since the renowned chemist Berthelot's discoveries and remarkable assertion that gold is probably a compound substance instead of being a simple metal, an important school of chemists has predicted that gold will be manufactured as cheaply as butter some day. Meanwhile the French Society of Modern Alchemy claims that three of its members—Jollivet, De Lussus and Heoght—all chemists of reputation—have just completed a successful synthesis of gold. About half an ounce was produced and it took six months to do it. Prof. Berthelot is unwilling to give an opinion about it without knowing the details of the process and examining the product obtained, but he says: "Until now chemistry has been a study of only immediate reactions, yet slow reactions—by which I mean those taking from a month to two or three years—are suspected, and this will open quite a new field in science. Possibly metals might be decomposed into several elements. If they can be so treated, they likewise can be recombined." Camille Flammarion, to whom was given an opportunity to examine the artificial gold, says: "It presents all the outward characteristics of gold. I shall never pronounce anything impossible in science unless it is so mathematically."

Baring the Feet at Worship.

In India Hindus and Mussulmans alike wear both sandals and shoes (slippers), and the latter boots also. The sandal (the word is Persian) was evidently the original covering for the feet all over southern and eastern Asia, while the shoe was probably introduced into India by the Persians and Mo(n)gols, together with the "tiptilted" (Hittite and Etruscan) boot. Both are usually made in India of leather, but never of pigskin; and while the shoes are always colored red or yellow, the boots are generally brightly parti-colored; both, among the upper classes, being also richly embroidered in gold and silver and variegated silk thread, and with bangles, bugles and seed pearls, after the manner of the ancient Persian boots represented on Greek vases. But, of however rare and costly elaboration, the inevitable rule is to remove them after entering a private house, just when stepping on the mat or carpet on which the visitor takes his seat. They must be cast off—the right boot or shoe first—before the worshiper enters a temple or mosque, and it is still regarded as an absolute profanation to attempt to enter either fully shod. But the domestic habit arose out of its obvious propriety, and the religious ritual of "the Shoes of the Faithful," now and for centuries past observed throughout Islam, can be demonstrated to have been dictated by, if indeed it be not derived directly from, the universal social etiquette of the East

Wisconsin Cheesemakers' Association.

The tenth annual meeting of the Wisconsin Cheese Makers' Association will be held in the city of Milwaukee, on the 8th 9th and 10th days of January, 1902. This is to be an educational meeting on the latest improved methods of cheese making, both foreign and domestic, including all allied subjects. Speakers of national reputation of Canada and the States have been engaged at great expense to address this meeting. Professors and authorities who are continually investigating and experimenting along dairy lines, have been booked for this occasion.

We had the largest convention in the history of the association at Madison last January, and should start this meeting with a big membership list, making the tenth annual convention a record-breaker in the history of the association. No one interested in dairy work and cheese-making, or desirous of learning more in this line, can afford to miss this convention. It behooves us as cheese-makers to bring a sample of our cheese, and have it tested by cheese experts, who are educated in this line of business; showing us wherein our cheese is not equal to that of our neighbors (if it is not); and, as we are students, we will go home with a determination to profit by our past mistakes and the suggestions received.

Those who contributed to the programme last January were past grand masters in the art of practical cheese-making, the representatives of two governments, the assistant food commissioners of two great dairy states, and world-famed professors, who have reduced dairying to a science. The names of R. A. Pearson, assistant chief of the dairy division of the United States Department of Agriculture; J. A. Ruddick, official referee of the Department of Agriculture of Canada; J. H. Monrad, assistant food commissioner of Illinois, together with Dr. S. M. Babcock and others from the Wisconsin Experimental Station, gave a prestige and standing to the convention which but few meetings of this kind in the United States have ever had.

To think that our farmers should have almost en bloc remained away from this convention, and missed the practical and stirring addresses of the well known authorities on the dairy cow, and how to tend and feed her for profit is, to say the least, a blunder. Perhaps they did not know anything about what was going on, but of this we are doubtful, as the usual means were taken to advertise the gathering. In every community there are farmers to whom the rest naturally look up. They have a good deal of influence, and if you cheese-makers can get those farmers to come to this meeting, they will carry a great amount of good to their brother farmers. Those cheese-makers who have not attended these conventions where others interested in the same line of work are wont to meet together, can hardly realize the benefits derived from such meetings. Upon such we would urge the value of attendance. Once a year at least, at any reasonable cost, it is well to break away from the rut of individual work and mingle with the broader field of associated effort. A man is brightened by contact with others of his kind. He gets new ideas, loses some old ones, and keeps abreast of the times.—U. S. Baer, Secretary, Madison, Wisconsin.

Preservatives in England.

It is entirely probable that a law will be passed in England at an early date permitting the use of borax in butter to the extent of one-half of one per cent. The same law will prohibit the use of any preservative in milk. On January 10, 1899, Parliament passed a law creating a commission to investigate the harmfulness or harmlessness of preservatives in butter and milk. This commission has been at work for over two years collecting evidence and making experiments. It has sought information not only in England but in foreign countries. The report that it will make to Parliament is known and it is believed the report will result in the law mentioned. The important thing about it is that it will prevent the use of preservatives in milk. That is the substance largely used as food, especially by invalids and children. No person eats enough butter at any one time to be greatly harmed by the one-half per cent of borax in it. But with milk it is entirely different. It is far more likely to spoil than butter and this fact induces recklessness on the part of people using preservatives in it. Its use in butter should not, however, be encouraged. Butter can be kept without it, provided it was made in a cleanly manner and from clean materials. Perhaps the English favor for preservatives in butter is due to a desire to encourage the import of butter from the colonies, especially Australia and New Zealand. Those countries cannot ship butter to England without the use of some other preservative than cold. The Danes have been urging this as a reason for the purchase of Danish rather than colonial butter. We believe, however, that the English people will still prefer to buy butter without any preservative in it.

Evaporation from Eggs.

The evaporation from eggs during incubation is a factor that has been little studied, though it is evidently of great importance. The observations that have been made have shown the evaporation to be comparatively great and surprisingly uneven. Why one egg should evaporate 50 per cent more water than another is hard to understand. The Rhode Island station in one of its reports on this matter says: The average weight of the three eggs from which goslings were hatched was 6.0052 oz. at the beginning of incubation, and the average weight of the goslings when hatched was 3.8913 oz., showing an average loss of 2.114 oz. during incubation. The individual losses were as follows: Egg No. 4 lost in hatching 1.9827 oz.; egg No. 6 lost 2.1719 oz., and egg No. 7 lost 2.1875 oz. The gosling from egg No. 4 was the only vigorous one, but whether the smaller amount of evaporation from that egg had any relation to the vigor of the gosling we cannot say.

Chicken Coop with Covered Run.

A chicken coop with covered run is illustrated herewith. One of this construction may be used throughout the summer. Being enclosed with inch mesh wire, the danger from prowling rodents and felines is eliminated. Being covered, the run is serviceable in rainy weather, and the chicks are thus saved from severe wettings by the heavy showers.

Poultry Briefs.

The time when eggs are scarcest is the two months from December first to February first. To get eggs at this time is a problem. Yet it can be done; for some men do it. Mr. Henry T. Reed of Adams County, Illinois, writing to The Farmers' Review on the subject says: "During the last twenty years I have bred twelve varieties of standard fowls. The Light Brahmas have produced more eggs for me from December first to February first than any other variety. I am certain that the production of eggs in winter can be greatly increased by proper stock and feeding. The good results from any flock of fowls come entirely from proper care and handling."

A man just going into the poultry business has to decide whether he will rear birds for market (meat) or for sale as breeders. It is difficult to combine the two in a small plant. One man will make the most money supplying eggs and meat to a steady market; another will do better catering to breeders. Some of the items that lead to success are pointed out by Mr. F. A. Edgeworth of Du Page County, Illinois, who writes us as follows: "I find the most profit in raising and selling birds for breeding, and in producing eggs to be sold to breeders, although I do not overlook the good market qualities in the breed I am handling. I always manage to ship all I can at the season when prices are good, and I have always made a good profit on whatever I have sold."

* * *

We have but begun to study the fertility of eggs as influenced by quantity laid and by the time of year. We will doubtless find that the larger the number of eggs dropped by a hen the less likely are they to be fertile. The moult also will doubtless be found to be a factor entering into the question. James K. Page of Vermilion County, Illinois, in a communication to The Farmers' Review, says: "My experience with eggs laid by hens that have gone through the moult and have commenced laying in the fall and early winter and that have continued through the winter, is that they are more fertile in the fall and early winter than in the latter part of the winter and spring. On the other hand, a hen that does not commence to lay till the latter part of winter and early spring drops eggs that are as fertile then as are those laid in the fall." This is a matter of vital interest to the men that start incubators in the fall, as they must depend on fall-laid eggs!

Yield of Wheat in Three Countries.

It is interesting to note the yields of wheat as reported for the United States, Germany and the United Kingdom (Great Britain and Ireland).

	United States:	Germany.	United Kingdom.
1894	13.2	25.1	31.7
1895	13.7	24.4	27.2
1896	12.4	26.4	34.7
1897	13.4	25.3	30.0
1898	15.3	27.2	35.8
1899	12.3	28.4	33.8
Average..	13.4	26.1	32.2

It will thus be seen that the acreage yields in both Germany and the United Kingdom are about double those of the United States. This is due to the practice in those countries of intensive agriculture. American farmers have it easily in their power to enormously increase the wheat output of their wheat lands without increasing the area. In fact, all effort should be put forth toward making each acre do more instead of increasing the number of acres in wheat.

The Visland-Bolmen Railway, in Sweden, has made a satisfactory test of dried peat as fuel for locomotives without changing the firebed.

Profit in Hogs.

Mr. John Cowie of Des Moines, Iowa, in a paper read before the Kansas State Board of Agriculture, gave the results of forty years' experience as a hog-raiser. It contained much valuable instruction, from which we glean the following:

"I have been in the hog industry for the average human life time. I went into the business to make money, and I have made it, and out of the hog. I have stayed in the hog business because there was money in it. I started with a pair at $1.25 apiece. I afterward sold hogs dressed at $1.75 per hundred pounds. But I got away from that style of hog.

"Years after that first experience, I stood in the Chicago market and had the proud satisfaction of selling four carloads of hogs of my own raising, every one of them, and received for them $5,375. When that check was cashed there was not a mortgage left on the home, and there has not been one on it since. You see I owe to the hog the greater part of my worldly possessions. For twenty years my annual sales averaged over $3,000. When the children grew up and had to be sent away to school, and when the wheat crop failed, as it does sometimes with us in Iowa, my main reliance to foot the bills was the hog, and he never yet failed me.

"I wish to speak to you plainly in regard to breeding and feeding hogs in the manner that has been most profitable to me. What I say in regard to this animal is not theory, but is personal experience, at close range.

"The first requirement in the hog industry is a good hog house. There is too much risk from loss unless you have proper shelter for both brood sows and young hogs.

"Another important thing is the pasture.

"All the leading breeds are good enough for me.

"I never lose a sow in farrowing—not one.

"You are no hog man unless you are on good terms with your sows.

"It requires brains to make good hogs.

"I have my pigs come along in May, after we are sure of good weather. Then I let them run in the pasture the whole summer, and they grow to be long, lank, big-boned and big-muscled fellows. No fat on them yet. The following September we commence fattening them. In February they weigh 400 lbs.

"There is nothing that will fatten hogs better than ear corn and water.

"With shoats it is entirely different. Oats and shorts makes an ideal feed for young shoats.

"The hog is the cleanest domestic animal we have, if properly cared for.

"I never had hog cholera on my farm, but they had it all around me of late years.

"After I have my hogs fattened, I would not drive them to market, but haul them. Then I would have my cars well bedded; ride with them myself; go with them to Chicago; stay with them in the yards, water, feed and stay by them until they cross the scales. Stay right with them.

"There is money in the hog business if it is properly conducted. There is no money in it if it is not properly conducted. There is no reason why science cannot be employed in feeding hogs any more than in the construction of a railway bridge. You have to think. You have to experiment. Every man is the architect of his own fortune. Let him get up and hustle, and do some thinking, get action on himself, and luck will follow him.

"I have made a success in swine raising. True, too, I have fed cattle all my life, and raised horses all my life. We used to raise a great deal of wheat. I lost money raising wheat, but I never lost money raising hogs—never did. The hog has always been the one I could fall back on."

Trouble with Ducks.

From the Farmers' Review: What is the matter with my ducks? I had fifty Pekin ducks. They were all right in the summer. About one month ago they began to give out in their legs. Their wings droop and they cannot walk. They eat all right, but after a time they die. I have lost five and think that another will die. The last one that died had some fever and a low quack. I have fed mostly corn, but am feeding bran and beef meal in the morning and corn at night. I keep the ducks in part of the henhouse, on the ground floor.—Fred King, Lake County, Illinois. * * * Will some of our duck raisers throw some light on the problem? We believe the trouble was due to the excessive feeding of corn, and now that the feed has been changed the trouble should disappear.

A Southern Dairy.

To the Farmers' Review: Having lost my right hand in a shredder, I will be obliged to sell my dairy outfit and a herd of dairy Shorthorns, that I have worked for years to collect by careful selection. As to the cost of feeding a herd of this kind I cannot certainly answer at present. I am feeding corn fodder with corn in it, but it was purposely planted very thick with the object of giving a great weight of stalks and little grain. In combination with this I feed a mash composed of two parts bran and one part shorts. As to the prices being paid for good cows: In ordinary years I count spring cows to cost $28.50 per head and fall milkers $32.00 per head.—L. M. Swanzey, Stephenson County, Illinois.

DELAY FOR CANAL

COMMISSION'S SUPPLEMENTAL REPORT FURNISHES AN EXCUSE.

OPPONENTS OF DITCH ARE HAPPY

MAKES A NEW RECOMMENDATION WITH SEVERAL STRINGS TO IT.

BLOCK ACTION IN THE SENATE

NOW FAVORS THE PANAMA ROUTE WITH A NUMBER OF "IFS."

Washington, Jan. 20.—The supplemental report of the Isthmian canal commission, now in the hands of the president, will be sent to congress to-morrow in the same way the original report was sent, with merely a letter of transmittal.

The president will not make any recommendations regarding this report, which is understood to recommend the Panama route with a number of "ifs." With all its efforts to reverse its original recommendation, the commission has been unable to make a clear and explicit recommendation for the purchase of the Panama canal because of the questions that remain uncertain regarding the transfer of the concessions from the French company to the United States government. There must be

Two Separate Negotiations

with Columbia, one to secure permission for the Panama Canal company to sell its property and transfer its concession without the danger of forfeiting all rights and property now held by the company in that state, and another for new concessions to be granted to the United States that would permit of the construction of a canal to be owned and controlled by this government. These two "ifs" make any action by congress at this session practically impossible. There is another "if" regarding the purchase of all the stock in the Panama railroad, without which the government could not purchase the Panama canal.

This supplemental report of the commission will aid the opponents of canal legislation in confusing the situation and delaying the action of the senate. The advocates of the Nicaragua canal assert that this is of the supplemental report. The almost unanimous adoption of the Hepburn bill by the house and the general approval of that action by the American people made necessary some excuse for delay by the senate. The canal commission has furnished the excuse. It has, after making an elaborate report recommending the Nicaragua route, reversed that recommendation in part.

This is more satisfactory to the opponents of canal legislation than would be a clear and explicit reversal, and positive recommendation of the Panama route. Had the commission thrown consistency to the winds and reversed itself completely, the senate would be compelled to act on one proposition or the other. But in a new recommendation, with several strings to it, the senate can throw the responsibility on the commission and say that legislation must wait until all doubts are removed and the way is open for the passage of a canal bill in harmony with the recommendations of this million-dollar commission.

Pleases Some People.

The opponents of all canal legislation are well pleased with the action of Admiral Walker and his associate engineers. They predict that there will be no canal legislation at this session of congress, and they argue that there should be none until there is agreement among the engineers on a practicable route that can be secured. The commission has given substantial aid to those who were three years ago responsible for its creation as a means of preventing the passage of the Nicaragua bill by the Fifty-fifth congress.

The commission has, after spending $1,000,000 in investigating the question and three years' delay, given these opponents of canal legislation just the kind of report they desired to again postpone legislation carrying out the will of the people as expressed in all political platforms of all parties.

FORFEITS RICHES FOR STAGE.

Daughter of Chicago Millionaire Ambitious to Become a Star.

New York, Jan. 20.—Hidden behind the last row of supers in Otis Skinner's production of "Francesca da Rimini" at the Victoria theater is a striking young woman who has renounced a fortune because she believes she has dramatic talent and is destined to become a great star.

She is Mrs. James Hatfield De Laney, wife of a prosperous banker and broker, and great-granddaughter of Alexander Sacket, once owner of the Thousand islands and a pioneer for whom Sacket's harbor, Lake Ontario, was named.

Mrs. De Laney is well known in Chicago society, where her father, Charles Edward Brown, is, she says, a retired millionaire real estate dealer and a member of many fashionable clubs, including the Kenwood and Athletic.

As a young woman Mrs. De Laney became interested in amateur performances and a short time ago, when she made a hit in the leading role of "The Silver Shield," she induced her husband to give his consent to her appearing on the professional stage. When Mr. Brown heard of her intentions he told his daughter plainly that, while he had no control over her, he would disinherit her should she carry out her plan.

FIVE PASSENGERS INJURED.

Passenger Train Crashes Into a Freight Near Kansas City.

Kansas City, Jan. 20.—A west-bound Missouri Pacific passenger train collided head-on with an east-bound freight train one mile east of Etlah early yesterday. Five passengers were injured but no one was killed. Engineer William Maze, of the freight train, had fallen asleep in his cab and ran past Etlah, where he had been ordered to meet the passenger.

HE KNEW HE WOULD DIE.

Farmer Whose Team Was Killed by Lightning Is Prophet.

Luverne, Minn., Jan. 20.—F. Beherens, a farmer living in the northern part of the county, died as a result of injuries received in drilling a well. A year ago he was driving a four-horse team, which was killed by lightning. He then prophesied his own violent death, which occurred within the time he had set.

ALLEGE MALFEASANCE.

County Attorney Is Complained of for Alleged Incompetency and Conspiracy in Wisconsin.

Ashland, Wis., Jan. 21. — Sensational charges, fifteen in number, were signed by Dr. Andrus Saturday against District Attorney Haagenson, charging him with malfeasance in office, with conspiring with the sheriff to mulct the county of various sums and of gross incompetency. Dr. Andrus is a member of the county board and associated with him in the charges is Attorney John H. Dufur and others. The charges will be sent to Gov. La Follette, and he will be asked to take testimony here. All the parties are prominent in politics and warm friends of the governor, and a warm contest will ensue.

SIOUX INDIAN IS LYNCHED.

John Yellow Wolf, Released From Deadwood (S. D.) Jail, Steals Horse to Ride Home and Is Hanged.

Deadwood, S. D., Jan. 21.—John Yellow Wolf, a Sioux who was released from jail here two weeks ago, was lynched for horse stealing while on the way to his home on the Rosebud reservation. When Yellow Wolf started for the agency he was given an old horse and saddle. Below Rapid City he turned the horse loose and caught a young horse on which to complete his journey. He was overtaken by a number of men and was later found dangling to a cottonwood tree near White river.

EXTENSIVE PRAIRIE FIRE.

Hundreds of Tons of Hay Destroyed Across the Border.

Great Falls, Mont., Jan. 21.— Extensive prairie fires are reported on the other side of the international boundary extending for a distance of ten miles west of Sweet Grass hills. Practically all the range between Milk River and Lethbridge has been swept by the flames. Many hundred tons of hay have already been destroyed. The fire extended to the valuable sheep ranches in the Sweet Grass hills and owners of flocks in that vicinity are confronted by the serious necessity of securing new winter ranges.

TOWN THAT BECAME FAMOUS.

Would Like to Have a Visit From Prince Henry.

Milwaukee, Jan. 21.—Mayor David S. Rose last night issued a proclamation for a mass meeting to be held next Thursday night, when a formal invitation will be prepared and extended to Prince Henry of Prussia to visit Milwaukee. The mayor asks all German-American societies and lodges to send committees to the meeting. Senator Quarles, Senator Spooner and Postmaster General Payne have been asked to co-operate in the movement to include Milwaukee on the itinerary of the royal visitor.

GOES TO POOR FARM.

One of the Victims of the Anoka Tragedy Will Remain a Public Charge.

Anoka, Minn., Jan. 21.—William Wise, father of the Wise family, two of whom were murdered twenty months ago, and who himself was shot in the shoulder, neck and side of the head with a charge of buckshot, was brought from Stillwater, Minn., Saturday and taken to the county poor farm. His condition is the same as it was just after being shot and he is paralyzed from the neck down. He adheres to his story told at the trial of the case, and seems perfectly rational. He will remain a county charge until his death.

RAILROADS AGREE ON DATE.

Great Northern, Northern Pacific and Soo Plan to Put New Freight Rate Into Effect on Jan. 25.

St. Paul, Jan. 21.—The Great Northern, Northern Pacific and Soo lines have agreed to change the date upon which the new tariffs are to go into effect, the new date being Jan. 25 instead of Feb. 1. The reason given is that the tariffs will be ready five days sooner than anticipated, and that the rates might as well go into effect that much earlier. The Chicago lines agreed to the change, but in a manner which leaves the suspicion that these lines may soon announce independent action.

DECLARE BABY WAS SMOTHERED.

Kenosha Doctors Called to Examine Into the Death of Infant Child of Mr. and Mrs. Amus.

Kenosha, Wis., Jan. 21.—A sensational case developed in this city Saturday afternoon when a number of doctors in the city were called to hold a conference over the remains of the infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Paul Amus. The examination resulted in the doctors announcing that the child had been smothered. The district attorney at once ordered the coroner to summon a jury and hold an inquest.

A HEAP OF RUINS

ALL THAT NOW REMAINS OF FOUR LARGE BUILDINGS IN DETROIT.

COLLAPSE WITHOUT ANY WARNING

NO ONE SEEMS TO KNOW WHAT CAUSED THE SUDDEN CATASTROPHE.

MIGHT HAVE BEEN MANY DEATHS

IF THE ACCIDENT HAD OCCURRED ON ANY OTHER DAY THAN SUNDAY.

Detroit, Jan. 21. — Four buildings each four stories high, located in the heart of the wholesale district, collapsed at 8:30 last night, without any apparent cause and all that now remains is a smouldering heap of ruins. The buildings were a part of the block bounded by Jefferson avenue and Shelby and Griswold streets, and were occupied by five concerns and their stocks are a total loss, which is estimated at $152,000 exclusive of the loss on the buildings, which amounts to $50,000. The buildings joined each other at the corner of Jefferson avenue and Shelby street. No one seems to know what caused the collapse of the buildings. On Sunday night that district is practically deserted and the few who were in the vicinity say that the buildings seemed to fall into a heap without apparent cause, making a noise like the rumbling of distant thunder. There are evidences of an explosion about the ruins, but no one heard a sound of such an explosion. The walls of the rear part of the Maddocks Glove company's building are still standing to the height of two stories, but the roof of this part of the building lies turned in the middle of Shelby street, and a large iron smokestack lies on the sidewalk on the opposite side of the street, mashed against the buildings there, as if driven by force. Experts from the Detroit Gas company's office made an examination of the ruins but said they were unable to find evidences of a gas explosion.

Bottom Side Upward

It was fortunate that the wreck occurred on Sunday night. Had it happened during the business hours the loss of life would have been appalling, as there are approximately 200 persons employed by the various firms. They would have been caught in a veritable death trap and crushed and burned before they could have been rescued. The buildings collapsed into a heap and in a short space of time the inflammable material caught fire from the furnaces used for heating the buildings. There were no watchmen about the premises, consequently there will be no loss of life. No one was injured nor is there any one who can give a definite reason for the catastrophe.

KIND TO THE OLD SOLDIER.

President Roosevelt Issues an Order Regarding Preference in Appointments.

Washington, Jan. 21.—The following exclusive order has been issued, directed to each executive department:

"The attention of the department is hereby called to the provisions of the laws giving preference to veterans in appointment and retention. The president desires that wherever the needs of the service will justify, and the law will permit, preference shall be given alike in appointment and retention to honorably discharged veterans of the Civil war who are fit and well qualified to perform the duties of the places which they seek and are filling.

—"Theodore Roosevelt."

SHERIFF OF BUFFALO REMOVED.

Gov. Odell Accepts Evidence That the Official Was Guilty of Neglect of Duty.

Albany, N. Y., Jan. 21. — Gov. Odell announced Saturday that, after considering the charge against Sheriff Caldwell of Buffalo he had decided to remove him from office. Frank T. Coppins is appointed to succeed Mr. Caldwell. The charge against Sheriff Caldwell, which the governor says has been established by the evidence laid before him, was wilful neglect of duty.

LESS SPEED IN NEW VESSELS.

British Government Orders Torpedo Boat Destroyers Believed Sure to Prove More Effective.

Glasgow, Jan. 21.—The British government has invited tenders on the Clyde for ten torpedoboat destroyers, larger and stronger, but slower than those heretofore built. The idea of the government is that the reduction of speed to twenty-five knots will be more than compensated for by superior powers, more reliability, and greater coal room.

PEASANTS SLAUGHTERED.

Ten of Them Killed by Hungarian Soldiers During a Riot.

Vienna, Jan. 21.—The agrarian agitation at Also Idecs, Hungary, culminated Saturday when the peasants attacked the government taxation commissioner. The gendarmes were called out and fired on the peasants, killing ten and wounding many others.

Groceries Are Scorched.

Richmond, Va., Jan. 21. — Gates & Brown, wholesale grocers, were burned out early yesterday morning. Loss probably about $60,000; fully covered by insurance.

Priest Kills Himself.

St. Louis, Jan. 21.—Frederick Krainhardt, a Catholic priest residing at Josephville, Mo., committed suicide yesterday at a hospital here by hanging himself with a bed sheet. He had been taking treatment for nervousness.

Supervisors Indicted.

Sioux City, Iowa, Jan. 21.—The grand jury of Harrison county has returned indictments against three members of the county board of supervisors after making investigation into the handling of the road fund.

HIS LIFE FOR THE TREASURE.

Diamond Dealer Found Murdered in Front of His Safe.

Rochester, N. Y., Jan. 21. — Dela E. Brown, aged sixty-five, a prominent dealer in diamonds and manufacturer of jewelry, was found murdered in his store here last night. His legs were tied together, and he was gagged with a long red neck scarf. At the back of the head was a hole extending into the brain, and there were several gashes in the scalp, evidently made by a hammer, which was found near the body smeared with blood and white hairs from the head of the victim. The murdered man's head was covered with blood and a pool of it formed on top of a small chest of drawers over which the head lay. All about were evidences of a determined struggle but a thorough search failed to discover any positive clue as to the identity of the murderers. From the position of the body in front of the safe the conclusion was reached by the police that the murderers had placed Mr. Brown before the safe, which was locked, and which contained thousands of dollars worth of diamonds and jewelry, and tried to force him to work the combination for them. His right hand was covered with blood, indicating that he had raised it to his head, when he was struck, and tried to ward off the other blows which followed. The murderers secured nothing of value, perhaps a diamond stud which Mr. Brown wore, and which was missing.

FARMER USES SHOTGUN.

Persistent Suitor for a Young Lady's Hand Is Killed.

Van Wert, Ohio, Jan. 21.—John Garwood was shot and killed early yesterday by John Bauman, a neighboring farmer. Bauman has a daughter about sixteen years of age to whom Garwood has been paying attention. Garwood came in a buggy, accompanied by another man, and, knocking repeatedly on the door, demanded admittance. Bauman says after he had repeatedly requested Garwood to leave, he opened the door, with his shotgun in hand, and demanded that Garwood leave the premises, which he refused to do. Bauman says he then saw Garwood draw a revolver. Bauman raised his shotgun and fired into Garwood's left breast, causing instant death. Bauman gave himself up.

DOUBLE TRAGEDY.

Mysterious Affair at Cincinnati That May Never Be Cleared Up.

Cincinnati, Jan. 21.—While Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Whittaker were out calling last evening their babe was left with Annie Loge, a domestic. When they returned Miss Loge was found upstairs in an unconscious condition from asphyxiation. She had turned on the gas and inhaled it from the jet. Later Mr. and Mrs. Whittaker found their dead babe hanging to a gaspipe in the cellar. The physicians say the woman cannot survive. As she is not expected to recover consciousness the story of the double tragedy may never be known. Mr. Whitaker is a prominent member of the Cincinnati bar.

WILLING TO ABDICATE.

But Alexander Wants to Be Sure of a Good Pension.

Vienna, Jan. 21.—The Belgrade correspondent of the Neue Freie Presse declares the question of succession to the throne of Servia to be ripe for solution, as King Alexander, if guaranteed a sufficient pension, is willing to abdicate in favor of Prince Alexis Karageorgevitch, a descendant from Gara George, the Black George of the Servians, and claimant to the throne of Servia. In any case, continues the correspondent, Prince Alexis Garageorgevitch is likely to be proclaimed heir to the throne, as neither Russia nor Austria objects to this course.

AIMS TO KILL PRESIDENT.

Soldier Who Threatened Mr. Roosevelt Sent to Prison.

Astoria, Or., Jan. 21.—Frank Rakowski, a soldier in the United States army, was degraded at Fort Canby and sentenced to ten years' imprisonment in the military prison on Alcatraz Island, Cal. He had threatened to kill President Roosevelt. Rakowski was a member of Capt. Cloke's company, stationed at Fort Stevens. He was on detached duty at Fort Columbia, Wash., when he voiced the anarchist sentiment, and after arrest by the civil authorities was turned over to the military officials at Fort Canby. He was tried before a general court-martial.

RESCUED WITH DIFFICULTY.

Fifteen Employes in a Burning Building Have Narrow Escape.

New York, Jan. 21. — Fire broke out last night in the building on Broadway occupied by Blumenthal & Stiner, manufacturers of artificial flowers and feathers; Roche, Croll & Co., manufacturers of neckties, and Samuel Folkoff, cloaks and suits. Fifteen of Folkoff's employes, at work on the fifth floor, were rescued with difficulty and several firemen were overcome. The loss is put at $75,000.

MURDER AT A DANCE.

Colored Men Get Into a Fight and Two Are Killed.

Montgomery, W. Va., Jan. 21.—At a colored dance ten miles south of this place, W. B. Slaughter and Ralph Johnson were shot and killed by Lillian Williams. Powell Calloway was mortally wounded, being struck by a stray bullet. The murderess is in jail. Jealousy was the cause.

Engineer and Fireman Are Killed.

Parkersburg, W. Va., Jan. 21. — Two freight trains met in head-end collision on the Baltimore & Ohio railroad six miles north of here yesterday, killing the engineer and fireman of one train and injuring the brakeman on each train.

Killed His Employer With an Axe.

Worcester, Mass., Jan. 21. — Samson Seaverns, eighty-three years old, living between Rutland and Princeton, was killed by Lem Hapgood, an employe on his farm. Seaverns was attacked with an axe while in bed. Hapgood escaped.

Caught on a Trestle.

Brenham, Tex., Jan. 21.—Prof. W. C. Crossman and his fifteen-year-old son Willie were caught on a trestle one mile north of town last evening and run down by a passenger train. Both were instantly killed.

JEWELS ARE GONE

MINNEAPOLIS TRAVELING MAN IS ROBBED AT GLENDIVE, MONTANA.

$20,000 WORTH OF JEWELRY TAKEN

TRUNKS ARE STOLEN FROM A BAGGAGEMAN AND BROKEN OPEN.

AN UNUSUALLY BOLD ROBBERY

EXPRESS AGENT SLEPT IN ADJOINING ROOM WHILE THE ROBBERS WORKED.

Glendive, Mont., Jan. 21. — Robbers yesterday morning secured about twenty thousand dollars worth of unset and set diamonds by stealing two iron-bound trunks from the baggage room of the Northern Pacific station and breaking them open. A bag of diamonds and from 300 to 400 rings unmounted in gold settings were stolen. A tray containing twenty-four set diamonds were overlooked by the robbers.

The trunks were the property of C. B. Clausen, traveling representative of S. H. Clausen & Co., wholesale manufacturing jewelers of Minneapolis, who arrived from the East Saturday evening at 7 o'clock, and who left the trunks in charge of the baggage agent.

The robbery was an unusually bold one, as four men were in the second story and the express agent slept in the adjoining room. The robbers forced the baggageroom window with a pinch bar, removed the two trunks, each weighing 250 pounds, through the window and broke them open within twenty feet of the station platform, where they were found yesterday morning. The robbers were undoubtedly old hands and selected the best time, during the absence of the express agent, to do the work.

The local officers have arrested Jimmy McCarty, an ex-prize fighter, who has been acting suspiciously and who carried two large six-shooters when arrested.

UNDER ADVISEMENT.

Another Legal Round in the Montana Copper Fight.

Butte, Mont., Jan. 21. — The suit to secure an injunction and the appointment of a receiver for the property and affairs of the Boston & Montana company in Montana, the plaintiff being John McGinnis and the defendants the Boston & Montana company and the Amalgamated company, came up in Judge Clancey's court upon a motion in behalf of the defendants to set aside the temporary injunction that was granted in that court Nov. 19 last. In presenting the motion to set aside the injunction Attorney Evans called attention to the fact that a similar action was pending in the United States court and that Judge Knowles had made an order enjoining McGinnis from further prosecution of the suit in the district court. The motion to set aside the injunction was taken under advisement.

BROKERS VACCINATED FORCIBLY.

Health Authorities Descend Upon Minneapolis Speculators.

Minneapolis, Jan. 21.—Four hundred persons, brokers, clerks, messengers and visitors were vaccinated by force in the chamber of commerce Saturday while the police guarded the doors to prevent any from escaping. This action by the health authorities was the result of the discovery of a case of smallpox among the employes of the chamber. It was decided to take prompt action, and during the morning session the health officers arrived and a policeman was stationed at every exit. Many protested against this action, but all were compelled to prove they had been vaccinated successfully recently or else submit to the new operation.

SMUGGLING OF CHINAMEN.

Systematic Scheme for Bringing Celestials Into This Country.

Fort Benton, Mont., Jan. 21.—From a discovery made here yesterday it appears that a systematic scheme of smuggling Chinese across the border into the United States has been unearthed. Marshal Sneat noticed smoke issuing from beneath the sidewalk of an old restaurant on Front street, and, on making an investigation, found a fire burning in the cellar and a Chinaman in hiding. In the cellar was found quantities of food, and the celestial had been doing his own cooking. He was placed in jail pending further investigation. He asserts he has papers but was unable to produce them.

TRAGIC TAKING OFF.

North Dakota Man Ends His Life in His Sweetheart's Presence.

Towner, N. D., Jan. 21.—Disappointed in love and brooding over the affair in his lonely homestead cabin on the prairie, C. F. M. McKee called on the lady of his affection and in her presence placed a revolver to his temple and fired, death following instantly. The young man was well known in the community. His mother, living in the village, is heartbroken with grief.

Dentists Will Fight It.

Sioux Falls, S. D., Jan. 21.—The constitutionality of the law passed by the last legislature compelling dentists to pay an annual license of $2 on July 1 of each year is to be tested in the courts. A number have not complied with the new law.

Backed by New York Capital.

Aberdeen, S. D., Jan. 21.—A committee of Watertown business men have been in conference with the Aberdeen Commercial club relative to a proposed railroad line between the two cities. New York capital is behind the scheme.

There It Rests.

Washburn, Wis., Jan. 21. — There is nothing new regarding the destruction of the Washburn, Bayfield & Iron River railroad. No attempts have been made to tear up the line before the hearing to be had on the 25th.

DIAMOND FIELD IN MONTANA.

Lucky Strike Made by Prospectors in Fergus County.

Helena, Mont., Jan. 19. — A special from Lewiston says: A reliable report has reached here of the discovery of an immense diamond field in the northeastern part of Fergus county, which has driven all the prospectors of Spotted Horse and Maiden wild with excitement. When the report reached the former place that a well-known New York jeweler had pronounced the gems of the first water excitement knew no bounds, and last night a party of prospectors started for the Blood creek country, where the find was made, to locate ground in what has proved to be a genuine diamond field. Several weeks ago Cliff Doe and another prospector visited the Blood creek country on a hunting trip, and while there Doe picked up a number of pebbles. Attracted by their unusual character Doe forwarded the stones to a jewelry establishment in New York. Two days ago he received an answer from the jewelery concern, stating that the pebbles were diamonds of the first water.

Notwithstanding the fact that Doe made every endeavor to keep the news to himself it leaked out, and last night a party of prospectors started for the place of the reported discovery. Blood creek is a small stream in the northeastern part of the county, located in a wild and broken country.

BUFFALO DYING OFF.

Yellowstone National Park Herd Is in Need of New Blood.

Butte, Mont., Jan. 19.—According to reports received from the Yellowstone National Park the buffalo herd within its confines is rapidly disappearing, and, unless congress makes further provision, threatens to become extinct. New blood must be introduced into the little herd frequenting geyserland. Last winter but eighteen buffalos remained in the Hayden valley of the former herd of thirty. The specimens that now exist lack the strength of their former hardy predecessors and are barely able to withstand the rigors of the winter. Elk are reported more numerous than any other animal in the park. There are at least 50,000 of them within the park limits.

BEDBUG DECISION.

Famous Case in Iowa Appealed to Supreme Court.

Sioux City, Iowa, Jan. 19.—A decision has been rendered at Akron, Iowa, in the case of Bly vs. Sears, in which the court held that the presence of bedbugs in a hotel did not furnish grounds for the recovery of damages. The case has been appealed and promises to rival the famous Jones county calf case. The case was brought by Frank Bly against H. D. Sears for recovery of $90 back rent. Sears, who had rented the hotel of Bly, refused to pay the $90 on the unique excuse that the buggy condition of the hotel was a damage; that Bly knew and could not help knowing it was buggy, and that, therefore, the house was leased under fraudulent representations.

IOWA FIRE LOSSES.

Last Year Was a Record Breaker for Town Fires.

Des Moines, Iowa, Jan. 19.—The insurance companies and representatives in Iowa have kept close record of the fire losses in this state during recent years and they find that the losses in the year 1901 were measurably larger than in any year in the history of the state. The heaviest losses were in Des Moines and Davenport, where three-quarters of a million dollars' worth of property was consumed in each city. The total losses aggregate $3,901,000, not including losses on farm property.

FIRE FIGHTER HURT.

Store and Stock in Twin Valley Is Damaged and Lost.

Twin Valley, Minn., Jan. 19. — Fire started in James Nelson's general store early yesterday morning and had gained considerable headway before being discovered. By prompt and efficient work on the part of the fire department the flames were soon under control. The building was badly damaged and the stock nearly a total loss from damage by smoke and water, all covered by insurance. While working with the hose John Moe fell from the roof and sustained a broken ankle.

"All Hail" Not Intoxicating.

Jamestown, N. D., Jan. 19. — After considering the case of Grove Cowles for ten minutes the jury found he was not guilty of fracturing the prohibition law. An attempt was made to secure the conviction of Anthony Spangler on a charge of having sold intoxicating beverages, but the jury found him not guilty. The complaint was regarding Spangler's sale of a liquid called "All Hail," which was claimed to be intoxicating.

Pay High for Farm Land.

Crookston, Minn., Jan. 19.—The Geo. Purvis farm south of this city was sold for $42 per acre, this being the highest price paid for farm lands in any considerable quantity in this section. The farm contains 320 acres. It was sold to Iowa parties, who will plant a part of it, as it adjoins the Great Northern yards at South Crookston.

This Officeholder Resigned.

Newton, Iowa, Jan. 19.—The case of William Deutsch, supervisor of this county, is unique. He went through a hard campaign to get the nomination and election to the board. He was elected, and after serving two weeks, concluded he wasn't fitted for the position and handed in his resignation.

Work Pleads Guilty.

St. Paul, Jan. 19.—William J. Work, the former night clerk at the postoffice, was arraigned before Judge Lochren in the United States district court yesterday morning and pleaded guilty to taking money from the mails. He was sentenced to two years at Stillwater.

Looking for Another Pastor.

Fargo, N. D., Jan. 19.—The resignation of Rev. W. W. Reed of the First Baptist church was accepted at the official meeting and a committee appointed to select another pastor. Mr. Reed's resignation was a surprise.

Used Dehorning Fluid for Eyewater.

Osage, Iowa, Jan. 19.—Guy Webster of this city, who has been taking treatment for his eyes, poured dehorning fluid into them by mistake last night. He is in a very critical condition with no hope of saving his eyes.

EXPENSIVE MEALS

RATHBONE RUNS BIG BILLS ON HIS VISITS TO WASHINGTON.

FISCAL ASKS ABOUT EXPENSES

FAMILY EXPENSES INCLUDED IN THE POSTAL ACCOUNTS TURNED IN.

WITNESSES COME VERY HIGH

ONE OF THEM CHARGES $42 A DAY FOR EXPENSES IN HAVANA.

Havana, Jan. 17.—In the trial of the postoffice cases to-day the fiscal concluded his examination of ex-Director of Posts Rathbone. Regarding the expenses of two trips of Rathbone to the United States in 1900, the fiscal tried to show that the expenses of Mrs. Rathbone and the family were included in some of the postal accounts turned in by Rathbone. The latter claimed that these expenses were paid by himself; that an itemized private account was kept by Secretary Wilmot, and the bills were subsequently settled by the witness out of his own pocket.

The Fiscal produced an account amounting to $238 for expenses for eight days at a hotel in Washington for Rathbone alone, in which $83 was charged for meals. Rathbone admitted that his wife was with him at the hotel, but said he had not charged her expenses to the postal account.

Rathbone was again confronted with Reeves, their respective testimony regarding a certain draft for $500 being contradictory. Rathbone maintained that he returned to Reeves the amount of the draft, which was originally drawn to pay the expenses of a trip to Santiago. The money was not needed and was therefore returned. The witness got no receipt for the money. Reeves denied that he received the money from Rathbone. The latter said he considered it right to charge certain private expenses and the repairs of his house to the postal accounts. Gen. Ludlow and Gen. Brooke had allowed such expenses, the former to the extent of $5,000 and the latter to the extent of $7,500.

Rathbone frequently said in response to questions that he could not remember.

Two of the witnesses in the case have returned to the United States, owing to pressing business. It is understood that one of them charged $42 a day expenses while here. There are about twenty witnesses from from the United States.

VENEZUELA'S PLAINT.

Minister of Foreign Affairs Cables of the Ban Righ.

Washington, Jan. 17. — Venezuela has sent the following cablegram to the British government, according to advices received here from Caracas: "English steamship Ban Righ, armed for war, is inimical to Venezuela.

—"Minister of Foreign Affairs."

The British foreign office has not replied to this note.

Officers of British warships now at La Guayra, a seaport of Caracas, consider that the Ban Righ, which is now called the Liberator by Venezuelan insurgents, is a smuggling and revolutionary vessel and they will not interfere with her movements because she has not committed any piratical action up to the present time against foreign interests. The craft, they assert, cannot be considered as an enemy to the human race.

FROM JEST TO ALTAR.

Kansas City Doctor Weds Woman He Had Never Seen Before.

Chicago, Jan. 17.—Meeting and marrying a woman whom he had never seen before was an undertaking which Dr. Andrew Stewart Hackney of Kansas City, yesterday accomplished on his arrival in Chicago. Miss Josephine Mulock came all the way from Middletown, N. Y., to meet him and they were married last night at St. Paul's church.

The marriage was the outcome of a jest made by Miss Mulock, when a mutual friend told her that Dr. Hackney would make her a good husband. Miss Mulock said she would marry him.

A correspondence was started and soon a proposal came from Dr. Hackney, which was accepted. Dr. Hackney is fifty-six years old and his wife is thirty-four. She is said to be wealthy.

CAPT. PERRY MAY HAVE TROUBLE.

Reported as Saying That Chilean Navy Would Defeat American in the Event of War.

Washington, Jan. 17. — Secretary Long has sent a letter to Capt. Thomas Perry, commanding the battleship Iowa, inviting his attention to the editorial of La Prensa, a newspaper of Buenos Ayres, quoting the naval officer as saying in a speech in Chili that in case of war the Chilian navy would be victorious.

By the time Capt. Perry has received the department's communication he will have arrived at Buenos Ayres and will probably there learn that he has been criticised by the Argentine press.

The authorities are satisfied that Capt. Perry will be able to make an explanation which will be satisfactory to the secretary and to the Argentine people.

DESPERATE PAIR OF BURGLARS.

Caught in the Act of Carrying Away Silverware, They Are Fired at and Respond Fatally.

New York, Jan. 17. — The discovery of a man and a woman, both burglars, and both armed with revolvers, in the house at 920 Morris avenue in the Bronx, was followed by a fusillade of revolver shooting, in which Colin Barret, one of three brothers living there, was perhaps mortally wounded.

Barrett caught the man and woman in the act of carrying off the family silverware. The burglars opened fire on him as soon as he appeared. He fired in return, as also did his two brothers.

The intruders continued to shoot until their revolvers were empty and Colin Barrett was shot in the side. He is not expected to live. The man and woman escaped.

ON THE FIELD OF HONOR.

Son of a Former Prominent German Politician Is Mortally Wounded.

Berlin, Jan. 17.—Landrath von Bennigsen, son of a former prominent politician, was shot and, it is believed, mortally wounded in a duel to-day near Hanover with Herr Falkenhagen.

Zienkiewicz in Trouble.

FAR AWAY AND MARRIED.

Fifteen-Year-Old Daughter of Prof. Hays Elopes.

St. Paul, Jan. 17.—Bessie Hays, the fifteen-year-old daughter of Prof. W. M. Hays of the state school of agriculture, eloped Tuesday night with Sumner Pratt, an employe of the institution. Miss Hays went to her room as usual about 9 o'clock, to retire. Yesterday morning Prof. Hays found his daughter's room vacant and a brief note left on the table stating that by the time he read the lines she would be far beyond recall with Mr. Pratt. Pratt is a young fellow in his early twenties. He has been rather attentive to Miss Hays for some time past. This was not especially objected to by the parents of the girl, except that she is so young, and that he has no start in life.

HE'S KID CURLEY.

Harvey Logan Identified as Desperado by Banker.

Helena, Mont., Jan. 17.—T. A. Marlow, president of the National Bank of Montana, yesterday identified the picture of Harvey Logan, the man who was arrested at Knoxville, Tenn., with stolen Bank of Montana notes in his possession, as the picture of Kid Curry, a notorious desperado of this state. The picture was received by the bank from the Pinkerton detective agency. Mr. Marlow had formerly employed Curry as a cowboy and knew him well. Curry, or Logan, is in jail at Knoxville. His identification by Mr. Marlow may mean that he will be prosecuted for the robbery of the Great Northern express train.

CUMMINS IS IT.

Iowa Legislature Canvasses the Vote for Governor.

Des Moines, Iowa, Jan. 17.—The joint convention of the two houses met yesterday afternoon and completed the canvass of the vote on governor and lieutenant governor. President J. C. Milliman formally declared Albert B. Cummins elected governor of Iowa for the ensuing two years and John Herriott elected lieutenant governor. They will assume office to-day. Following is the official vote on governor: Cummins (Rep.), 226,602; Phillips (Dem.), 143,783; Coolen (Pop.), 15,659; Baxter (Socialist), 3,463; Weller (People's), 770; Conger, 1; Seatberg, 1; total, 380,489.

FIRE AT WARREN.

Two Business Houses Are Burned Out.

Warren, Minn., Jan. 17.—Last night fire destroyed the building occupied by Ben Penturen as a general store and D. Farrell as a jewelry store. The fire originated in a room occupied by Penturen and was caused by the explosion of gases in a stove filled with soft coal. Penturen's loss was total, while Farrell succeeded in saving everything. The building was between two bricks and thus a general conflagration was prevented. The loss will probably reach $5,000.

CHILDREN PERISH.

Two of Them Reported Cremated in Their Burning Home.

Duluth, Minn., Jan. 17. — It was reported in Duluth last night that the dwelling of a man named Nichols, sixteen miles from here, has been destroyed by fire and two small children cremated. It has been impossible to get further particulars or fully confirm the report.

Accused of Embezzlement.

Janesville, Wis., Jan. 17. — E. O. Brown, agent for the Bellingham-Hixon Lumber Company of Madison at Oxfordville, Wis., has been arrested on the charge of embezzling $6,000 of the company's funds. He has been in the employ of the concern for several years and enjoyed its fullest confidence. It is thought the money was lost in speculation on the board of trade in Chicago.

Carnegie Offers $10,000 to Tipton.

Tipton, Iowa, Jan. 17.—This city is to have a new free public library building the coming summer. Judge Treichler wrote to Andrew Carnegie soliciting a donation and he received a letter stating that if the city council would pledge itself to support a free library at a cost of $1,000 a year and provide a site, he would give $10,000. This offer will be promptly complied with.

Death May Be Result.

Souris, N. D., Jan. 17.—Louis Thompson, a wheat buyer at this place, recently met with a serious and probably fatal accident. Mr. Thompson was examining a revolver in a local hardware store, and while in the act of handing it to the clerk the weapon was discharged, the bullet striking Thompson several inches above the groin. His condition is very critical.

Woman Dead in Woods.

Red Wing, Minn., Jan. 17. — Mary Norlin was found dead in the woods near Sogn, this county, presumably frozen to death. The coroner deemed an inquest unnecessary. Yesterday the county attorney stopped the funeral proceedings pending investigation on demand of many people of the vicinity who believe the woman to have been foully dealt with.

Lucky Farmers.

Zumbrota, Minn., Jan. 17.—The annual meeting of the Zumbrota Farmers' Mercantile Elevator company was held yesterday. About 150 stockholders were present. This company has made a fine showing in the last year, and besides adding $1,800 to its working capital declared a dividend of 50 per cent.

Keig Is Dead.

Madison, Wis., Jan. 17. — Benjamin Keig, who murdered his wife on Monday, died last evening at the city hospital. He cut his wife's throat with a butcher knife and then carved his own with the same weapon.

BIG LOSS OF LIFE

MOST DESTRUCTIVE SEISMIC PHENOMENA IN THE HISTORY OF MEXICO.

AT LEAST 300 PERSONS KILLED

EARTHQUAKE CAUSES DEATH AND DESTRUCTION IN MANY PLACES.

FINE BUILDINGS ARE LAID LOW

TROOPS ARE ORDERED OUT TO ASSIST IN THE WORK OF RESCUE.

Mexico City, Jan. 18. — One of the most terrible catastrophes in the history of the State of Guerrero is reported to have occurred late Thursday afternoon, when an extremely violent earthquake shock was felt at Chilpancingo, causing great loss of life and injuring many persons. Details from the stricken district are very meager, but scattered reports received here indicate that probably 300 persons were killed and as many more injured. It is known that the state capitol, the parish church and many business houses and residences are in ruins and there is much suffering as a result of the awful seismic disturbance.

One of the edifices that suffered most was the federal telegraph office, which explains the paucity of news that has so far reached this city. Meager details finally began to arrive here. The telegraph lines and apparatus at Chilpancingo were badly damaged, but the employes, all of whom were uninjured, quickly proceeded to erect an improvised telegraph office on the outskirts of the city.

Mexico's Worst Disaster.

The number of deaths was greater in the parish church than in any single place, as a crowd of worshipers was gathered there for the afternoon service. The solid mason walled roof toppled down on the worshipers and several were killed.

The war department has ordered troops in the neighborhood to co-operate in the work of rescue. Until this work is completed it will be impossible accurately to learn the number of victims. It is believed, however, that this is one of the most destructive seismic phenomena that has occurred in Mexico. The greater part of the population of Chilpancingo are now camping out under tents around the town, which is five days' journey from the national capital.

Earthquake shocks were felt in many other towns and cities. In Mexico City the earthquake took place at 5:17 o'clock Thursday afternoon and was of such violence as to shake the most substantial buildings. The Pan-American congress was in session at the time and many of the delegates

Were Greatly Alarmed.

The first movement here was one of trepidation and was very sharp. It was followed by an easy oscillatory movement north-northeast to south-southwest. The duration was fifty-five seconds. The damage in this city was only slight.

The State of Guerrero has always been the focus of seismic disturbances. Reports received here state that the shock was very severe at Chilapa. No casualties are so far reported from there. The duration of the Chilpancingo shock was less than that in Mexico City, having lasted fifty seconds, against fifty-five seconds at the capital.

The earthquake was also intense at Iguala, in the State of Guerrero, destroying the parish church and many buildings in the city and neighborhood. Among the latter was the sugar mill of Gen. Frisbie, an American. The mill had just been completed and fitted up with American machinery at a cost of $200,000. The property loss is immense throughout the state of Guerrero.

TOO MUCH HONESTY.

Bird S. Coler Lectures on Municipal Reform and Rule.

Ann Arbor, Mich., Jan. 19.—Bird S. Coler of New York lectured before the Good Government club on "Some Phases of Municipal Administration."

Among other things he said: "I do not know where I stand in public life. I found that I was too good for the machine and too bad for the reformers."

Mr. Coler said too much stress was put upon honesty, as no man should be elected to an office simply because he was honest. Honesty, he said, should be the characteristic of everybody, but an officeholder should have ability also.

"HANG ME EARLY."

Maryland Murderer Spoils the Fun of the Crowd.

Upper Marlboro, Md., Jan. 19.—Henry Boyd (colored) was hanged here for the murder of Martha Owen, his sweetheart, whose throat he confessed to having cut on the night of Aug. 6, 1901. He was hanged at an early hour at his own request. He said he wanted to leave the world before the crowd expected reached town.

SUICIDE'S SHORTAGE.

Former Louisville Treasurer's Stealings Were Large.

Louisville, Ky., Jan. 19.—Former City Treasurer Stuart R. Young's shortage is placed at $40,250 by expert accountants who have been examining the books of the treasurer's office and who to-night made a report. Young committed suicide in November when news of this shortage was published in a newspaper.

HE SAVES MR. STOVER.

Gov. Yates Declines to Send Stover Back to North Dakota.

Springfield, Ill., Jan. 19.—Gov. Yates refused to honor a requisition from the governor of North Dakota for the extradition of John Stover, now under arrest in Chicago and wanted in North Dakota to answer a charge of obtaining money upon false pretenses. The requisition papers were not properly drawn, and for this reason the requisition was not honored. Stover was traveling in North Dakota and is charged with having received various sums of money for school charts which he failed to deliver.

CAUGHT ON THE FLY.

Alleged Criminal Is Arrested While on a Train.

Fargo, N. D., Jan. 18.—The sheriff of Sioux county, Iowa, arrived here yesterday for Leroy Miller, who has been under surveillance by the local police for a week. Miller started west on the Northern Pacific train that brought the sheriff here, but was arrested at Casselton and brought back to Fargo. He is charged with grand larceny. It is claimed $300 or $400 are involved, and although requisition papers have been granted, Miller will endeavor to secure his release on a writ of habeas corpus.

STRIKING PAPERMAKERS.

Neither Side Will Make Concessions Demanded.

Menasha, Wis., Jan. 18. — A. McMillan of Milwaukee and G. W. Willot of Madison, members of the state board of arbitration, were unable to effect any settlement in the paper mill strike. Both the strikers and the employers are determined not to give in, and it is probable that the strike will be fought to the bitter end. The manufacturers offered to grant shorter hours, but insisted that a reduction of the wage scale must follow. This the men would not hear to.

FOR SELLING LIQUOR.

City Physician of Webster City Is Under Arrest.

Webster City, Iowa, Jan. 18.—Dr. H. C. Wheeler, city physician, was arrested by order of County Attorney Boeye charged with keeping and selling intoxicating liquors. Many similar prosecutions have been brought about of late. As Webster City is the only place of 9,000 population in the state without the legalized saloon, the bootlegging business flourishes.

Blew Open the Safe.

Seattle, Wash., Jan. 18.—E. G. Carlson, night watchman of the West Seattle Grain Elevator company, was overpowered by three masked men at 3 o'clock yesterday morning, who then blew open the safe. The charge of dynamite wrecked the building and set it on fire, but the fire was immediately extinguished by the robbers. They failed to get anything from their bold attempt.

Bus Rolls Down a Hill.

Missoula, Mont., Jan. 18.—As a party of about twenty young people were returning from a skating party yesterday the conveyance was accidentally overturned and rolled down a steep hill, a distance of about twenty feet. All of the party were more or less injured. The condition of Miss Fannie Robinson is considered critical.

Charged With Robbery.

Waterloo, Iowa, Jan. 18. — Fred W. Wells of Waterloo and Ellsworth Morrison of Cedar Rapids were held to the federal grand jury for robbing the mails. They are alleged to have ransacked the lock box of Jacob Black, a dry goods merchant here, and to have secured about $30 in drafts, which they attempted to cash.

Banks Bid for State Funds.

Bismarck, Jan. 18.—The state board of auditors has awarded bids for the ensuing year from banks seeking to become depositories for the state funds and have designated depositories for the two-year term from the present date. All bids offering less than 2 per cent on average daily business were thrown out.

Hawkeye Spiritualists.

Sumner, Iowa, Jan. 18. — L. Welkes, a former employe of the Chicago & Northwestern road, slipped from a car near here, rolling under the wheels. Both legs were cut off and he died a few hours later.

GOES A'COURTING

MISS COLUMBIA RAPIDLY BECOMING A VERY POPULAR LADY.

KAISER WANTS OUR FRIENDSHIP

ANXIOUS TO SHOW HIS GOOD WILL, HENCE PRINCE HENRY'S VISIT.

IS JEALOUS OF GREAT BRITAIN

DISPUTES J. BULL'S PRETENSIONS TO OUR EXCLUSIVE FRIENDSHIP.

Washington, Jan. 18. — The visit of Prince Henry of Germany to this country next month is attracting more than usual attention, as significant of the cordial relations existing between the two nations.

Prince Henry comes nominally to represent the emperor at the launching of his new yacht building by a New York firm. But the emperor has had yachts built in England and other countries of Europe without sending a royal representative to the launching. The emperor's yacht is only the excuse; the incident is the visit of the emperor's brother to the United States to show the cordial relations existing between the two nations.

The Cause of This is the extraordinary efforts made by Great Britain in the last four years to demonstrate that she is the one chosen and particular friend of the United States on the other side of the Atlantic. This effort began during the war with Spain, when reports were circulated from London that Great Britain had prevented a concert of the powers against the United States and in behalf of Spain. The Von Diedrich-Dewey incident in Manila bay was exaggerated to make it appear that Germany was suspicious of and hostile to our intentions

In the Philippines.

There was the same effort made to create the impression of hostility on the part of Russia in China. Great Britain has consented to the new canal treaty and the abrogation of the old Clayton-Bulwer treaty. This has been heralded as another evidence of the friendship of Great Britain for the United States. The same power invited the United States to send a special ambassador to the coronation of King Edward, and that invitation has been accepted. It is a new precedent, but such an invitation could not be declined. It is apparent that John Bull is cultivating Uncle Sam for a purpose, and that purpose laudable and legitimate. It is a recognition of the pre-eminence of the United States on the Western continent and its place among the great world powers. The emperor of Germany is following the example of the king of England and making the opportunity

To Show His Friendship.

So far as diplomatic relations are concerned, these have been most cordial, but there have been unfortunate incidents that encouraged the popular impression that there was friction between Germany and the United States.

Emperor William has taken occasion to give emphatic illustration of his friendship. No other government of Europe has given such pronounced recognition of the Monroe doctrine. When Germany determined to send warships to Venezuela a few weeks ago, permission was requested of the United States and pledges given as to what should be done and what should not be done by Germany. It was of the Monroe doctrine by the German emperor. This was the more significant, because of President Castro's efforts to dispose of the islands off the coast of Venezuela to Germany for the purpose of precipitating trouble between Germany and the United States. Emperor William declined to purchase the islands and served notice on President Castro that the German claims against Venezuela must be settled. Then he asked the consent of the United States to send his warships into the Caribbean sea as a demonstration against Venezuela.

When Emperor William wanted a new yacht for the Kiel races next year he gave the contract to an American firm. And when it was ready to be launched he requested that President Roosevelt's daughter be allowed to christen that imperial yacht. These courtesies prepared the way for the incident of Prince Henry's visit to the United States as the bearer of messages of

Friendship and Good Will

from the emperor to the president and his government. The politicians of Europe may talk about these efforts of England and Germany to cultivate the friendship of the United States, and in Washington they are considered as significant in this, that they give recognition of this government as a world power by two of the strongest nations of Europe.

Prince Henry will be received by the president with all the honors that can be shown to the representative of the emperor of Germany consistent with the democratic simplicity of a republican form of government. He will be met by a squadron of the United States navy and also by representatives of the state department and the army. The president will attend the launching and the prince will come to Washington. This visit of Prince Henry will be made an event as were the visits of the prince of Wales and the Duke Alexis, but it will be the more significant than either by reason of the efforts of European powers to show their friendship for the United States at a time when this government has stepped to the front as a world power, with great possessions in the Orient, which is looked to as the future market of the world.

NO POSTPONEMENT.

St. Louis Exposition Will Come Off According to Schedule.

St. Louis, Jan. 18. —To set at rest statements coming from Washington to the effect that the Louisiana Purchase exposition might have to be postponed from 1903 to 1904, the executive committee of the exposition company last night unanimously adopted the following resolution:

"Whereas, The public press has agitated the question of postponement of the Louisiana Purchase exposition,

"Resolved, That under the act of congress and under every plan of the board of directors and executive committee, the exposition will open and close in the year 1903."

Hawkeye Editors.

Des Moines, Jan. 18. — The Iowa State Editorial association assembled in Des Moines to-day, nearly 200 being present. C. M. Junkin of Fairfield was elected president and W. A. Parrott of Waterloo, secretary. Meetings will be held annually.

Rickerby's Folly

By TOM GALLON

CHAPTER XII.

Master Veevers Gives Trouble.

The gentleman of the Newmarket coat, who had claimed the hospitality of Rickerby's Folly on the strength of calling Cornelius his father, was one of those persons born into the world with a curious faculty of thrusting their noses into the business of their neighbors. As a youth this young gentleman had devoured detective stories by the score, had invested his first pocket-money in a dark lantern, and regarded every policeman he met with an awe which usually attaches only to royalty.

Later on, with the first down upon his lip, he took to studying the "Agony Column" in the daily papers, and striving to piece together the mysteries which they hid, or tried to hide, from the gaze of those not actually concerned in the writing or reading of them. By day he occupied a position behind the counter of a hardware establishment, whose very knives suggested possible future crimes; by night, having donned the Newmarket coat, he blossomed out into a very private detective of his own making—a man who scented a mystery with every shadow that crossed a blind in a dark street, or saw a fugitive from justice in every respectable citizen running to catch a train or keep an appointment.

To such a man, the advertisement which had appeared in the papers concerning Gilbert Rickerby, came as something more than food and drink. In the first place, there was the £100—sufficient to tempt any man to bring all his powers to bear upon the case; in the second place, when he came to dive into the matter, and to make cautious inquiries in the neighborhood, there was the haunted house. Small wonder now that Mr. Enoch Hubbard (to give him his right name) flung himself eagerly into the business, and felt that here, at last, was his supreme opportunity.

He began, as has been shown, lingering outside the house, and watching the people who came and went. In that way he gleaned from Mr. Taggett the opportune suggestion concerning the lost son of Mr. Veevers, embraced it eagerly, and got into the house. Once there, he set to work to find out what he could without exciting suspicion.

It must be confessed at once that his first experience was sufficiently alarming. Cornelius Veevers had shown no particular affection for or interest in him; Jemima Veevers had accepted his coming as one of those disasters for which the best of us must be prepared in a stormy world. From his own point of view this was all that Mr. Hubbard could have desired; it was not his wish that questions should be asked; he was glad enough to be accepted—for the time, at least—for what he pretended to be. He wandered about the house—coming against the various people who inhabited it at odd corners, but receiving no attention from them in any way. In fact, he began at last to think that he was on a wild-goose chase, and that the sooner he left the place and turned his attention to other matters the better it would be.

He was pleased, however, at the thought of how easily he had got into the place, and his vanity was tickled at the remembrance of how completely he had hoodwinked the people in it; he wanted to enjoy that blissful feeling a little longer. So he consented to betake himself to bed, at a late hour, to the room which had been assigned to him; and, weary with excitement, and not a little bored at the reminiscences of old Cornelius concerning days when he had played havoc among the women folk, quickly fell asleep.

He was awakened at some dark hour of the night—or of the early morning—by the pealing of a bell far down in the house below him; he had come out of an uneasy dream, and sat up in bed, hot and trembling and frightened, wondering for a moment where he was or what was happening. Then he heard the bell again, and, a little later, the sharp voice of Nugent Leathwood, calling querulously to Cornelius, and the grumbling voice of Cornelius in reply. Then shuffling feet went down the stairs, and he heard a side door unbolted.

By that time Mr. Enoch Hubbard was fully awake and was out of bed. Creeping to the window and pulling aside the blind, he looked down into the garden below, and saw the bobbing light of the lantern as Cornelius carried it toward the gate. He could not, of course, hear the conversation that took place there between the anxious Mrs. Reeks and the shivering Cornelius, but he saw the gate shut and the lantern carried back to the house.

Glancing at his silver watch, Mr. Hubbard saw that it was close on 4 o'clock in the morning. He was in no mood to go back to bed; the ringing of the bell and the movement in the house had disturbed him, and he was most painfully wide awake. As he sat on the edge of the bed he heard a window thrown up, and the voice of Leathwood demanding to know what had happened; then the surly tone of Cornelius in reply. He could not catch what was said, but his curiosity was thoroughly aroused.

"There's something goin' on as I don't know nothin' about," he muttered. "Tain't likely they'll show their 'ands by daylight; if there's any fool business goin' on, the night is the time for it. I must look into this at once."

Without further delay, Mr. Hubbard slipped on his outer garments and prepared to investigate the matter. Creeping down stairs, he found in the hall that long Newmarket coat which distinguished him, and put it on, for the night was cold. Coming to the big hall door, he found, to his surprise, that it was unbolted, for Cornelius had used the smaller side door in going and coming. Opening it softly, Mr. Hubbard slipped out into the garden and stood under the night sky.

The moment he got there he began to wonder why he had ventured out; why, in fact, he had left his warm bed. For the detective instinct must be very keen, and very strong, to be alive fully at 4 o'clock on the morning of a chilly spring day; when there is a damp mist rising to hide the poor apology for a sun which is to come later. With his ardor very considerably cooled, Mr. Hubbard was about to return to bed in disgust when something happened that brought all his faculties into keen working order in a moment.

That something was a light, which danced about along the base of the garden wall, and touched, here and there, the trees and bushes as it passed. It was a very faint light, and one which evidently came from a distance; but it came from a source within the radius of the garden. Mr. Hubbard drew his coat about him and advanced, cautiously out into that desert of weeds and dead leaves, through which he had plowed his way when first he had been brought into the house.

The light came from the right—from the direction of the house that was regarded as haunted. Almost holding his breath, Mr. Hubbard crept out into the garden, and, in the shadow of the trees, made his way towards the spot from which it came. It was evident that he was at last to be rewarded for all his watching and his patience; even while his teeth chattered with cold and with nervousness, he chuckled softly to himself with satisfaction as he glided along in the shadow.

He got to a clump of trees quite near to where a little group of four people stood; down on the ground, in the midst of them, were two lanterns. Bending forward eagerly, Mr. Hubbard saw that one of the group—a tall man—was working away busily in the earth, digging as though his life depended on it. Then, in a moment or two, the digging ceased; and this same man and another lifted something between them and laid it carefully in the earth—something that bore the unmistakable likeness of a body. Mr. Hubbard crept nearer still; saw the tall man stand at the head of the grave he had dug and speak some words softly, while the others stood grouped about him; then saw the earth shoveled in, and beaten down and the awful work hidden, so far as was possible.

He was too much fascinated by what was going on to be aware of the danger he stood in of being discovered; it was only when the lights upon the ground were suddenly extinguished and two of the figures began to move towards him that he realized that he had been seen and that he stood in peril. Then, seeing that one of the men had begun to make a circuit stealthily, as though to cut off any retreat he might have decided on, Mr. Hubbard took to his heels and ran.

It was at this point that he discovered, after running aimlessly for some fifty yards, that the tall man was gaining on him rapidly; he gave a shriek of despair and faced about, not with any special bravery, but rather in desperation.

The tall man closed with him at once, and showed himself, even in that first grip, to be a man of strength and determination. Mr. Hubbard, forced to defend himself, struck out as manfully as he could, and at the same time raised a feeble shout of "Murder!"

The tall man seized him then in good earnest, and got such a grip of his collar as effectually silenced him. Then, while they rocked and swayed about together, a door was pulled open suddenly and a man ran out of the house straight towards them. As he came close to them in the darkness, the tall man flung Mr. Hubbard, with all his strength, against the newcomer, so that he reeled and staggered against him, and then turned himself and ran in the direction from which he had first come.

When Mr. Hubbard recovered he found himself clutching a man wildly in the dark and ejaculating "murder!" at intervals. The man grappled with him, and seemed to be striving to get a hand over his mouth to stop that awful word.

"I saw it—I saw it—I've got you—you can't get away!" gasped Hubbard, faintly. "Oh, good heavens—dead bodies—buried under bushes!—but I've got you! Oh, good heavens!—murder!"

"Hold you tongue, you idiot!" exclaimed the voice of Leathwood. "What the dickens is your game here? Who were you fighting with, and what was that row out here?"

"I tell you I saw it," gasped Hubbard, again, clinging desperately to Leathwood. "I came here to find out about it; and I've found it the first time! Dead bodies—hidden at night—"

Without another word Leathwood caught hold of him savagely and began to drag him towards the house.

"I'll silence you, you madman!" he whispered, hoarsely. "I'll give you talk of dead bodies! Come in here and cease this raving! Come in here, I say!"

The weedy Mr. Hubbard was no match for the stronger, better-trained Leathwood. More than that, he was too much demoralized by actual terror, and by the strange experiences of the night, to know fully what was happening or in what peril he stood. Feebly protesting, he allowed himself to be dragged along towards the house, through the open door and up the stairs. Nor did Nugent Leathwood release his hold until he had him safely in the room wherein James Holden had met his death and he had planted his own back against the door.

"So you'll prate of dead men—will you?" he panted, looking at the abject Mr. Hubbard, and wagging his head at him fiercely. "You'll talk of dead men hidden at night, will you? We'll see—we'll see! Where's that idiot of a father of yours?"

He pulled open the door and thrust out his head, and called, sharply, "Cornelius! Cornelius!"

After a moment or so the noise of someone moving about in another room was heard, and then the shuffling steps of the old man. Directly afterwards Leathwood drew in his head, saying to some one outside: "Here, I want you; there's business for you here."

The old man came in slowly, dressed in a long, faded dressing gown, of no particular color and of no particular cut; in his hand he carried a battered tin candlestick, and he looked all about him with sleepy, resentful eyes.

"Well, what the dickens is it now?" he asked, with a snarl. "First, I'm dragged out of bed in the middle of the night by some wretched woman who's lost 'er 'usband; I'm kept talkin' at the gate in a bitin' wind, tryin' to persuade 'er that we don't keep stray 'usbands 'ere; an' now you start shoutin' all over the 'ouse for me, afore I've got fairly warm in bed again. What is it?"

"Don't talk there; there's been a great deal too much talking already," said Nugent, quietly. "Shut the door." Then, as the old man obeyed, wonderingly, Nugent pointed at the trembling Mr. Hubbard. "Look at this man. I found him in the garden just now, shouting mad things about murder, and bodies hidden at night, and what not. I tell you, Cornelius, we stand in deadly danger. But a few hours ago a man came here, claiming to be Gilbert Rickerby, and knowing, I daresay, a great deal more than he confessed. A little time since his wife put in an appearance demanding to know where he was, and threatening, Heaven knows what, if we couldn't give her the information for which she asked. By Jove, man, don't you see that we shall have the place about our ears before we know where we are? I curse the day I ever knew the name of Gilbert Rickerby; but I'll fight this thing out to the bitter end. I've got a big stake to win or to lose and, if I'm to lose it, I won't lose it lightly!"

"Who'se doin' the talkin' now?" asked Cornelius. "If you've brought me 'ere to prate about what you'll do and what you won't do, you'd best let me go to bed again. As for this fellow, I know nothin' about 'im, 'cept what 'e's said 'imself. Ask Jemima."

Now, Nugent Leathwood was so certain in his own mind that Mr. Hubbard had discovered something concerning the murder that it never entered his thoughts to ask any questions about the matter; of all things, that was the one he was most anxious to avoid. But he had his suspicions, naturally enough, about a man who apparently prowled about at night and talked of dead bodies; he wanted to know who that man was, and why he had come to Rickerby's Folly. After gazing gloomily at the young man for a few moments, he turned suddenly on Cornelius.

"Fetch Jemima," he said. "I'll clear this matter up at once. I'll have no spies lurking about here and prying into things that don't concern them. Fetch Jemima."

Cornelius took up his candlestick and shuffled away to the door. As he opened it he paused and looked back at his master.

"You've put your 'and to a tougher job than ever man mastered yet," he said, solemnly. "On'y mind—there ain't no 'us' about it; you stands alone in this." With that he opened the door and was gone.

In the interval before his return Nugent Leathwood said not a word; he paced about the room, now and then glancing at his prisoner, even stopping once or twice, as though he had made up his mind to say something; then repenting of it and striding on again. When, at last, steps were heard outside he stood still and awaited the coming of Jemima and her husband.

They came in, yet with what a difference between them! Cornelius showed, in every line of his face distrust and resentment, mingled with a little fear of what was going to happen; the old woman was as calm and unconcerned as ever, and turned her lack-luster eyes upon Nugent and the other man with a faint air of surprise. Cornelius shut the door, and, as a precautionary measure, put his back against it.

"Now, Jemima," began Leathwood, "let us have the whole truth. I'm loth to think you've been playing me false about this matter; I want to know exactly how we stand. This young man here was brought by you into the house—"

"Not by me, Mr. Leathwood—beggin' your pardon," broke in Jemima, wagging her old head, so that the gray hair fell about her expressionless face; "not by me. Cornelius interduced the young gent to me, an' said as 'ow it was my son. An' I've seen too much of Cornelius not to know it ain't well to conterdict 'im."

"But, good heavens, you surely know your own son?" cried Nugent. "This man is brought here, claiming to be your son, you accept him as such—"

"On'y under orders, Mr. Leathwood," said the old woman, submissively. "The only child I ever 'ad died of croup at the age of eighteen months, just three months after Cornelius left me. W'en this gent"—she indicated Mr. Hubbard with one hand, but did not look at him—"came along and said as 'ow 'e was my son, I didn't think it was worth w'ile conterdictin' 'im. In fact, it wasn't worth mentionin'. I thought if Cornelius 'ad took it into 'is 'ead to adopt a growin' boy, it wasn't fer me to raise no objection." She smiled benignly upon the discomfited Cornelius, and adjusted her wrapper more comfortably about her.

Nugent Leathwood turned to Mr. Hubbard. There was a deadly cold politeness about his tone when he spoke that boded no good to that unfortunate amateur detective.

"Now, sir," he said, "I should like to know who you really are, and with what purpose you got into this house. I might as well tell you that it will be well for you to speak the truth; you have played this game for a reason of your own, and I want to know what that reason is. Now then"—he advanced upon the man with a sudden fierce hurry about him—"let's know who you are and what you want. This is not a house where men can come and play the spy without taking the consequences."

"I—I tell you that I saw in the garden to-night a dead man."

"Stop it! I warn you to say no more!" cried Nugent, raising his arm, fiercely, as though to strike him. "We'll have no talk of dead men here. Now, then, out with it. Who are you and what do you know?"

"My—my name is 'Ubbard,'" replied the trembling youth. "I 'eard a good deal about this place; I 'ad seen the reward offered for a man named Rickerby; I was a sort of private detective on my own account. Don't be 'ard on me, gents. I don't know nothin' that's worth talkin' about."

The wretched man had fallen upon his knees and had raised his hands in supplication. Nugent Leathwood went across to him, and stood calmly in front of him with his hands clasped behind him.

"You know a great deal too much, my friend," he said, in his soft, low voice. "The next time you try detective work—that is, if you ever do try it again—don't go about it so clumsily. Get up!"

The wretched man rose slowly from his knees and looked around appealingly at the three faces. But the old woman looked as impassive as ever; Cornelius wore upon his face the most awful grin it is possible to imagine; and Nugent Leathwood was smiling quietly. Then in a moment, at a sign from the latter, Cornelius moved briskly across the room and caught one arm of Mr. Hubbard; Leathwood laid his grip upon the other.

"Open the door, Jemima," said Leathwood. "For to-night we'll take you to your room; cry out, or try to break away, and I'll strangle the life out of your ugly body before you've had time to shout twice. You'll play the detective with me, will you? Now then, march!"

In that order they went out of the room and up the stairs, came to the landing out of which opened the room from whence he had come that night, and took him into it. It was a room at the very top of the house, with a narrow window, which had, for some reason or other, had bars placed outside it. Then, taking away the light, they left him; he heard the key turned on the outside.

All his dreams for fame and glory in the profession he had mapped out for himself were gone; he dared not sleep; he did not know what might happen to him at any hour in that dreadful house. He sat on the side of the bed, quaking with terror, and striving hard to bring his mind to the accomplishment of some daring deed which should set him free and overwhelm his enemies.

He tried the window, but even his slimness could not get over the difficulty of the bars outside. He tried the door, but it was locked securely; moreover, he had no desire to risk a meeting on the stairs with Cornelius or Leathwood, even if it had been possible to get out by that way. Finally, he sat down on the bed again and tried to comfort himself with thoughts of all the heroes of whom he had read who had got out of remarkably tight places with the aid of a jack-knife and Providence. In the midst of these reflections—which did not, after all, bring him very much comfort—he fancied he heard a curious, rustling noise at the door of the room. A dreadful feeling came over him that the two men had come back for the express purpose of putting an end to him—perhaps of burying him in the same place as that occupied by the other man; he started up; fear gave him a courage nothing else could have done.

The rustling continued; then came the grating of a key in the lock. Mr. Hubbard put himself into an attitude suggestive of defense, and made up his mind to sell his life dearly.

The door opened slowly, and then the impassive face of old Jemima peered round it; after a moment she came, stealthily, into the room, carrying a candle. She set the candle down upon a chair, snuffed it with her fingers, and addressed the prisoner, without looking at him, and speaking in the most casual fashion:

"I managed to git the key; Cornelius laid it down and fell asleep. 'E won't never suspect me." She straightened her back and looked at the man who stood, expectantly, watching her. "I suppose you don't know why I do this—eh?"

"It is very kind of you," said Mr. Hubbard, lamely.

She shook her head.

"It wasn't fer you," she said; "but the thought came into my old 'ead just now, while I lay in the dark, that the child I lost might—if 'e'd 'ad any luck—'ave grown up something like you. Lord—'e'd 'ave been a bonny lad if 'e'd lived. And p'r'aps 'e might 'ave got into some scrape or trouble, an' might 'ave been glad for someone—not 'is mother—to give 'im a chance to get out of it. Don't laugh at me. I've lived in this place nearly all my life; I've seen a woman wear 'er 'eart out 'ere; I've seen murder—and goodness knows what else besides. But to-night it's all gone from me; I've got back some'ow to the years w'en my child was in my arms, an' I thought— There—never mind what I thought; on'y I'm glad, some'ow, you took it into your 'ead to come an say you was my son. You ain't; but you've brought me back the thoughts of what might 'ave been, an' fer that I'd risk somethin', I tell you. There's the door; I'll light you down, an' you can go free!"

He went free; but it is to be regretted that he understood so little the motive which had given him his release that he stopped outside the wall which surrounded the garden and shook his fist at the black house.

"Murder—is it; and burying—eh! We'll see! I'll be even with you yet, or my name ain't 'Ubbard!"

With that, he shook his fist again and ran off in the chill, breaking day towards the busier streets.

Sixteenth Century Music.

As we go back to study the state of music in Shakespeare's time, we find that the English people in the sixteenth century were enthusiastic lovers of the art. There were professorships of music in the universities, and multitudes of teachers of it among the people. The monarch, the artisan, the rustic clown, the blind beggar—all ranks and conditions of society, from highest to lowest, cultivated the practice of singing, or of playing upon some of the numerous instruments of the time.—Sidney Lanier, in Lippincott's Magazine.

RODE A WILD STEER.

BRAVE ACT OF A VENTURESOME COWBOY IN ARIZONA.

James Evans Saved His Life and That of His Comrade by an Unparalleled Deed of Daring—His Steed a Pet.

For nearly an hour James Evans, a cowboy, with the X-Bar-L outfit, in the Four Peaks country, went through an experience which has come to few men. He was in charge a few days ago of a round-up, and with five other cowhands were putting 1,500 cattle into Sunflower valley.

While encamped for the night on a high mesa, ending abruptly with a drop of 200 feet, less than eleven miles to the south, a storm swept through the mountains. The herd became nervous at the display of lightning, and started in a stampede, heading for the south.

Evans and his men mounted hurriedly, and circling to the front of the maddened cattle tried to turn them to the east and swing them back into place. In the dense black of the night Evans' horse lost his footing, and went down in a heap, one front leg in a gopher hole. The horse of "Shorty" Davis, close behind, stumbled over Evans' horse, and Davis came to earth and lay still, unconscious. His horse was up and off in a moment, and Evans' mount was useless with a broken leg.

Fifty yards away came the herd, and a short flash of lightning showed Evans the futility of attempted escape by either side. The swiftly moving mass of steer-flesh reached 100 yards each way. Unable to arouse Davis, and never thinking of leaving his disabled comrade, Evans took the only chance of saving them both. His revolver and that of Davis he emptied into the center of the herd, cutting a breach in the front of the mass. Then throwing the inanimate form of Davis over his shoulder he awaited his opportunity.

As one of the steers brushed by Evans leaped alongside. With one movement he put the body of Davis across the broad shoulders of the steer and mounted also. Vainly the frantic animal leaped, bucked and side-jumped. With his legs wrapped tightly around the body of his bolting mount, Evans drove his spurs deep in, and held himself and Davis in place. With his double load the steer, wild with rage, agony and fright, rapidly left the herd in the rear, and, veering slowly to the right in a furious gallop, carried his riders out of the path of the herd.

Out of danger, Evans, totally exhausted, rolled off the back of his strange rescuer, and a half hour later, when his cowboys turned the herd at the canyon's rim and rode back to look for the foreman and Davis, they found the two, both unconscious. The weary steer, with his sides covered with blood, lay exhausted a short distance away.

The X-Bar-L outfit has ordered a medal for Evans, and there is one steer on that ranch pensioned for life, or the best alfalfa in the valley.

When Sermons Fail.

Both clergymen and mothers frequently wear out the point of a good sermon by rubbing it in to a degree of dullness when the weary auditor yawns and forgets what it was all about anyway.

"Mamma," said candid Young America, "do you know you would have a great deal more effect on me if you only knew when to stop? Sometimes you say things that I really feel are true, and if you would only stop then and there I would probably realize it, but you always go on and on, preaching and preaching, and generally say something about me that I think is unjust, and then what you said first is all discounted."

"Mother's way of sermonizing is just like Bridget cleaning the brass andirons," said another irreverent young critic. "She first spreads over the whole surface—not a point or depression escapes her—then she begins to scrub—and, my! how she does rub it in!"

Ways of Pleasing Constituents.

Senators and congressmen find that there are many ways of pleasing constituents besides getting office for them. On the opening day of congress admission to the galleries is by ticket. The galleries are filled early and the late comers cannot get in. The secretaries of senators and congressmen stand in the committee rooms or corridors for hours at a time and issue passes to the reserved galleries by the score or hundreds long after the galleries are filled and the doors locked. Of course it is not the fault of the senator or the "member" that his constituent has no chance of getting in, and the latter goes home proud of the distinguished consideration with which he was treated.—Washington Letter New York Evening Sun.

Russian's Significant Revenge.

What is perhaps the neatest instance of revenge by chisel has stood for eighty-nine years in the market place at Coblentz. In 1812 the French occupied the town on their triumphal march to Moscow. They erected a splendid fountain, on which they cut an inscription saying various unpleasant things about "barbarous Russia." A few months later the tattered remnants of the splendid army came flying back, hard pursued by Russian cavalry. The latter occupied the town, and their commander, St. Priest, inspected the French memorial. But he did not pull it down. He merely wrote underneath: "Seen and approved by me, the Russian commandant of the town of Coblentz."

LOADED DOWN WITH BOOKS.

Valuable Information That Was Given About the President of the United States.

A certain literary man is engaged in writing an article on President Roosevelt. A few days ago he happened to mention this circumstance to a New York publisher, and the latter remarked that it might be interesting to state that the president invariably carried a copy of Plutarch in his pocket. The suggestion was accepted and the note incorporated in the article.

Two days later the writer met another publisher, and informed him also, of the article that was being prepared. The publisher said:

"Well, now, I'll tell you something that ought to be of use to you. I'm told by one of his most intimate friends that Mr. Roosevelt always has a volume of Thucydides with him."

The same evening the literary man was dining at a hotel up-town, and, while smoking a post-prandial cigar, was accosted by an employe of one of the federal departments at Washington. The latter had heard that his friend was endeavoring to obtain copy about the president, and proceeded to furnish him with some. In the course of his remarks he said:

"And just stick in that he never goes out without a little pocket volume of Herodotus."—New York Times.

WHAT SETTLERS IN SASKATCHEWAN VALLEY HAVE TO SAY.

Formerly from the United States,
Rosthern, July 8th, 1900.

Frank Pedley, Esq.,
Superintendent of Immigration.

Sir:—We, the undersigned settlers in Saskatchewan, Township 42, Range 6, beg to submit the following letter. We came from Springfield, Bonhomme County, S. Dakota, in the spring of 1899, and settled where we now reside. We had considerable crop last year we put in on new breaking, and it was very good, and this year, 1900, our crop is excellent. Our wheat will yield about twenty bushels to the acre, the oats and barley are also very good, and our potatoes and root crop all that could be desired. We consider this a fine country and are glad we came, as our prospects could not be better. A poor man will get a start in this country much quicker than in Dakota.

We are, yours respectfully, John H. Schultz, H. A. Goshen, S. Gors, B. H. Dirks, C. D. Unry, P. Unry, and A. Ratzlief. All from South Dakota, U. S. A.

New Machine Gun for England.

Considerable interest is being caused in military circles on account of the invention of a new form of machine gun, which is said to be capable of firing bullets at the same rate as a Maxim, but with a range of 6,000 yards. Such a weapon, if its performances are really equal to what is claimed for it, would revolutionize the whole science of artillery, and, in fact, render the ordinary field guns nearly useless. The bullet is said to be 5-inch caliber and the cartridge is a very lengthy one.—London Mail.

A Swedish Marriage Custom.

The Scandinavian bridegroom gives his betrothed a prayer book, and many other gifts, which usually include a goose. She, in turn, gives him, especially in Sweden, a shirt, and this he invariably wears on his wedding day. Afterward he lays it away, and under no circumstances of state or poverty will he wear it again while alive. But he wears it in his grave, and there are Sweds who earnestly believe not only in the resurrection of the body, but in the veritable resurrection of the of the betrothal shirts of such husbands who have never broken their marriage vows. The Swedish widower must destroy, on the eve of his second marriage, the wedding shirt his first wife gave him.—Woman's Home Companion.

Marshfield, Mo., Jan. 20th.—Mr. J. F. King of this place makes the following statement:

"I have suffered untold agony for twenty years with Lame Back and Acute Kidney Disease, and in that time have never been two days together clear of misery, and for some of the time I could not walk a step or even sit up.

"Last spring, after trying many doctors, and every remedy that could be thought of, I began a treatment of Dodd's Kidney Pills. The good results were almost immediate, and for the last seven months I have seen more comfort and pleasure than I have for twenty years before.

"Any one with Kidney Disease or Lame Back, that will not try Dodd's Kidney Pills deserves to suffer."

Willing Enough.

White Deer Scarce.

Specimens Now Rarely Seen in the Adirondacks

An albino deer is so rare a sight in the Adirondacks that when one does appear it is regarded with superstitious feelings by some of the natives. Many of the so-called natives of the Adirondacks are French-Canadians. A white deer is never killed by the French-Canadian and he does not molest it, although he believes there is an evil influence about him while the albino deer remains in his neighborhood.

Some white deer have been killed in the Adirondacks in the last few years. In 1898 a white deer frequently visited homes of natives in the Keene valley. It appeared in the fall and became remarkably tame. It was a beautiful creature, having a neck and tail of pure white, while the upper parts of the body and the back were nearly white. The eyes of this deer were white, although usually the eyes of an albino are pink.

By common consent the albino of the Keene valley, a doe, was left unmolested, and it was decided to await a heavy snow, when it could be run down and captured alive. But the dogs got after it and chased it until it passed in an exhausted condition near a traveler, who caught it and cut its throat. The traveler was not aware of the agreement among the hunters to preserve the doe as long as possible, and deeply regretted his act when he was informed of their plans.

The guides of the Adirondacks say that within their memory not more than a dozen white deer have been reported, and the appearance of one is sufficient to excite them greatly. Men of the steadiest nerves under most hunting experiences are sometimes upset at the sight of a white deer or an albino bird.

Many visitors to the north woods scout the idea that there is such a thing as a white deer. At the same time, the superstitious prefer not to see one, as they believe it indicates danger. So deep-seated was this superstition among the natives at Wild Cat pond, in the Cranberry lake region of St. Lawrence county, that they left an albino deer alone when it appeared there three years ago. It was frequently observed, accompanied by a fawn of the usual color. What became of it has never been known, but the native there tells the inquirer that he did not shoot it, nor did any of his relatives. They all admired it too much to think of killing it, and, while they don't admit that they were superstitious about shooting it, they will say they preferred to take no chances so far as that white deer is concerned.

Followers of Jainism

Description of Ideal Religion Which Comes from the Mystical East.

San Francisco, having already become familiar with Theosophy, the mystic religions of Brahma and Buddha, and with the lofty philosophy of the Vedantan Swamis, it only remained to learn of Jainism, perhaps the sanest and most of all the ideal West Indian religions, says the San Francisco Chronicle. Yesterday, before a large audience in the rooms of the Laurel Hall Club, Jainism made its first bow to the people of California, the lecturer being Prof. Emlyn Lewys, until recently a resident of London. Prof. Lewys is a scholar of striking personality and the only English-speaking authority on this most ancient of religions.

Jainism, as explained by the speaker, is the Protestantism of India, as opposed to the Vedas, Brahmanism and the soul-paralyzing caste system. It aims at the perfection of character, not through faith, but through correct conduct and systematic intellectual activity or concentration, as opposed to the Yogi system of intellectual vacuity. The speaker said:

"If a religion may be known by its fruits what shall we say of this one, which though now numbering 2,000,000 votaries and dating its origin long prior to the entrance of the Aryans into India, in prehistoric times, has never yet produced a murderer? Though regarding kingship as the greatest injustice still the Jains do two-thirds of all the financial business of India. They never eat meat, and the monks often carry brooms and sweep the paths to avoid crushing the insects. They believe in the advancement of women, in reincarnation and the eternal persistency and progressive evolution of each ego and hold that the atrocities of the soul and intellect, such as sense knowledge, clairvoyance, telepathy, the emotions, the physical constitution and the power to achieve are all under the obscuration of Karma, which to the Jain is a substance. The object of their study and effort is to shake this Karmic clog out and to liberate the soul by vibrating in a certain way. This may be done by concentration on such ideals as benevolence, charity or wisdom, by analyzing the teachings found in their enormous and as yet untranslated libraries, and then by synthetizing and immediately acting on these truths. Janiism then is the religion of intelligence, utility and action. The Jains marry at the age of 9 or 10 and live ideal married lives, all unions being regulated through astrological affinity."

Tattooing as a Social Fad

Japanese Makes Money Adorning New Yorkers.

In the Japanese colony, which is situated in the neighborhood of Sixth avenue and Twenty-eighth street, there is a little bright-eyed, courteous man who describes himself as a "puncture needle artist." He is what might be called a boss tattooer. His business is prosperous and he looks forward to making a fortune from the fashionable people of the metropolis, says the New York Sunday Telegraph.

"Who are my customers?" he said, as he repeated the question of the writer. "The best people of the city. I don't want any others and will not waste my art upon them. It is ridiculous to expect a professional like myself, who has decorated the bodies of the most distinguished people in Tokio, to descend to the level of a common sailor or a vulgar bartender. Tattooing varies in popularity from year to year, but is always more or less in vogue. It applied to all, from babies up to middle aged people. Four times I have tattooed twins. This was to prevent their getting mixed. At the present time there is quite a fad for a Japanese fashion which is very beautiful and consists in emblazoning a butterfly, a rose, a forget-me-not, or some other delicate design upon the arm, shoulder or chest.

"I have more women applicants than men. The latter seem to consider it as effeminate. I do not mind telling you a secret. Many society belles who have tattooed decorations upon their frames employ the latter to conceal some blemish. One beauty of the tattoo is that it can be applied to scars, birthmarks, moles, moth patches and strawberry marks. In many cases a slight blemish is of great advantage in this respect, because it gives a handsome background."

A Filipino Graveyard.

"I saw a great many peculiar things in my travels to the Orient last summer," observed Mr. Kahn of California to a Washington Post reporter, as he paused a moment in the House corridor, "but the most gruesome of all was the Paco cemetery near Manila. Do you know that they follow the custom of many Spanish communities there in the interment of their dead?" asked the ex-actor. "The poor people, of course, fare worst. Those with wealth can buy a niche in the cemetery for $128 Mexican, which is approximately $65 in our money. There they may bury their dead permanently. But those who are unable to purchase a niche secure a place temporarily for something like $39 in Mex, the short word for that kind of silver in the chat. At the expiration of five years the skeletons of those poor people are taken out of their resting places and dumped into a black hole, a veritable boneyard. I don't know when I have seen anything that so impressed me with its horrifying phases as this dumping ground for all that remained of the poor Filipinos. I visited the Ponca cemetery on a rainy day, and the ghastly heap in this depression of the earth rises before me in my dreams and haunts me."

Christening a Baby Zebra.

Little Elizabeth Erl, of 1705 North Thirteenth street, is the proudest girl in the city and the reason for this is that she won the privilege of naming the baby zebra, which is the latest arrival at the zoo, says the Philadelphia Record. The baby was born a day or two ago, and Keeper Jager announced that the first girl under 12 years of age entering the antelope house on Saturday should have the honor of christening the infant. Little Miss Erl took no chances, and she was on hand with her mother before the garden opened at 9 o'clock. Ten minutes after the gates had been opened the baby zebra possessed a name. Mrs. Erl, Keeper Jager and Little Elizabeth constituted the christening party, and the ceremony was brief, but interesting. Elizabeth was hoisted to within reaching distance of the bars by the good-natured keeper and the baby was coaxed to the front. The little girl patted the zebra on the nose and with much dignity said: "I christen thee, Bessie." Bessie switched her little tail and seemed highly pleased. Inside of half an hour there were a dozen excited little maids in the antelope house, and some were led away tearful because they had missed the coveted honor.

Russell Sage's "Warm Side."

A group of men, eminent in the financial world, were talking in the Lawyers' club, last week, about getting on the "warm side" of Russell Sage, when a prominent operator said:

"Well, it's my opinion that the man who gets on the "warm side" of Uncle Russell will want a fur-lined overcoat and ear-laps, and then he'll be likely to be frost-bitten."—New York Times.

His Unrelenting Mood.

"And now that you are through college, what are you going to do?" asked a friend of the youthful candidate.

"I shall study medicine," was the grave reply of the young man.

"But isn't that profession already overcrowded?" asked the friend.

"Possibly it is," answered the knowing youth, "but I propose to study medicine, just the same, and those who are already in the profession will have to take their chances."—Tit-Bits.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured
by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucus lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucus surfaces.

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—Your Vegetable Compound cured me of womb trouble from which I had been a great sufferer for nearly three years. During that time I was very irregular and would often have intense pain in the small of my back, and blinding headaches and severe cramps. For three months I used Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and aches and pains are as a past memory, while health and happiness is my daily experience now. You certainly have one grateful friend in Emporia, and I have praised your Vegetable Compound to a large number of my friends. You have my permission to publish my testimonial in connection with my picture. Yours sincerely, MISS MARION CUNNINGHAM, Emporia, Kans."

THE CHILDREN ENJOY

Life out of doors and out of the games which they play and the enjoyment which they receive and the efforts which they make, comes the greater part of that healthful development which is so essential to their happiness when grown. When a laxative is needed the remedy which is given to them to cleanse and sweeten and strengthen the internal organs on which it acts, should be such as physicians would sanction, because its component parts are known to be wholesome and the remedy itself free from every objectionable quality. The one remedy which physicians and parents, well-informed, approve and recommend and which the little ones enjoy, because of its pleasant flavor, its gentle action and its beneficial effects, is—Syrup of Figs—and for the same reason it is the only laxative which should be used by fathers and mothers.

Syrup of Figs is the only remedy which acts gently, pleasantly and naturally without griping, irritating, or nauseating and which cleanses the system effectually, without producing that constipated habit which results from the use of the old-time cathartics and modern imitations, and against which the children should be so carefully guarded. If you would have them grow to manhood and womanhood, strong, healthy and happy, do not give them medicines, when medicines are not needed, and when nature needs assistance in the way of a laxative, give them only the simple, pleasant and gentle—Syrup of Figs.

Its quality is due not only to the excellence of the combination of the laxative principles of plants with pleasant aromatic syrups and juices, but also to our original method of manufacture and as you value the health of the little ones, do not accept any of the substitutes which unscrupulous dealers sometimes offer to increase their profits. The genuine article may be bought anywhere of all reliable druggists at fifty cents per bottle. Please to remember, the full name of the Company—CALIFORNIA FIG SYRUP CO.—is printed on the front of every package. In order to get its beneficial effects it is always necessary to buy the genuine only.

THE NEWS,
By John W. Eastman.
PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY.

The Board of Trade of Red Lake Falls is composed of some very ignorant men on the subject of water power. When the resolutions were passed saying that the proposed lock and dam would damage if not entirely ruin the Red Lake river, it came about as near telling the truth as it did when it made the statement that Red Lake Falls water power is the second largest in the state, being exceeded only by that at Minneapolis. As a matter of fact there are hundreds larger than at Red Lake Falls.

If a single township in Indiana can afford to put in thirty-six miles of macadam at a cost of nearly $3,000 per mile, surely the county around Thief River Falls can stand the cost of making their highways passable. It was a case of life or death with the Indiana town for the mud is immeasurably deep there in winter, but we have muddy roads too in the spring and if nature favors us for three-fourths of the year there is all the less excuse for refusing to aid her—and ourselves during the other fourth.

Mr. Bostrom's family will remain here for the present, and as he is interested in Thief River Falls property to a large extent he will undoubtedly continue to call this his home.

Mayor Kratka yesterday received a telegram from Congressman Morris stating that it would not be necessary to send a delegation to Washington to urge the prompt opening of the reservation. He says that Eddy is doing everything possible. A mass meeting was held in the city hall last evening to consider the matter of sending a delegation to Washington.

The News is in receipt of a letter from N. K. Nelson, the well known resident of Liner, asking whether or not the building of a lock and dam at the outlet of the Red lake would result in overflowing the west banks of the lake greatly to the detriment of the settlers living northeast of here. If the lock and dam is built, a levy will also be constructed along the west bank of the lake, thus insuring that no damage will occurr to the county northeast of here.

VOL. XIX. THIEF RIVER FALLS, MINN., THURSDAY, JANUARY 30, 1902. NUMBER 4

NEW RATES.

Great Northern Makes Big Freight Reductions.

New freight rates went into effect on the Great Northern last Saturday, which will mean an annual saving of many thousand dollars to the residents of this section. The new rates are of especial benefit to the residents of the Red River Valley, and there is but one city that is making any complaint—Crookston. Under the old tariff, Crookston had the advantage of terminal fright rates, which allowed wholesale houses there a reduction in car load lots. While the rates of Crookston are considerable lower than they were it is now placed on an equal footing with the rest of the valley towns—just as it should be. Wholesalers at Minneapolis, St. Paul and Duluth can now ship directly to Thief River Falls at a much less rate than the Crookston wholesale houses.

The new rates for Thief River Falls are as follows:

	1st.	2d.	3d.	4th.
Old....	86c	73c	58c	46c.
New....	69c	59c	46c	35c.

Open It Up.

The mayor of the enterprising town of Thief River Falls, backed by the people of that part of the state, is making a strong push for the opening of the portion of the Red Lake Indian reservation lying in Red Lake county. There is a body of more than a quarter of a million acres, most of it fine farming land, which is now monopolized and held in idleness by a small body of aborigins, numbering not more than 18 adult men. It is estimated that this land would support 1,600 whites, whose industry would add much to the state's wealth. It would therefore be manifestly to the public interest for the federal government to buy out the Indians' rights and open the lands to settlements. Minneapolis Tribune.

Teachers' Examinations.

Notice is hereby given that the semi-annual teachers' examination for Red Lake county will be held in the high school building at Red Lake Falls and Thief River Falls, on Thursday, Friday and Saturday, February 6, 7 and 8, 1902. A BIG FIGHT Settlers Up at Rollis Want Clark Removed.

There is a great deal of bad feeling existing up in the Rollis country as to whether or not Allen W. Clark shall retain his appointment as United States commissioner. The charge against Clark is that he has made himself very obnoxious in starting contests against numerous settlers up there, and particular mention is made of case in which Clark's aged mother contested another settler. A petition signed by a large number of residents up there was sent to Judge Lochran at St. Paul, asking that Clark be removed, and the judge has sent work to Clark to show cause why he should not be removed. Clark has accordingly circulated a petition in his own behalf.

Further reports say that a petition signed by 150 men has been sent to Washington saying that if Clark is not removed by the authorities he will be removed by a dose of cold lead.

A NEW LOVE.

Wm. Seiler Deserts His Wife Last Week.

Wm. Seiler left this city last Friday for parts unknown. He took with him an inmate of one of the sporting houses out near the depot and $1,500 in cash, which belongs to his wife. Seiler came here with his wife last fall and has lived in the First ward. The money which he took was the property of his wife which was the proceeds of a farm belonging to her. She foolishly allowed her husband to deposit it in the banks here and it was placed to his credit by him and drawn out last Friday.

BIG DEAL.

Nels Peterson Sells 26,000 Acres of Land.

Last week Nels Peterson, of this city, made one of the largest real estate deals that has been made in the Red River Valley for some time. He sold to syndicate of Sleepey Eye, Minn., speculators, 26,000 acres of land in Marshall, Roseau and Kittson counties. The land was owned by Ellsworth & Jones, and was purchased for them last September by Mr. Peterson, who has made a bright penny by the transaction.

GERMANTOWN.

Miss Louisa Swenson, who has been visiting relatives in St. Hilaire returned Thursday. She was accompanied by her sister, Miss Laura, who will make an extended visit with her parents.

P. Brockman and Robert Swenson, of Esplee, have been visiting friends in St. Hilaire.

The members of the Lutheran church held their yearly meeting on Wednesday. The ladies Society presented the church with new pews.

Tom Lewis left Monday for Gilby, N. D. On his return he will be accompanied by his family Mrs. Lewis has just completed his buildings on his claim.

L. Lovestone has taken the contract for carrying the mail between Thief River Falls and Germantown. He made his first trip on Monday which was a good cold day for a starter.

Many of the farmers are drilling wells but none have succeeded in striking water.

If you have a farm for sale call on the Northern Real Estate & Mortgage Co. Office next First State Bank.

HAS HOPES

That the Reservation Will Be Opened.

In a letter to C. L. Dobner, Senator Nelson states that everything possible is being done by congressman Eddy and the rest of the Minnesota delegation to secure the opening of the Red Lake reservation and that there is good prospects of accomplishing something at this session. Senator Nelson is well acquainted with the land on this end of the reservation and thinks it should be the first land to be opened up in the state.

NEW FIRM.

Jackson & Co. Succeeds Jackson & Bailey.

The firm of Jackson & Bailey was dissolved the first of the week, and the firm of Jackson & Co. will succeed to the business. Mr. Bailey, the retiring member of the firm, will continue to make his residence in Thief River Falls, and will probably engage in business here. Robert McGinn is the new member of the firm although he will not be actively engaged in the management of the concern.

M'KINLEY DAY.

Will Be Observed In the Public Schools.

Tomorrow is McKinley day and at the request of Gov. Van Sant and State Superintendent Olson, the day will be observed in the public schools of Thief River Falls. The object is to teach patriotism and civic righteousness, and to also give the pupils an opportunity to contribute towards the fund of the McKinley monument. Exercises in all schools from 3 to 4 o'clock.

OUR MAYOR.

Frank H. Kratka Now In Washington.

Mayor Kratka left this city last Friday afternoon for Washington for the purpose of securing favorable legislation for the opening of this end of the Red Lake resrvation. If anything is done at this session it must be accomplished before the middle of February, as after that time congress will be busy with more important matters.

Celebrated Case.

Next month the celebrated case for the possession of the Moose Dung section will be tried at Red Lake Falls and a large number of people of this city will go down as witnesses, as well as most every Indian on this end of the reservation. The Meehans, Eshelby and others have engaged the well known St. Paul attorneys, Kellog & Severns, while the Indians will be represented by Halvor Steenerson and Miller & Foote. It well undoubtedly be carried up to the United States supreme court before a final decision is reached.

Notice.

By mutual consent the firm of Jackson & Bailey has been dissolved. All accounts due the firm can be paid to either O. C. Jackson or S. V. Bailey.

TO GUARD HENRY

ELABORATE PLANS FOR THE PROTECTION OF THE NATION'S GUEST.

AUTHORITIES ARE ANXIOUS

WOULD BE MOST UNFORTUNATE IF ANY HARM SHOULD COME TO HIM.

ALL LEFT TO CORBIN AND WILKIE

PRINCE WILL BE CLOSELY GUARDED EVERY MOMENT OF HIS STAY.

Washington, Jan. 24.—Chief Wilkie of the United States secret service, in conjunction with the committee which has in charge the arrangements for the reception of Prince Henry of Prussia, has about completed elaborate plans for the protection of the distinguished guest of the government.

Detectives will guard the prince every moment he is in this country. Mr. Wilkie is concerned about the safety of the prince in the West. He has received information from Chicago and St. Louis which has been extremely disquieting regarding the unrest among the anarchists. Mr. Wilkie says that it would be the most unfortunate thing that could happen if harm should come to the prince while a guest of the nation. Keeping this in mind, Mr. Wilkie and Gen. Corbin, to whom Assistant Secretary of State Hill and Admiral Evans have left the plans for the Protection of the Prince,

have worked out a plan whereby it is believed it will be impossible for any one, with wicked intent, to approach the prince. While it is intended that the residents of the various cities which he will visit will be permitted to see him, it has been decided that he will not follow the American custom of shaking hands. This will avoid the necessity of strangers coming up close to the prince.

The entire trip through the country will be made by special train. In every car of the train there will be two secret service detectives. At each city through which the prince passes there will be detectives stationed, who will scan closely the members of the crowds gathered in the railway stations to see the special train and its occupant. During the time the prince is receiving the representatives of cities the officers will form a complete circle about him and his suite, and no one will be allowed to approach him who is not known.

ALLEGE CONSPIRACY.

Knights of Labor Have Members of Opposition Lodge Placed Under Arrest.

Washington, Jan. 26.—John Hamerstrum, president of the Central Labor union, and Eugene Van Ness, a well known member of that organization, were arrested last night for alleged conspiracy, on warrants sworn out by William Nally and L. A. Swank, tailors, members of the local organization of the Knights of Labor. The arrests are the result of a feud which has existed between the two bodies since the organization of the former. Nally and Swank recently were discharged by the firm employing them and claim in was due to spitework on the part of the Central union.

NO PEACE PROPOSALS.

Arthur Balfour Says Boers Have Not Made Advances.

London, Jan. 25. — In the house of commons Mr. Balfour, the government leader, replying to Mr. Labouchere, denied that proposals have been received by the government from any one professing to represent the Boer leaders since the Kitchener-Botha negotiations some months ago.

Alleged Murderer Captured.

Denver, Colo., Jan. 26.—A telephone message from Fort Collins, Colo., announces the capture of a man believed to be the one who on Dec. 31 murdered Harold Fridborn, aged fifteen years, and assaulted his sixteen-year-old sister, while the pair were skating in this city. He was captured in a cave twenty-two miles north of Bellevue, and when surrounded, attempted suicide, but succeeded only in breaking his jaw.

Police Raid the Bowery.

New York, Jan. 26. — A raid of unusual proportions was made by nearly 100 policemen on the Bowery last night. Several notorious resorts were closed and thirty-two prisoners locked up. The raids foreshadow the doom of the Bowery, for they marked the preliminary step in the wholesale cleaning of that somewhat famous thoroughfare. In nearly every raid the proprietor of the resort was arrested.

Robbed in Broad Daylight.

Wichita, Kan., Jan. 26.—Mrs. Angelina Anderson was bound and gagged here in broad daylight in her room and robbed of $1,100 worth of diamonds and $1,500 in money. She came here a few months ago and married an eighteen-year-old livery stable boy, who was taking care of her horse, and is now sending him to a local college. The woman is said to be from Racine, Wis.

Killed by Burlington Train.

Deadwood, S. D., Jan. 26. — William C. Coffman was run over by a Burlington train at Englewood, receiving injuries from which he died in a few hours after being brought here. He was a section man.

Instantly Killed at Logging Camp.

Duluth, Minn., Jan. 26.—Brune Lavelle, employed at the Nester estate logging camp, eighteen miles above Two Harbors, was struck by a pole while loading logs and instantly killed. He has a brother here.

Injuries Prove Fatal.

Madison, S. D., Jan. 26.—Dan Rounds, an old settler of this county, expired from injuries sustained in a runaway accident in which he was thrown from his wagon and struck on the frozen road on his head.

SENATOR GIBSON OF MONTANA

Thinks the Merger Cannot Be Detrimental to the Interests of Montana.

Great Falls, Mont., Jan. 17.—United States Senator Paris Gibson, in response to a query as to his sentiments on the question of the railroad merger, has made the following reply:

"As I am not a lawyer I will venture no opinion as to the legal rights of the Northern Securities company. What we in Montana wish to know is the effect that this control of stock will have upon our state. It seems to me improbable that under this railway merger the industries of the Northwest will be in any manner crippled. I cannot see where a harmony of railway interests would be detrimental to us. On the contrary, it is my belief that, more than ever before, it would be the desire of the railway companies to build up the farming, mining and manufacturing industries of our state.

Progressive Rate Reductions.

"The railway companies doing business in Montana are taking a more lively interest than ever before in the settlement of the state, and in the subject of national aid to irrigation, which is the real foundation for our future prosperity.

"For many years past the Great Northern Railway company has reduced its Western freight tariffs from time to time, clearly on the theory that such reduction would tend to the upbuilding of the country, and, consequently, to increase its freight tonnage. It is simply absurd to contend that the Great Northern, Northern Pacific and Burlington companies would use great efforts to establish farm colonies and manufacturing interests along their lines and then impose a rate on grain and manufactured products that would destroy or cripple the farms and the mills. We should not forget that it is for the interest of these railways that Montana should have more people, more farms, more productive mines and more cattle and sheep than it has ever had before."

COUNTERFEIT COIN.

San Francisco Man and Wife Under Arrest.

San Francisco, Jan. 24.—Ulysis G. Blair and wife have been arrested for passing counterfeit coin. Blair admits his guilt and says his wife assisted him in passing the coin, getting rid of about $600 a month. The counterfeits are the most perfect that have been seen here. Blair's method was to place the spurious coin in small amounts with the bookmakers at the Oakland race track. Blair posed as a capitalist and has been popular socially.

OLEO GETS A BLOW

BILL PREPARED IS EVEN MORE RESTRICTIVE THAN THE GROUT BILL.

COMMITTEE FINISHES ITS WORK

REPRESENTATIVE HENRY WILL REPORT THE AMENDED MEASURE.

WORD "YELLOW" IS STRICKEN OUT

MAKES RESTRICTIONS APPLY TO WHITE OR ANY OTHER KIND OF BUTTER.

Washington, Jan., 24.—The friends of the measure for rigid restrictions on oleomargarine and kindred products carried their point before the house committee on agriculture yesterday and by a vote of 13 to 5 ordered the report of a bill which is even more restrictive than the original Grout bill, reintroduced by Representative McCleary of Minnesota. The subject has been under consideration for the past ten days, all of the various interests having been granted hearings.

Before the meeting yesterday the friends of rigid restriction held a conference and decided on several amendments. The original bill placed a tax of 10 cents per pound on oleomargarine and butterine colored to imitate yellow butter. The word "yellow" was struck out, thus making the restriction apply to imitations of white or any other kind of butter. Another change makes those who take uncolored butter and color it subject to all the taxes and penalties of manufacturers When the committee met these amendments were agreed to by the foregoing vote. The opposition to the bill proposed numerous amendments, all of which were rejected. One of these permitted the use of pure milk, cream or butter as an ingredient of oleomargarine; another applied the oleomargarine restrictions to "renovated butter." Representative Henry of Connecticut was authorized to report the measure as amended.

TROUBLE ON ISTHMUS NOT ENDED.

Hostilities Between the Government Forces and Liberals May Be Renewed.

Colon, Colom., Jan. 25.—The situation on the isthmus remains unchanged. Although quiet prevails both here and at Panama, these two ports are upon the tiptoe of expectancy and the resumption of hostilities between the government forces and the Colombian Liberals is awaited at any moment. American and British warships are expected to reach Colon shortly.

A slight skirmish occurred on the railroad line between here and Panama yesterday in which there were ten casualties among the Liberals. This skirmish resulted from the vigilance of the government troops who are closely watching all outlets along the railroad line to the interior of the country.

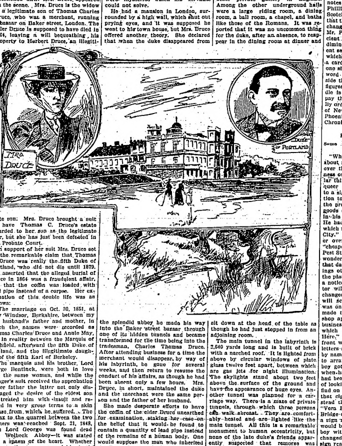
Stranger Than the Tichborne Case

Mrs. Druce's Claims for the Duke of Portland's Title Brings to Light a Remarkable Lot of Facts — Welbeck Abbey's Mystery



If William John Arthur Charles James Cavendish-Bentinck sleeps more soundly than formerly there is good reason. His right to the title and property of the Duke of Portland has been confirmed by a British tribunal. The claim of Mrs. Anna Maria Druce, that her son, Sidney George Druce, a sailor boy in Australia, is the rightful duke, has been repudiated. William John and so forth retains famous Welbeck Abbey and the title of Marquis of Titchfield, Earl of Portland, Viscount Woodstock, Baron Cirencester, Knight of the Garter, etc., etc., not to mention a trifling income of $2,000,000 a year from the dukedom. No wonder he rests easier.

But back of this simple statement is a weird, romantic story. In support of her claim to the dukedom for her son, Mrs. Druce has unfolded a marvelous tale of mystery, love, crime, leprosy, eccentricity, feigned insanity, bogus burial, underground labyrinths and periodical disappearances of an English duke, leading the double life of a haughty nobleman and a despised shopkeeper. The story is amazing even for simple republicans.

The dukedom is one of the proudest in Great Britain, its estate among the richest. The present duke succeeded to the title on the death of the fifth duke in 1879, and his right was not questioned until Mrs. Druce appeared on the scene. Mrs. Druce is the widow of a legitimate son of Thomas Charles Druce, who was a merchant, running a bazaar on Baker street, London. The elder Druce is supposed to have died in 1864, leaving a will bequeathing his property to Herbert Druce, an illegitimate son: Mrs. Druce brought a suit to have Thomas C. Druce's estate awarded to her son as the legitimate heir, but she has just been defeated in the Probate Court.

In support of her suit Mrs. Druce set up the remarkable claim that Thomas C. Druce was really the fifth Duke of Portland, who did not die until 1879. She asserted that the alleged burial of Druce in 1864 was a fraudulent affair, and that the coffin was loaded with lead pipe instead of a corpse. Her explanation of this double life was as follows:

"The marriage on Oct. 30, 1851, at New Windsor, Berkshire, between my late husband's father and mother, in which the names were recorded as Thomas Charles Druce and Annie May, was in reality between the Marquis of Titchfield, afterward the fifth Duke of Portland, and the illegitimate daughter of the fifth Earl of Berkeley.

"The marquis and his brother, Lord George Bentinck, were both in love with the same woman, and while the younger's suit received the approbation of her father the latter not only discouraged the desire of the eldest son but treated him with insult and referred in very gross terms to a skin disease from which he suffered. The climax to the quarrel between the two brothers was reached Sept. 21, 1848, when Lord George was found dead near Welbeck Abbey—it was stated from a spasm of the heart. Whether this was the true cause of his death will never be known, but it is certain that from that time my husband's father suffered the keenest remorse and abject fear. He was nearly always in a state of abject terror.

"He took various courses for his protection, and adopting the name of Thomas Charles Druce, transferred to himself as Druce an immense property from himself as Duke of Portland. You know the manner in which he undermined Welbeck Abbey with subterranean apartments. He did precisely the same thing with the Baker street bazaar, his desire in each case being that he might always have ready a place of refuge.

"Realizing the risk of exposure to which he was subjecting himself by his double existence, he determined to end his life as Druce and caused a coffin to be buried with his supposed remains. Even after this his fears were not quieted. At last he determined to assume madness, that, should he ever be accused of crime, he might have the plea of insanity to fall back upon. Taking the name of Harmer and conducting himself in the most extravagant manner, he caused himself to be placed under the care of Dr. Forbes Winslow, and succeeded entirely in convincing that gentleman of his madness. But after about a year of incarceration he was permitted to leave."

There were many peculiar circumstances to lend plausibility to this remarkable tale. It is well known that the fifth Duke of Portland was an exceedingly eccentric character, and that he did honeycomb the grounds about Welbeck Abbey with great chambers and long passages. The building in London occupied by the bazaar of the elder Druce was also undermined with a labyrinth of tunnels, whose purpose was not apparent on casual observation.

It was alleged the duke was in the habit of disappearing periodically from Welbeck Abbey, making his escape by means of one of the mysterious subterranean passages which he had constructed at great expense. It was supposed there was an outlet known only to himself, so that his going and coming might be kept a profound secret. He led the solitary life of a sad bachelor, and his servants were not taken into his confidence. He disappeared at unexpected moments without warning and reappeared quite as mysteriously. Whither he went and what he did during his absence, why he chose to burrow like a mole and why he wished to cloak his movements in such secrecy were mysteries which his servants could not solve.

He had a mansion in London, surrounded by a high wall, which shut out prying eyes, and it was supposed he went to his town house, but Mrs. Druce offered another theory. She declared that when the duke disappeared from the splendid abbey he made his way into the Baker street bazaar through one of its hidden tunnels and became transformed for the time being into the tradesman, Charles Thomas Druce. After attending business for a time the merchant would disappear, by way of his labyrinth, be gone for several weeks, and then return to resume the conduct of his affairs, as though he had been absent only a few hours. Mrs. Druce, in short, maintained the duke and the merchant were the same person and the father of her husband.

She made desperate efforts to have the coffin of the elder Druce unearthed for examination, staking her case on the belief that it would be found to contain a quantity of lead pipe instead of the remains of a human body. One would suppose the man who inherited the Druce fortune would have acceded to such a proposition for the purpose of disposing of the controversy then and there, but he fought it at every step, and succeeded in preventing the exhumation even after permission had once been granted. This seemed to lend color to Mrs. Druce's charge of a bogus corpse.

The fifth Duke of Portland, who died in 1879, was an exceedingly eccentric character. He succeeded to the title and vast estates in 1854, and for a quarter of a century he lived the life of a recluse, so far as the outside world knew. He was never seen at court and did not mingle in society. Even his lawyers were not allowed personal interviews with him. His attire was extraordinary. He sported an immensely tall hat and wore his trousers hitched up at the knees with strings after the fashion in favor among London navvies, who, being accustomed to paddling about in mud and clay during most of their working hours, had some reason for the shortening of their breeches.

The duke never started out, whether the weather was fine or stormy, without an old umbrella. He would invariably drive alone, no one but his valet being permitted to approach him. There were drawn for him every day two quarts of beer and two of ale, but he never drank them. He was supposed to have been a bachelor all his life and to have died childless. It was public rumor that he was a leper, which may be the foundation of Mrs. Druce's charge concerning the offensive skin disease of Lord George. But the ownership of a large part of London and a city rent roll bringing in $1,500,000 a year in time led the world to accept the duke's eccentricities as a matter of course.

It is largely because of the underground apartments constructed by the duke that Welbeck is to-day one of the greatest curiosities in England. The duke had a passion for architecture, and much of his vast income was spent on the estate and its buildings. It is estimated he spent from $10,000,000 to $15,000,000 on his subterranean works alone. The usually accepted theory for the creation of the wonderful system of underground chambers and roads was the desire of the duke to give employment to the neighboring poor, toward whom he was always considerate.

Welbeck is an immense, stately and sad looking building, and the tunnels burrow beneath the park in every direction. There is a subterranean picture gallery that is larger than any other private gallery in England. Among the other underground halls were a large riding room, a dining room, a ball room, a chapel, and baths like those of the Romans. It was reported that it was no uncommon thing for the duke, after an absence, to reappear in the dining room at dinner and sit down at the head of the table as though he had just stopped in from an adjoining room.

The main tunnel in the labyrinth is 2,640 yards long and is built of brick with a narched roof. It is lighted from above by circular windows of plate glass twelve feet apart, between which are gas jets for night illumination. The skylights stand about two feet above the surface of the ground and have the appearance of huge eyes. Another tunnel was planned for a carriage way. There is a maze of private tunnels, through which three persons can walk abreast. They are comfortably heated and are lighted like the main tunnel. All this is a remarkable monument to human eccentricity, but none of the late duke's friends apparently suspected that remorse was gnawing at his vitals or that he had constructed the wonderful and splendid labyrinth as a refuge.

Find Your Place and Fill It.

It is a sad parody on life to see a man earning his living by a vocation which has never received his approval. It is pitiable to see a youth, with the image of power and destiny stamped upon him, trying to support himself in a mean, contemptible occupation, which dwarfs his nature, and makes him despise himself; an occupation which is constantly condemning him, ostracizing him from all that is best and truest in life. Dig trenches, shovel coal, carry a hod; do anything rather than sacrifice your self-respect, blunt your sense of right and wrong, and shut yourself off forever from the true joy of living, which comes only from the consciousness of doing one's best.

What of The Afterward.

The decision of a Chicago court that $25 is sufficient capital to marry on may possibly be sound, but it does not explain what the wedded pair is to subsist upon during the marital period, which, in Chicago, is anywhere from ten days to six weeks.

CURIOUS BANK NOTES.

Collection Exhibited Before the Institute of Bankers at London.

On Aladdin's principle of giving new lamps for old, Mr. Moberly Phillips, as an associate of the institute of bankers, is preparing at any time to give new notes, or their equivalent in gold, for old notes which have some interesting history attached to them. Mr. Phillips is the only collector of bank notes in the country, and probably out of it, and his collection amounts to 800, more or less. Some of the more valuable of his specimens he exhibited recently at a meeting of the institute of bankers in the London institution. One of the most interesting was a note issued by Maj. Gen. Baden-Powell during the siege of Mafeking. It is numbered 766, dated March, 1900, and printed in green ink on an obviously primitive machine. Another, with, if possible, a more fascinating history, was a currency note, with Arabic lettering, printed by Gen Gordon when he was besieged in Khartoum. Of the Bank of England notes Mr. Phillips has specimens of the face value of £1 not unlike in appearance the Scotch 20 shilling notes of the present day. In times of emergency, when coin was scarce, paper money of as low a value as 5s was issued by traders. But there has been a lower depth even than this, cards and paper tickets having been resorted to in some places for as small a sum as 1s. Another interesting special issue, shown by Mr. Phillips, was that of the Birmingham workhouse. These notes were circulated by the overseers for various small amounts, "for the convenience of paying the poor," and payment was made when eight 2s 6d or four 5s notes were brought together. In one corner of one of these notes is a picture of Charity nursing young children. As showing the length of time during which notes may remain in currency, Mr. Phillips mentioned that he had a Scotch note for £12, dated 1731, and that the bank which issued it offered to change it for him. Being a collector, Mr. Phillips preferred to keep his ancient bit of paper. In the matter of diminutive bank notes a correspondent sends an account of a curious note which he has in his possession. It is a card measuring 2 by 2½ inches, on one side of which is twice printed the word "twopence," while on the other side the sum is printed in words and figures around the border. In the middle is the following: "I promise to pay the bearer on demand, twopence. By order of the corporation of the city of New York, February 20, 1790.—D. Phoenix, city treasurer. — London Chronicle.

HUMOR IN SIGNBOARDS.

Some Originally Funny, Others So by Mischief Makers.

"What's in a sign?" might be asked about many of the bulletins posted all over the city to advertise some business or call attention to some particular thing, says the Newark News. The queer turn that is occasionally given to a sign often serves to attract attention to it. However, it is doubtful if the proprietor of a Market street dry goods store was pleased with the change in his sign which occurred recently. He had a notice in front of his place which read, "The Cheapest Store of the City." Some one put a theatrical poster over the first four letters of the "cheapest," so that the sign read, "The Pest Store of the City." The merchant wondered why so few customers called that day. It must have been with feelings other than those of flattery that the pastor of a church in Roseville saw a notice he put out reading, "The pastor will preach here this evening," changed by some wag to "The pastor will screach here this evening." It was only a mistake in spelling which made the owner of a chair-repairing shop appear to be doing a preserving business, for he had out a notice which announced "Chairs Canned Here." Some stores have hung in the front windows signs made of movable letters set in a frame. A cigar dealer, by name Vera P. Orr, left it to his boy to arrange the letters one day. The boy got twisted on the alphabet, and when half the day passed and no sales had been made the proprietor thought of looking at the sign. He expected to find on it the name and announcement that cigars were sold there, but instead this is what confronted him: "Vera Poor Cigars Sold Here." On Bridge street a livery dealer hung out a sign notifying the public that there would be a "fine sale of horses," but a boy with a stick dipped in some tar changed the "n" to an "r," so that the sign read, "Fire Sale of Horses." The proprietor wondered what some of his customers meant by asking him if the horses were badly burned until he saw the sign. Hanging out in front of a hardware store on one of the coldest mornings recently was a notice stating that there were lawn mowers and refrigerators for sale inside.

Buddhists in Japan.

According to Shin Bukkyo, a leading Japanese periodical, more than 300 Buddhist journals and reviews are published in that country. It mentions some of them as follows: "One of the most remarkable is the Bukkyo Maishu (Buddhist Weekly), which has for its program the reconciliation of the old and new Buddhism. The Chuo Korom, another widely-read publication, discusses not only the Buddhist questions, but also devotes a good deal of space to sociology and political economy. The Myoshu has the reputation of being the standard literary review, and its editors and writers are men of high standing in the world of letters."

LATEST FASHION HINTS

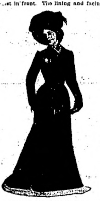
This is undoubtedly a winter for furs. A neckpiece of sable costs twice as much now as it did earlier in the season. Fur jackets of all kinds are the mode, sable, broadtail and chinchilla carrying off the palm. Chic boleros of fur are much in favor. Frequently two furs are combined; for example, sable and white broadtail. Fur is also much used for trimmings, especially narrow bands on lace, and the fur itself cut into bows is introduced on the fronts of jackets. Fur is trimmed with lace, which in turn, has fur applique upon it. Evening gowns of white satin are embellished with Arabesque patterns worked in fur mingled with guipure, the flowers being padded and thrown up in relief, fur being used as the heart of the flowers.

Pretty Sofa Pillow.

For the woman whose pennies are few there is a novel sofa pillow. It is made of common blue and white ticking, the narrower the stripe the better. On the stripe sew that bright tinsel cord which sells for two or three cents. This comes in silver, gilt and copper, and all three colors may be used. Between the stripes make a catchstitch of some gayly colored silk floss. Any number of colors may be used and the ruffle may be made of sateen to match the blue in the ticking.

Tailor-Made Suit.

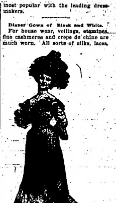
A neat tailor-made suit of dark Oxford melton is made with a plain flare skirt, stitched at the seams and gathered into an inverted pleat at the back. The coat is of the Prince Albert shape and is made with the long dip to the waist in front. The lining and facing on the lapels are of black satin. The present styles all require quantities of all varieties of silk. While there are many excellent makes, those of the Corticelli manufacture seem to be the most popular with the leading dressmakers.



In Dark Oxford and Melton.

Dinner Gown of Black and White.

For house wear, veilings, etamines, fine cashmeres and crepe de chine are much worn. All sorts of silks, laces, chiffons and tissues are fashionable for evening gowns. Irish crochet lace is liked extremely for dinner or reception costumes. A beautiful dinner gown is of black net over white taffeta. The skirt is laid in tucks and bordered by an accordion-pleated flounce of the net, finished with three rows of quilling. At the head of the flounce is an applique of white lace. The low-cut bodice has elbow sleeves of the tucked net, slashed open on the outside of the arm and fastened across with strips of velvet ribbon and tiny rhinestone buckles. A little of the white lace mingles with choux of the net and ruffles of velvet-bordered chiffon on the corsage. Corticelli silk was used throughout in making this costume.



A Beautiful Dinner Gown.

Latest Fashion Notes.

Jewels are more popular than ever, especially with evening dress.

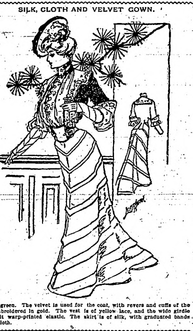
White evening gloves fasten with small turquoises surrounded by white enamel. Pearls are also used to fasten these gloves.

Automobile red and black will be worn so much together that one is safe in buying and in making up a spring gown in these shades.

Loose, short sacks of black velvet are "chic" made a little longer in the back than in front, in a manner to show the colored lining.

Brown tulle, with chenille dots to match, are worn with toques trimmed with mink or sable fur, and also when wraps or sets of the same fur are worn.

SILK, CLOTH AND VELVET GOWN.



In dark green. The velvet is used for the coat, with revers and cuffs of the cloth embroidered in gold. The vest is of yellow lace, and the wide girdle is of gilt warp-printed elastic. The skirt is of silk, with graduated bands of the cloth.

Best French Lingerie.

The 1902 importations of French lingerie show many beautiful matched sets of underwear, most of them intended as trousseau garments, entirely hand made, for the ultra fashionable women of to-day are demanding more and more that the best of their underwear shall show no machine stitching, says the Chicago News. These sets are most beautifully hand embroidered on the sheerest and finest of materials and trimmed with real lace. They are rather more plainly made than the majority of underwear shown, but the fineness and quality of the material, combined with the embroidery, make them the most exquisite of garments and proportionally high in price.

Large applique roses in velvet, outlined with brilliants, form trimming alike on the bodices and skirts of evening gowns. The ruffles to the sleeves are embroidered with coral or pearls.

JUMP ON SCHLEY

"HERO OF SANTIAGO" MAY HAVE TO FACE ANOTHER NAVAL COURT.

LONG IS NOW LOOKING INTO IT

ADMIRAL ACCUSED OF HAVING CRITICISED SAMPSON BY INFERENCE.

THE SAMPSONITES WILL PUSH IT

ALLEGED LETTER TO THE AUTHOR OF "SCHLEY AND SANTIAGO" THE CAUSE.

Washington, Jan. 28.—Admiral Schley may face another naval court for his alleged letter to George E. Graham, author of "Schley and Santiago," in which Admiral Sampson is by inference criticised for not having been present when the Spanish fleet was destroyed.

The matter was brought to Secretary Long's attention yesterday and he will give it consideration. He would not say whether or not the offense of the admiral on its face constituted a subject for court-martial or reprimand, but the opinion here is that if the Sampsonites can arrange things Schley will be put to all the annoyance possible. The secretary discussed the incident informally with Judge Advocate General Lemly, but no definite line of action was determined upon.

Admiral Schley's letter to Mr. Graham was dated Nov. 14, 1901, and was written from the Arlington hotel, this city. The sessions of the court of inquiry had then been conducted several days, but this, according to the navy department's authorities, does not affect the case. Secretary Long's special order that naval officers should not discuss the Sampson-Schley controversy for publication is held to have been in effect.

Secretary Long was in conference with the president for over an hour last night, presumably in regard to the appeal or Rear Admiral Schley from the findings of the court of inquiry, which was referred by the executive of the navy department for "comment." The secretary was accompanied by Judge Advocate Lemly and Solicitor Hanna, who conducted the case before the court. They met at Secretary Long's apartments, and when they departed for the White House they had with them bundles of papers which had the appearance of legal documents. Secretary Long declined to say anything for publication regarding the conference.

SCHLEY OUT OF POLITICS.

Admiral Says He Has No Intention of Entering Politics.

Chicago, Jan. 28.—Rear Admiral W. S. Schley Saturday thrice declared that he had no intention of entering politics. His remarks were calculated to set at rest for all time the present ambitions which some of his admirers have entertained for him. He said that no office, however high, would tempt him to jeopardise the good will the people of this country had expressed for him. The demonstrations reached their climax in the banquet given in his honor by the Hamilton club in the banquet hall of the Auditorium. Approximately 650 guests were present. At the depot the admiral was greeted by a delegation from the city council and a company of naval veterans of the Civil war.

MILES NOT AFTER PRESIDENCY.

Lieutenant General in Letter Denies Report That He Seeks the Chief Magistracy.

Boston, Jan. 28.—Gen. Miles is not a candidate for the presidency of the United States. He denied the report in reply to a letter to George F. Washburn of this city. The general's letter says:

"I deeply regret these reports. They are absolutely unauthorized. They do not emanate from myself nor from my friends, and I trust the public will not be misled by them. I have not been, and am not now, a seeker for presidential honors. My ambition has ever been to faithfully serve my country, and this will be my sole purpose in the future."

MYSTERIOUS DEATHS.

Two Sisters Are Found Dead in a Boston Tenement.

Boston, Jan. 28.—Two sisters, Ann Doherty, fifty years old, and Mary Doherty, forty years old, were found dead in the tenement on Tremont street, and the cause of their death is being investigated. There is nothing to indicate that the women committed suicide and the cause of death is at present a mystery.

New Industry Acquired.

Thief River Falls, Minn., Jan. 28.—The Fosston Woolen mills management has decided to establish a plant at this point, liberal inducements having been offered by local business men. A capital stock of $17,500 has been raised by the village to secure the mills. It is expected that operations will begin as soon as the weather permits on the construction of suitable quarters.

Thirteen Cars Derailed.

Glyndon, Minn., Jan. 28.—Early yesterday morning a wreck occurred on the Northern Pacific near Dilworth sidetrack, west of here. Thirteen cars were derailed on account of a broken switch.

War on Bootleggers.

Akeley, Minn., Jan. 28.—War has been declared by local citizens against the illegal sale of liquor, which has become quite common in the community. A number of bootleggers have been advised to leave town, and further trouble was averted by a timely departure of the guilty parties.

Accidentally Drowned.

Dubuque, Iowa, Jan. 23.—Luke Connolly, while drawing a bucket of water from the river yesterday, was pulled under the ice by the current and drowned

WILL NOT STRIKE.

Kaukauna Papermakers Decide to Accept Manufacturers' Terms.

Kaukauna, Wis., Jan. 28.—Kaukauna papermakers yesterday voted not to strike because they did not get short hours which they asked for in their petition to the mill owners, but instead, after a four-hour session, voted to accept the 10 per cent advance offered them.

Appleton, Wis., Jan. 27.—The Appleton lodge of the United Brotherhood of Papermakers yesterday afternoon voted to strike next Saturday night. The action was taken after reading the report of the committee which waited upon Mr. McNaughton, the millionaire manufacturer, who, it is said, holds the key to the situation. The meeting was slimly attended, many of those who signed the agreement to accept a raise in wages failing to appear. Another week, it is thought, must decide whether the union is to win or lose in its fight in Wisconsin.

PRISONERS BREAK JAIL.

One Man Killed and Three Others Get Away.

Fort Smith, Ark., Jan. 28.—The prisoners in the county jail here attempted to escape at noon yesterday. One man, Jesse Jones, a negro, charged with forgery, is dead, and Jailer N. D. Knapton is injured. Harry Folsom, Samuel Blain and Andy Rogers, all charged with grand larceny, succeeded in getting away. Bloodhounds are on the trail of the escaped prisoners. Jailer Knapton was serving dinner to the men when Jones seized him through the half-open door and, forcing him to one side, left a clear way for his cellmates to get away. Only three of them succeeded in doing so before Knapton shot Jones in the breast, the negro dying an hour later. In his fight with Jones, Knapton's thumbs were bitten almost off and he was badly bruised.

WANTED IN IOWA.

Two Men Charged With Robbery Are Caught in South Dakota.

Sioux Falls, S. D., Jan. 28.—L. W. Smith, chief of detectives of Des Moines, Iowa, and J. N. Hanes, sheriff of Dallas county, Iowa, are in Sioux Falls and have caused the arrest of Victor Fish and George Norman, who are wanted on the charge of robbing a store in Dallas county and carrying off several wagon loads of plunder. The men were traced to this city by the two Iowa officers, who found them in a local hotel. Being outside their jurisdiction, Chief of Police Martin was called on to make the arrest for the Iowa officers. The prisoners have been placed in jail here pending the arrival of requisition papers from Gov. Herried, when they will be taken back to Iowa for trial.

TWO DIE IN FIRE.

Prominent Hoo-Hoo Society Man the Victim of His Bravery.

Mobile, Ala., Jan. 28.—Fire in the wholesale business district destroyed property to the value of at least $300,000 and caused the death of Richard H. Vidmer, a leading society man of Mobile, and Bat Thomas, a negro laborer from New Orleans. Three firemen were injured, two slightly and one painfully. Mr. Vidmer and Thomas were assisting the firemen in subduing the flames and were caught by falling walls. Mr. Vidmer was a prominent Hoo-hoo.

TWINS BORN; PA TRIES TO DIE.

Cuts His Throat When Number of Children Reaches Unlucky Thirteen.

English, Ind., Jan. 28.—John Foley, living near Eckerty, attempted suicide when the doctor told him of the birth of his second pair of twins, raising the number of the Foley children to thirteen.

Foley cut his throat with a razor, but missed the jugular vein and will live, although weak from the loss of blood. He told the doctor that he attempted to end his life because thirteen is an unlucky number.

ONE KILLED, ANOTHER MAY DIE.

Chilton (Wis.) Men Suffer in a Train Accident.

Hayton, Wis., Jan. 23.—Pat McHugh, Clemment Managan, James Laughlin and a young man named Greany, all of Chilton, yesterday were struck at a crossing near here by a north-bound train on the Milwaukee road. McHugh was instantly killed and Laughlin probably fatally injured, but the others escaped uninjured. They were returning from a dance in a buggy.

LAWYERS TAKE A HAND.

Bank Wants Harvester Company in the Hands of Receiver.

La Crosse, Wis., Jan. 28.—Judge Fruit Saturday, upon motion of Morris & Hartwell, for the Exchange State bank, appointed Robert Lowney receiver for the La Crosse Brown Harvester Company, capitalized at $150,000. The case was based on an unpaid judgment of the bank in company notes given for money loaned for experiments.

Foul Play Suspected.

Warren, Ohio, Jan. 28.—Coroner Hoover was yesterday called to a point on the Baltimore & Ohio railroad between Niles and Girard, in this county, where Michael Sweeney, a target man, was burned to death in his tower last burning and Sweeny amid the flames gesticulating for aid. Later the charred boddy was found and the coroner says there is reason to believe Sweeny was robbed, tied and cremated by tramps.

Canadian Pacific Wreck.

Sault Ste. Marie, Mich. Jan. 28.—News has reached here of a wreck on the Canadian Pacific east of Sudbury. A passenger coach was derailed and turned completely over, killing one man and injuring fifteen persons.

Disgraced Man Suicides.

London, Jan. 28.—According to the Sofia correspondent of the Daily Express, Dike Joseph, a politician and lawyer and the director of the newspaper Svet, committed suicide after his arrest in connection with a series of thefts of postage stamps from the government printing department, involving a loss to the state of $50,000.

Henry Littleton Edmonds, who was judge of the criminal court in St. Louis for many years, died from acute disease of the stomach after an illness of several months.

POWERS WIN OUT

CHINESE EMPEROR RECEIVES THE FOREIGN MINISTERS IN AUDIENCE.

EMPEROR ACTS LIKE A DUMMY

MAINTAINS A STOLID AND IMPASSIVE SILENCE THROUGHOUT.

DOWAGER BEHIND A SCREEN

MINISTERS ATTAIN THE GOAL FOR WHICH THEY HAVE BEEN AIMING.

Pekin, Jan. 26.—The ministers of the foreign powers here have attained the goal which has been their aim since intercourse between China and the powers began. They have been received as representatives of sovereigns equal in rank to the Chinese emperor.

The audiences between the emperor and the ministers Wednesday were held in the innermost large hall of the Forbidden City. The emperor sat upon a dais behind a table. There were four princes at the back of his chair and a dozen officials at each side.

The dowager empress was concealed by a screen, according to the stories of the attendants, and remained invisible. The audience chamber was furnished ornately, in contrast to the dingy rooms which served for these audiences under the old regime. The secretaries translated the addresses of the ministers, copies of which were handed to the emperor. The replies were delivered by Prince Ching.

Emperor an Automaton.

The emperor was silent throughout the audiences and remained stolid and impassive. Formerly the emperor replied to the ministers in Manchu and the prince interpreted what he said. Yesterday he appeared as an automaton, and the secretaries of the foreign ministers who were present said that he looked weaker, less intellectual and more childish than prior to the siege of the legations.

Sir Ernest Satow, the British representative, made the following address:

"My august sovereign charged me to express to your majesty his sincere desire to see the independence and the integrity of the Chinese empire maintained intact, and that the prosperity and happiness of the Chinese people may be hastened by the removal of obstacles to the free exchange of commodities, by the extension of manufactures and by the utilization of the resources of the soil. The wonderful improvements in the means of communication between different parts of the world, through the development of steam navigation, railways and telegraphs, has brought all countries into

Much Closer Relations

than was possible in former times. Thus the nations of the world are enabled to profit by the lessons to be learned from each other in the art of government, in methods of education, in the administration of justice and the application of the public wealth to the advantage of the whole people. If, under the enlightened rule of your majesty, the barriers which in the past hindered the free and mutually advantageous intercourse of China with the rest of the world be completely removed, and her domestic institutions wisely regulated, it is certain that China, advancing along the path of progress, will attain to a height of prosperity unknown in the past."

The ministers of the foreign powers entered the Forbidden City at the main gate, leaving their military escorts outside. At the second gate they entered yellow chairs, like those furnished for the princes and secretaries. They walked through the inner courts of the Forbidden City and their cortege retired from the city by the east gate.

TO SUCCEED SEWELL.

New Jersey Republicans Nominate John F. Dryden.

Trenton, N. J., Jan. 25.—The Republican caucus to elect a candidate for United States senator to be supported during the present session of the legislature to succeed the late Gen. Sewell selected on the nineteenth ballot John F. Dryden of Newark, president of the Prudential Insurance company. Mr. Dryden on the nineteenth ballot received exactly the necessary thirty-two votes. His principal rivals in the contest were State Senator Stokes of Cumberland county and Former United States Attorney General John W. Griggs. The vote was at once made unanimous. The Republicans have a majority on joint ballot of 45, which assures the election of Mr. Dryden as the caucus action is binding.

Present Credentials at Pekin.

Pekin, Jan. 25.—The present ministers to China from Great Britain, Germany, France, Russia, Japan and Portugal presented their credentials yesterday. Chinese officers and soldiers escorted them from their respective legations while small escorts of foreign soldiers accompanied them to the emperor's gate of the Forbidden City.

Another Shock in Mexico.

Mexico City, Jan. 25.—Another slight earthquake shock shook Chilpancingo yesterday afternoon and people ran about the streets in despair. No harm was done. Official data shows that 614 houses, not including government buildings, were destroyed in the first and second earthquakes.

Claim Against Colombia.

Santiago, Chile, Jan. 25.—The Chilean government will present a diplomatic claim against the United States of Colombia because of the loss of the Chilean steamer Lautaro, which was sunk in Panama harbor during an engagement with the Colombian Liberals on Jan. 20.

Depot at Becker Burned.

Clear Lake, Minn., Jan. 25.—The Great Northern depot at Becker burned yesterday morning. The origin of the fire is unknown.

OVATIONS FOR SCHLEY.

Greeted by Crowds Wherever His Trains Stops.

Pittsburg, Jan. 26.—Rear Admiral W. S. Schley passed through the city last night en route for Chicago, where he is to be the guest of the Hamilton club. The train was delayed here thirty-five minutes, and during that time the admiral shook hands with 500 people, made a nice little speech, was cheered vociferously and appeared to enjoy himself immensely. The crowd gathered at the Baltimore & Ohio station numbered nearly 1,000, and it was demonstrative to a degree. Reports from along the route from Baltimore to Pittsburg tell of a succession of ovations at all places where the train stopped, Cumberland, Connellsville, West Newton and McKeesport vieing with each other in the heartiness of their receptions of the admiral.

OLYMPIA REHABILITATED.

Dewey's Old Flagship Thoroughly Refitted and Modernized.

Boston, Jan. 26.—The historic flagship of the Manila bay fight, the Olympia, will go into commission at the Charlestown navy yard to-day. Capt. Henry W. Lyon takes command. Wednesday, Feb. 12, has been designated as her sailing day from Boston, and her orders now read "for Lambert's Point, Va." After participating in the naval reception and escort to Prince Henry of Prussia, the Olympia will go south to become the flagship of Rear Admiral Francis K. Higginson, in the important work of the North Atlantic squadron in the West Indian and Central American waters. For twenty-four months the work of refitting, overhauling and modernizing the famous ship has been in progress at the navy yard, and a total of $400,000, about $100,000 less than originally estimated, has been expended in the task.

GEORGE DIXON DEFEATED.

Veteran Colored Pugilist Goes Down Under a Rain of Blows.

Baltimore, Jan. 26.—George Dixon, the veteran colored pugilist, went down and out last night under a rain of body blows delivered by Eddie Lenny. It was an excellent exhibition of sparring. Lenny had the better of the argument throughout. His blocking rendered it impossible for the colored man to land a telling blow, while Dixon proved to be shiftier than his old friends had expected and avoided many hard leads. In the ninth round Lenny landed several hard body blows. When the round was two-thirds over the men came to a clinch near the ropes and wrestled to the center of the ring. Dixon fell to the floor, striking his head and laying open his cheek. He attempted to rise but was advised by his seconds to take the count, and the decision was given to Lenny. Dixon was very groggy.

TO POISON ABE LINCOLN.

Man Who Was Offered $100,000 Bribe Is Dead.

Washington, Jan. 26.—James Alman, who yesterday died in Washington, according to his own story refused a bribe of $100,000 to put poison in cream which he served to President Lincoln. Mr. Alman in 1865 kept a dairy on a farm where the bureau of printing and engraving now stands, about half a mile south of the White House. He supplied milk and cream to the White House and Secretary Stanton. In an interview some months ago Mr. Alman said that early in April, 1865, he was driving his milk wagon toward the White House, two men stopped him and offered him $100,000 to put poison in the cream he was taking to the president. Mr. Alman replied that a roll as big as the treasury building would not tempt him to do such a deed.

MR. DALE SEEKS DIVORCE.

Would Sever Ties With Woman Who Was Suspected of Child-Murder.

Chicago, Jan. 26. — Harvey S. Dale, manager of the Chicago branch of the Union Mutual Life Insurance company, has filed a bill for divorce in the circuit court against his wife, Elizabeth Howe Dale. According to the bill Dale was married to Elizabeth Nicholson Howe at Buffalo, Jan. 4, 1896, and lived with her as husband until Dec. 27, 1899. Antonius Zilles, alias Emmet Corrigan, is named as the co-respondent. Elbert Waller is also named in connection with the charges. Mrs. Dale was recently under arrest in Hoboken, N. J., charged with killing her child. After an investigation by the coroner she was discharged from custody.

HOBSON STAYS IN.

Naval Board Will Not Allow Him to Retire.

Washington, Jan. 26. — A naval retiring board has declined to recommend the retirement of Capt. Richard P. Hobson. He applied for retirement, alleging that his eyes were injured by the heat and glare while he was working on the Spanish vessels sunk at Santiago and afterward while he was on duty at Hongkong, where two vessels of the Spanish fleet sunk by Dewey were repaired. The board of physicians which examined him found that his sight was not permanently impaired, and he has been ordered to return to duty in connection with the Charleston exposition.

UNRULY MINERS.

They Make an Attack on a Car and One Man Is Shot.

Terre Haute, Ind., Jan. 26.—A westbound car carrying mail on the Brazil interurban line was attacked by a crowd of miners at 8 o'clock last night at the Seelyville switch, eight miles east of this city. During the exchange of shots between the non-union trainmen and the miners Capt. K. H. Hagerman, a passer-by, was shot in the hip, but his injury is not necessarily fatal. It is not known who fired first, but at least twenty shots were exchanged.

LOVER IS A SUICIDE.

Embezzles Money and When Discarded by the Girl Takes His Life.

St. Louis, Jan. 26.—Julius F. Yeager, aged twenty-six, chagrined because a St. Louis girl had refused to marry him after he was known to have stolen money from his employers, hanged himself Thursday in his father's barn at Oakville, St. Louis county. Yeager took $2,200, which he laid by to start in business with. His sweetheart would have nothing to do with him and he hanged himself.

DENMARK AGREES

TREATY FOR THE SALE OF THE DANISH WEST INDIES WILL BE SIGNED.

LONG TIME TO COMPLETE DEAL

RATIFICATIONS MUST BE EXCHANGED BEFORE IT IS SETTLED.

HAS STRING ON THE ISLANDS

DENMARK WILL CONSULT THE WISHES OF THE NATIVE ISLANDERS.

Washington, Jan. 25. — Constantine Brun, the Danish minister in Washington, yesterday received official notification from Copenhagen that his government had agreed to the terms of the treaty recently negotiated by Secretary Hay and Mr. Brun for the transfer of the Danish West Indian islands to the United States.

Mr. Brun went immediately to the state department with this important piece of information, and as Secretary Hay had left the department for the day he saw Mr. Hill, the assistant secretary of state, with whom he had a long talk. It is expected the treaty will be signed in a few days.

The treaty must first be approved by the senate, and then it will be necessary to secure an appropriation of the purchase price from both the senate and the house. A treaty does not become a perfected agreement until the "ratifications" have been exchanged, and as this does not usually take place until several months after confirmation by the senate, Denmark will have ample opportunity to ascertain the sentiment of her Antillian subjects before the time arrives for the final act that with her West Indian possessions. If the plebecite should show that a majority of the islanders were opposed to the transfer, Denmark could end the matter by declining to exchange the ratifications. By the treaty absolute sovereignty over the islands of St. Thomas, St. John and St. Croix, or St. Kims, is transferred to the United States in consideration of the payment of a sum said to be about $4,000,000, which is $3,500,000 less than the amount named in the treaty negotiated by Secretary Seward more than thirty years ago. Denmark made a strong plea for a stipulation that there should be free trade between the islands and the United States, but Secretary Hay declined to accede to this for the reason that only congress has the right to make tariff arrangements. Denmark also wanted this government to agree to take over the inhabitants of the islands as full-fledged American citizens, but this could not be conceded, as congress has absolute authority in that connection. The inhabitants will, therefore, come under the protection of the United States with the same status as that possessed by the Porto Ricans, leaving to congress the determination of the question of how the islands shall be governed and the political standing of their people.

Would Sever Her Relations

TREATY WITH DENMARK.

Those West Indian Islands Soon Will Belong to America.

Copenhagen, Jan. 25.—Yesterday authority to sign the Danish West Indies treaty was cabled to the Danish minister at Washington, C. Brun. It is expected that the treaty will be signed to-day. It is understood here that it will be immediately transmitted to the senate. Its prompt ratification is expected.

GUILTY OF CRIMINAL ASSAULT.

Negro Pleads Guilty and Is Sentenced to Be Hanged.

Lynchburg, Va., Jan. 25.—Joe Higginbotham was convicted yesterday afternoon of criminal assault upon Mrs. Ralph Webber and was sentenced to be hanged on Feb. 24. He pleaded guilty. Four witnesses, including Mrs. Webber, testified to the circumstances of the crime. A large number of the state militia were here and the court house and jail were surrounded by a guard. There was, however, no disorder of any kind. The negro was taken back to Roanoke to remain until the date of his execution. Higginbotham, on Jan 11, committed the assault upon Mrs. Webber and then attempted to murder her by cutting her throat.

SOFT MARRIED.

Indiana Man Tempted Matrimonial Fate Twelve Times.

Dublin, Ind., Jan. 25.—Philip Veidelburg of Madison county undoubtedly holds the record in Indiana for marriages. He is fifty-eight years old and has been married twelve times. He is the father of thirty-two children. He was born in Germany and came from a family whose ancestors settled in New York during the colonial period.

IN JAIL FOR TREASON.

German Paper's Sensational Report of American Action in Luzon.

Frankfort-on-the-Main, Jan. 25.—The Presse publishes a letter from a correspondent in the Philippines alleging that the Americans have thrown whole village administrations into dungeons in the island of Luzon for treason. The correspondent asserts that the Americans are adopting greater severities all along the line.

ONE POINT SETTLED.

Judge Noyes Will Not Be Sent Back to Alaska.

Washington, Jan. 25. — The attorney general after a conference with the president yesterday made the announcement that whatever the department of justice might decide upon in the case of Judge Noyes of Alaska, who was recently convicted in the courts of San Francisco of contempt of court, it was certain that Judge Noyes will not be sent back to the district of Alaska.

CONGRESS.

Effort to Shove a Schley Resolution Through the Senate Fails.

Washington, Jan. 24.—An effort was made in the senate yesterday by Mr. Mason of Illinois to obtain consideration for a joint resolution which he introduced, extending the thanks of congress to Winfield Scott Schley "for his brave and able conduct of the American fleet at the victorious battle of Santiago." The effort, however, was not successful. Mr. Mason's resolution, in addition to the thanks of congress, provided that Admiral Schley should be presented a sword, that bronze medals commemorative of the battle of Santiago should be distributed among the officers and men "under the command of Schley during said battle," and that $10,000 be appropriated to meet the expenses of the resolution. On motion of Mr. Hale the resolution was referred to the committee on naval affairs.

The resolution introduced by Mr. Teller providing for intervention on the part of this government in behalf of Gen. Scheepers, sentenced to death by the British South African authorities, was postponed indefinitely as Scheepers already has been executed.

The department of commerce bill was under consideration the greater part of the session, but no definite progress was made.

In the House.

The consideration of the urgent deficiency bill, which has been under debate in the house since Monday, was completed yesterday, but owing to the lateness of the hour, passage of the bill was postponed until to-day. A successful effort was made to increase the pay of rural mail carriers from $500 to $600 per annum. Mr. Hill of Connecticut made the motion to increase the appropriation for this purpose. It was resisted by Mr. Cannon and Mr. Loud, chairman of the postoffice committee, on the ground that the method was irregular, but the members with rural constituencies supported it and it was adopted—109 to 78.

PRESENTS FROM THE PRINCE.

Americans Will Receive Mementoes of Henry's Visit.

Berlin, Jan. 25.—Admiral Prince Henry of Prussia yesterday selected at the court jeweler's about fifty presents for Americans with whom he will come especially in contact during his visit to the United States. The presents consist of gold and silver boxes, set with diamonds and having the emperor's monogram on the top; gold and silver cups, gold and silver cigarette cases on which his majesty's autograph is traced in small diamonds, and small compasses encased in gold and silver boxes with "Hohenzollern" enameled on them, besides larger and more valuable gifts. A number of cuff links, brooches and scarf pins, with the initial "H" in diamonds, are also included among the presents. The latter are intended for less important persons. Official secrecy is maintained as to what the emperor and Prince Henry will present to the president, Rear Admiral Robley D. Evans and Miss Alice Roosevelt, although it is well known that his majesty will send Miss Roosevelt a jeweled bracelet and Prince Henry probably will offer the president a fine hunting gun, with interchangeable shot and rifle barrels, and its accompanying equipment.

APPEALS TO THE PRESIDENT.

Rough Rider Who Is Want Writes to His Former Colonel.

Toledo, Ohio, Jan. 25.—A letter appealing for assistance is speeding on its way to President Roosevelt on behalf of Edward Lentz, who served with "Teddy" through the war as a rough rider and was fighting next to "Ham" Fish when that young hero's life was spent. He was also a messmate of Fish. Lentz is suffering from rheumatism, the result of exposure during the war. He enlisted in Arizona and now has a family in Illinois. He is a fireman, but lately has been unable to do much work. He applied for a pension some time since, but no action has been taken. He has applied for admission into the Sandusky soldiers' home and his application is soon to be acted upon. The rough rider has confidence in his colonel and says his appeal will not be in vain.

FEAR A LYNCHING.

Double Murderer Is Lodged in Jail in Kentucky.

Louisville, Ky., Jan. 25.—J. B. Jewell, accused of double murder, was brought to Louisville yesterday afternoon and placed in jail. Fear of lynching caused the Spencer county officials much uneasiness, and before the news of Jewell's arrest became known he was on his way to Louisville. Jewell was much relieved when he reached the jail. The killing for which Jewell was arrested occurred last Saturday and was the result of trespass by hogs and a dispute over a line fence, Jewell and Marion Bruce owning neighboring farms in Spencer county. In a fight Saturday Marion Bruce was mortally wounded by Jewell with a shotgun, his son John Bruce was instantly killed, and David Bruce, another son, was slightly wounded.

CHINESE EXCLUSION.

Ex-Secretary Foster Talks in Favor of the Chinks.

Washington, Jan. 25. — Ex-Secretary of State John W. Foster appeared before the senate committee on immigration yesterday and spoke in opposition to the Chinese exclusion bills which have been introduced in congress. His remarks were directed more particularly to the Mitchell or Pacific coast bill, which he said was a plain violation of our treaty with China. Mr. Foster said that our government had four times asked China to modify existing treaties in the interest of American citizens, and that in every instance China had acceded to our request.

Hotel Man Takes a Trip.

Osakis, Minn., Jan. 25. — O. Mahan, who for the past year has been landlord of the well known summer hotel, "Idle Wilde," took a sudden departure on the 15th inst., leaving a number of the business men to guess his whereabouts.

Killed by a Bartender.

Sioux City, Iowa, Jan. 25.—Joe Russell, a bartender, last night shot and killed Sam Starks, an employe of the Armour Packing company, in a quarrel in a saloon over a dice game.

Hearing was then had on ditch petition of M. C. Harlow and others.

On motion carried unanimously the petition was accepted.

Commissioner Hanson offered the following resolution and moved its adoption.

Resolution appointing engineer in ditch proceedings.

In the matter of the petition of M. C. Harlow and others for a public ditch in the County of Red Lake, State of Minnesota.

State of Minnesota,
County of Red Lake. } ss.

Whereas, a petition bearing date the 11th day of November, 1901, signed by M. C. Harlow and others praying for the establishment of a certain public ditch in said county, the route of which is more fully described in said petition, and a proper bond accompanying the same, having been filed with the County Auditor of said county, as by law required;

And Whereas, It appears, by satisfactory proof to the Board of County Commissioners of Red Lake county, that due notice of the pendency of said petition, and the time and place at which the same would be heard, has been given as required by law.

Now, Therefore, We, the Board of County Commissioners of Red Lake, at a regular session held this day, do hereby appoint W. O. Smiley as a competent and experienced engineer to make an accurate survey of the line of said public ditch from its source to its outlet, as provided and specified in and by Chapter 258 of the general laws of 1901, and after completing his duties as such engineer to make and file his report with the County Auditor of said county, on or before the 10th day of February 1902.

Aunt Jane—Ezra, go tell your ma that the picture of Uncle Ham has arrived, but the fool artist went and painted it upside down. — Chicago News.

All He Knew About It.

"Here! Here!" said the rich old widower. "What are you doing?"

"I'm pinchin' your legs to see which of them's the wooden one," said little Willie.

"Boy," the old man testily replied, "you bother me. Run away. What do you mean by one of my legs being wooden? I haven't any wooden leg."

"Well, when Sister Fannie said the other night that she didn't want to marry you even with all your money mother told her not to be foolish, because you had one foot in the grave and wouldn't last long. So that's all I know about it."—Chicago Record-Herald.

A Nibble Game.

A funny game is to tie several crullers by long strings between the folding doors. Let the crullers hang so as to be opposite, or nearly so, the mouths of the boys and girls who are to engage in the contest. Upon a given signal the contestants stand in a line with hands tied behind their backs and nibble the crullers. The first who succeeds in eating all his or hers without any portion falling upon the floor wins the prize.

How She Knew.

"Charley, dear," said young Mrs. Torkins, "why didn't you tell me you were going hunting yesterday? It would have relieved my mind ever so much, for I half suspected you were going to the races without taking me."

"How—er—how did you know I went hunting?"

"Because you were talking all night in your sleep about long shots."—Washington Star.

HUMOR OF THE HOUR

Notice to Burglars.

A certain Woodbridge street merchant who has been frequently a victim of safe blowers has adopted a novel and somewhat humorous plan of safeguarding his money vaults from depredations that might be contemplated by individuals of the burglarious fraternity. After his last dear experience he decided that a safe wasn't the "safest" place in the world for valuables, and he now makes a practice of promptly banking his profits and of taking whatever of value is in the safe at the close of the day's business home with him. He says the ambitious cracksman that should tackle his safe now o' nights would find "poor pickings." Posted over the front of the safe in black, conspicuous type is this sign: "Notice.—Please do not blow open the safe. Here is the key."

And, sure enough, the key to the safe hangs over the sign, being suspended from one of the hinges.—Detroit Free Press.

Hay Versus Oats.

"I see," said the truck horse as he looked over the top of his morning paper—"I see that the price of oats is going up."

"Well," said the sagacious old nag that drew the doctor's phaeton, "there is one sure thing, and that is they can't put hay into its place."

"And why not?" inquired the truck horse.

"Because it would go against the grain," replied the doctor's nag.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Boston Men.

Barnes—I don't know whether it is in the atmosphere or the surroundings, but the effect of lectures on me is not always the same.

Howes—Probably not.

Barnes—When Professor Belcher lectures down at the Lyceum, I invariably go to sleep, whereas when my wife lectures me after going to bed I am as wide awake as can be. And I'm not at all interested in her subject. Funny, ain't it?—Boston Transcript.

The Way He Looked.

"But I tell you your shopping is extravagant," he protested. "You should never take a thing just because it looks cheap."

"Indeed!" said the extravagant young wife. "If I had followed that advice when you proposed to me, I never would have taken you."—Philadelphia Press.

"Yes, I know. You see, she tells them all to her husband."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

The Proof.

Then the defiant militant spirit took possession of the devoted missionary.

"You think I'm a pudding!" he cried. "I'll show you I am not!"

"The proof of the pudding is in the eating," rejoined the savage darkly.—Detroit Free Press.

Brother—For tellin' him how old you was.

The Mysterious Box.

Once upon a time there was a very old couple living in a wood which was full of all kinds of wild animals. One morning the old man went to gather some wood in the forest, leaving his old wife at home.

A little before noon the good woman went to the creek to wash clothes, when, to her astonishment, she saw a fine, large peach floating upon the water directly in front of her. She picked it up, but did not eat it at once. She thought she would save it and share it with her dear old man at dinner, so she put it safely away in the cupboard.

At noon when her husband came home she cooked him a nice dinner. While they were sitting at the table she thought of the peach she had found in the creek and went to get it. When she opened the door of the cupboard, to her great surprise she saw a little baby coming out of the peach.

"Oh, wonderful! Oh, wonderful!" was all the old woman could say.

The old man, hearing the exclamation, immediately went to see what was the matter. He was as much astonished as his wife at the sight of the baby.

"It is very good, dear wife," said he, "for we have no child of our own, so we will take this one and bring it up as ours."

So she took the baby and wrapped it carefully and put it into a basket and placed it by the window.

In a few days the child grew so large that it was impossible to keep it in the basket, so she took a strong string and tied one end to the baby and the other to a millstone to keep it from getting away. But notwithstanding the child was so strong that it went about through the woods with the millstone and did a great deal of mischief.

In a few days the baby had grown to the size of a giant and worked with all a giant's strength helping the old man upon his little farm.

About this time the daughter of the Japanese king had been stolen by an oni (an imp) and carried far away to an iron castle on the oni's island, where she was imprisoned and tormented by fierce and ugly creatures.

The chief of the onis often tried to persuade her to marry him and become his queen, but she would not accept the oni's throne. But the oni persisted in wooing her and tried in many ways to make her consent.

When the old king, her father, heard of this wonderful child, who was so young and yet so very strong, he sent one of his servants to bid him come to his palace at once, so the child obeyed the king's order and went to the palace and was carried into the king's private chamber.

The king asked him if he would bring back his daughter from the Oniga Shuia. The peach child told him he would try to do it, as he did not feel at all afraid of the oni. Then the king promised him that if he should succeed he would give him his daughter's hand in marriage as a reward for his great service.

Early the next morning the peach child assembled all the warriors together that were to accompany him on his expedition to Oniga Shuia and made them a speech, and he promised to reward all that would serve the king's cause faithfully in the expedition against the oni. They were to have three rice biscuits apiece.

Then all agreed to obey the commands of the peach child, who at once assumed control of these loyal warriors, and the journey commenced.

When the whole army reached the Onlga Shuia all the onis made great preparation to give the peach boy's warriors battle.

Next morning both armies met on the great plains of the Onlga Shuia, where they fought a terrible battle until night put an end to the conflict. The fortunes of the day decided against the oni's party and an immense number was slaughtered, and their blood covered the plain.

Next morning, the peach child's army having completely routed the oni's hosts and captured the iron castle of their prince, after a diligent search in the castle they found the beautiful and lovely daughter of the king confined in a dark dungeon.

When the victorious army opened the oni's treasury, they found numerous precious things. Among them were two suits of winged dresses and a mysterious Japanese box.

The peach child and the king's daughter put on the winged dresses and flew back to the king's palace in a few minutes and told the king what had happened in the Onlga Shuia.

The old king was very much pleased and gave his daughter in marriage to the peach child, who after the old king's death ascended the Japanese throne.

The wonder of his age and reign was the mysterious box which was taken from the oni, out of which the king could obtain anything he wanted.—New York News.

Remarkable Memories.

There was a Corsican boy who could rehearse 40,000 words, whether sense or nonsense, as they were dictated and then repeat them in the reversed order without making a single mistake. A physician about sixty years ago could repeat the whole of "Paradise Lost" without making a single mistake, although he had not read it for twenty years. Euler, the great mathematician, when he became blind could repeat the whole of Virgil's "Eneid" and could remember the first line and last line of every page of the particular edition which he had been accustomed to read before he became blind.—Spare Moments.

"HERO OF SANTIAGO" MAY HAVE TO FACE ANOTHER NAVAL COURT.

LONG IS NOW LOOKING INTO IT

ADMIRAL ACCUSED OF HAVING CRITICISED SAMPSON BY INFERENCE.

THE SAMPSONITES WILL PUSH IT

ALLEGED LETTER TO THE AUTHOR OF "SCHLEY AND SANTIAGO" THE CAUSE.

Washington, Jan. 25.—Admiral Schley may face another naval court for his alleged letter to George E. Graham, author of "Schley and Santiago," in which Admiral Sampson is by inference criticised for not having been present when the Spanish fleet was destroyed.

The matter was brought to Secretary Long's attention yesterday and he will give it consideration. He would not say whether or not the offense of the admiral on its face constituted a subject for court-martial or reprimand, but the opinion here is that if the Sampsonites can arrange things Schley will be put to all the annoyance possible. The secretary discussed the incident informally with Judge Advocate General Lemly, but no definite line of action was determined upon.

Admiral Schley's letter to Mr. Graham was dated Nov. 14, 1901, and was written from the Arlington hotel, this city. The sessions of the court of inquiry had then been conducted several days, but this, according to the navy department's authorities, does not affect the case. Secretary Long's special order that naval officers should not discuss the Sampson-Schley controversy for publication is held to have been in effect.

Secretary Long was in conference with the president for over an hour last night, presumably in regard to the appeal of Rear Admiral Schley from the findings of the court of inquiry, which was referred by the executive of the navy department for "comment." The secretary was accompanied by Judge Advocate Lemly and Solicitor Hanna, who conducted the case before the court. They met at Secretary Long's apartments, and when they departed for the White House they had with them bundles of papers which had the appearance of legal documents. Secretary Long declined to say anything for publication regarding the conference.

SCHLEY OUT OF POLITICS.

Admiral Says He Has No Intention of Entering Politics.

Chicago, Jan. 25.—Rear Admiral W. S. Schley Saturday thrice declared that he had no intention of entering politics. His remarks were calculated to set at rest for all time the present ambitions which some of his admirers have entertained for him. He said that no office, however high, would tempt him to jeopardize the good will the people of this country had expressed for him.

The demonstrations reached their climax in the banquet given in his honor by the Hamilton club in the banquet hall of the Auditorium. Approximately 800 guests were present. At the depot the admiral was greeted by a delegation from the city council and a company of naval veterans of the Civil war.

MILES NOT AFTER PRESIDENCY.

Lieutenant General in Letter Denies Report That He Seeks the Chief Magistracy.

Boston, Jan. 25.—Gen. Miles is not a candidate for the presidency of the United States. He denied the report in reply to a letter to George F. Washburn of this city. The general's letter says:

"I deeply regret these reports. They are absolutely unauthorized. They do not emanate from myself nor from my friends, and I trust the public will not be misled by them. I have not been, and am not now, a seeker for presidential honors. My ambition has ever been to faithfully serve my country, and this will be my sole purpose in the future."

MYSTERIOUS DEATHS.

Two Sisters Are Found Dead in a Boston Tenement.

Boston, Jan. 25.—Two sisters, Ann Doherty, fifty years old, and Mary Doherty, forty years old, were found dead in the tenement on Tremont street, and the cause of their death is being investigated. There is nothing to indicate that the women committed suicide and the cause of death is at present a mystery.

New Industry Acquired.

Thief River Falls, Minn., Jan. 22.—The Foston Woolen mills management has decided to establish a plant at this point, liberal inducements having been offered by local business men. A capital stock of $17,500 has been raised by the village to secure the mills. It is expected that operations will begin as soon as the weather permits on the construction of suitable quarters.

Thirteen Cars Derailed.

Glyndon, Minn., Jan. 23.—Early yesterday morning a wreck occurred on the Northern Pacific near Dilworth sidetrack, west of here. Thirteen cars were derailed on account of a broken switch.

War on Bootleggers.

Akeley, Minn., Jan. 22. — War has been declared by local citizens against the illegal sale of liquor, which has become quite common in the community. A number of bootleggers have been advised to leave town, and further trouble was averted by a timely departure of the guilty parties.

Accidentally Drowned.

Dubuque, Iowa, Jan. 22.—Luke Connelly, while drawing a bucket of water from the river yesterday, was pulled under the ice by the current and drowned.

WILL NOT STRIKE.

Kaukauna Papermakers Decide to Accept Manufacturers' Terms.

Kaukauna, Wis., Jan. 25.—Kaukauna papermakers yesterday voted not to strike because they did not get short hours which they asked for in their petition to the mill owners, but instead, after a four-hour session, voted to accept the 10 per cent advance offered them.

Appleton, Wis., Jan. 27.—The Appleton lodge of the United Brotherhood of Papermakers yesterday afternoon voted to strike next Saturday night. The action was taken after reading the report of the committee which waited upon Mr. McNaughton, the millionaire manufacturer, who, it is said, holds the key to the situation. The meeting was slimly attended, many of those who signed the agreement to accept a raise in wages failing to appear. Another week, it is thought, must decide whether the union is to win or lose in its fight in Wisconsin.

PRISONERS BREAK JAIL.

One Man Killed and Three Others Get Away.

Fort Smith, Ark., Jan. 25.—The prisoners in the county jail here attempted to escape at noon yesterday. One man, Jesse Jones, a negro, charged with forgery, is dead, and Jailer N. D. Knapton is injured. Harry Folsom, Samuel Blain and Andy Rogers, all charged with grand larceny, succeeded in getting away. Bloodhounds are on the trail of the escaped prisoners. Jailer Knapton was serving dinner to the men when Jones seized him through the half-open door and, forcing him to one side, left a clear way for his cellmates to get away. Only three of them succeeded in doing so before Knapton shot Jones in the breast, the negro dying an hour later. In his fight with Jones, Knapton's thumbs were bitten almost off and he was badly bruised.

WANTED IN IOWA.

Two Men Charged With Robbery Are Caught in South Dakota.

Sioux Falls, S. D., Jan. 25.—L. W. Smith, chief of detectives of Des Moines, Iowa, and J. N. Hanes, sheriff of Dallas county, Iowa, are in Sioux Falls and have caused the arrest of Victor Fish and George Norman, who are wanted on the charge of robbing a store in Dallas county and carrying off several wagon loads of plunder. The men were traced to this city by the two Iowa officers, who found them in a local hotel. Being outside their jurisdiction, Chief of Police Martin was called on to make the arrest for the Iowa officers. The prisoners have been placed in jail here pending the arrival of requisition papers from Gov. Herried, when they will be taken back to Iowa for trial.

TWO DIE IN FIRE.

Prominent Hoo-Hoo Society Man the Victim of His Bravery.

Mobile, Ala., Jan. 25.—Fire in the wholesale business district destroyed property to the value of at least $300,000 and caused the death of Richard H. Vidmer, a leading society man of Mobile, and Bat Thomas, a negro laborer from New Orleans. Three firemen were injured, two slightly and one painfully. Mr. Vidmer and Thomas were assisting the firemen in subduing the flames and were caught by falling walls. Mr. Vidmer was a prominent Hoo-hoo.

TWINS BORN; PA TRIES TO DIE.

Cuts His Throat When Number of Children Reaches Unlucky Thirteen.

English, Ind., Jan. 25.—John Foley, living near Eckerty, attempted suicide when the doctor told him of the birth of his second pair of twins, raising the number of the Foley children to thirteen.

Foley cut his throat with a razor, but missed the jugular vein and will live, although weak from loss of blood. He told the doctor that he attempted to end his life because thirteen is an unlucky number.

CHINESE EMPEROR RECEIVES THE FOREIGN MINISTERS IN AUDIENCE.

EMPEROR ACTS LIKE A DUMMY

MAINTAINS A STOLID AND IMPASSIVE SILENCE THROUGHOUT.

DOWAGER BEHIND A SCREEN

MINISTERS ATTAIN THE GOAL FOR WHICH THEY HAVE BEEN AIMING.

Pekin, Jan. 25.—The ministers of the foreign powers here have attained the goal which has been their aim since intercourse between China and the powers began. They have been received as representatives of sovereigns equal in rank to the Chinese emperor.

The audiences between the emperor and the ministers Wednesday were held in the innermost large hall of the Forbidden City. The emperor sat upon a dais behind a table. There were four princes at the back of his chair and a dozen officials at each side.

The dowager empress was concealed by a screen, according to the stories of the attendants, and remained invisible. The audience chamber was furnished ornately, in contrast to the dingy rooms which served for these audiences under the old regime. The secretaries translated the addresses of the ministers, copies of which were handed to the emperor. The replies were delivered by Prince Ching.

Emperor an Automaton.

The emperor was silent throughout the audiences and remained stolid and impassive. Formerly the emperor replied to the ministers in Manchu and the prince interpreted what he said. Yesterday he appeared as an automaton, and the secretaries of the foreign ministers who were present said that he looked weaker, less intellectual and more childish than prior to the siege of the legations.

Sir Ernest Satow, the British representative, made the following address:

"My august sovereign charged me to express to your majesty his sincere desire to see the independence and the integrity of the Chinese empire maintained intact, and that the prosperity and happiness of the Chinese people may be hastened by the removal of obstacles to the free exchange of commodities, by the extension of manufactures and by the utilization of the resources of the soil. The wonderful improvements in the means of communication between different parts of the world, through the development of steam navigation, railways and telegraphs, has brought all countries into

Much Closer Relations

than was possible in former times. Thus the nations of the world are enabled to profit by the lessons to be learned from each other in the art of government, in methods of education, in the administration of justice and the application of the public wealth to the advantage of the whole people. If, under the enlightened rule of your majesty, the barriers which in the past hindered the free and mutually advantageous intercourse of China with the rest of the world be completely removed, and her domestic institutions wisely regulated, it is certain that China, advancing along the path of progress, will attain to a height of prosperity unknown in the past."

The ministers of the foreign powers entered the Forbidden City at the main gate, leaving their military escorts outside. At the second gate they entered chairs, the ones furnished for the princes and secretaries. They walked through the inner courts of the Forbidden City and their cortege retired

OVATIONS FOR SCHLEY.

Greeted by Crowds Wherever His Trains Stops.

Pittsburg, Jan. 25.—Rear Admiral W. S. Schley passed through the city last night en route for Chicago, where he is to be the guest of the Hamilton club. The train was delayed here thirty-five minutes, and during that time the admiral shook hands with 800 people, made a nice little speech, was cheered vociferously and appeared to enjoy himself immensely. The crowd gathered at the Baltimore & Ohio station numbered nearly 1,000, and it was demonstrative to a degree. Reports from along the route from Baltimore to Pittsburg tell of a succession of ovations at all places where the train stopped, Cumberland, Connellsville, West Newton and McKeesport vieing with each other in the heartiness of their receptions of the admiral.

OLYMPIA REHABILITATED.

Dewey's Old Flagship Thoroughly Refitted and Modernized.

Boston, Jan. 25.—The historic flagship of the Manila bay fight, the Olympia, will go into commission at the Charlestown navy yard to-day. Capt. Henry W. Lyon takes command. Wednesday, Feb. 12, has been designated as her sailing day from Boston, and her orders now read "for Lambert's Point, Va." After participating in the naval reception and escort to Prince Henry of Prussia, the Olympia will go south to become the flagship of Rear Admiral Francis K. Higginson, in the important work of the North Atlantic squadron in the West Indian and Central American waters. For twenty-four months the work of refitting, overhauling and modernizing the famous ship has been in progress at the navy yard, and a total of $400,000, about $100,000 less than originally estimated, has been expended in the task.

GEORGE DIXON DEFEATED.

Veteran Colored Pugilist Goes Down Under a Rain of Blows.

Baltimore, Jan. 25.—George Dixon, the veteran colored pugilist, went down and out last night under a rain of body blows delivered by Eddie Lenny. It was an excellent exhibition of sparring. Lenny had the better of the argument throughout. His blocking rendered it impossible for the colored man to land a telling blow, while Dixon proved to be shiftier than his old friends had expected and avoided many hard leads. In the ninth round Lenny landed several hard body blows. When the round was two-thirds over the men came to a clinch near the ropes and wrestled to the center of the ring. Dixon fell to the floor, striking his head and laying open his cheek. He attempted to rise but was advised by his seconds to take the count, and the decision was given to Lenny. Dixon was very groggy.

TO POISON ABE LINCOLN.

Man Who Was Offered $100,000 Bribe Is Dead.

Washington, Jan. 25.—James Alman, who yesterday died in Washington, according to his own story refused a bribe of $100,000 to put poison in cream which he served to President Lincoln. Mr. Alman in 1865 kept a dairy on a farm where the bureau of printing and engraving now stands, about half a mile south of the White House. He supplied milk and cream to the White House and Secretary Stanton. In an interview some months ago Mr. Alman said that early in April, 1865, he was driving his milk wagon toward the White House, two men stopped him and offered him $100,000 to put poison in the cream he was taking to the president. Mr. Alman replied that a roll as big as the treasury building would not tempt him to do such a deed.

MR. DALE SEEKS DIVORCE.

Would Sever Ties With Woman Who Was Suspected of Child-Murder.

Chicago, Jan. 25.—Harvey R. Dale, manager of the Chicago branch of the Union Mutual Life Insurance company, has filed a bill for divorce in the circuit court against his wife, Elizabeth Howe Dale. According to the bill Dale was married to Elizabeth Wheeler Howe at Buffalo, Jan. 4, 1896, and lived

DENMARK AGREES

TREATY FOR THE SALE OF THE DANISH WEST INDIES WILL BE SIGNED.

LONG TIME TO COMPLETE DEAL

RATIFICATIONS MUST BE EXCHANGED BEFORE IT IS SETTLED.

HAS STRING ON THE ISLANDS

DENMARK WILL CONSULT THE WISHES OF THE NATIVE ISLANDERS.

Washington, Jan. 25. — Constantine Brun, the Danish minister in Washington, yesterday received official notification from Copenhagen that his government had agreed to the terms of the treaty recently negotiated by Secretary Hay and Mr. Brun for the transfer of the Danish West Indian islands to the United States.

Mr. Brun went immediately to the state department with this important piece of information, and as Secretary Hay had left the department for the day he saw Mr. Hill, the assistant secretary of state, with whom he had a long talk. It is expected the treaty will be signed in a few days.

The treaty must first be approved by the senate, and then it will be necessary to secure an appropriation of the purchase price from both the senate and the house. A treaty does not become a perfected agreement until the "ratifications" have been exchanged, and as this does not usually take place until several months after confirmation by the senate, Denmark will have ample opportunity to ascertain the sentiment of her Antillian subjects before the time arrives for the final act that with her West Indian possessions. If the plebecite should show that a majority of the islanders were opposed to the transfer, Denmark could end the matter by declining to exchange the ratifications. By the treaty absolute sovereignty over the islands of St. Thomas, St. John and St. Croix, or St. Kitts, is transferred to the United States in consideration of the payment of a sum said to be about $4,000,000, which is $3,500,000 less than the amount named in the treaty negotiated by Secretary Seward more than thirty years ago. Denmark made a strong plea for a stipulation that there should be free trade between the islands and the United States, but Secretary Hay declined to accede to this for the reason that only congress has the right to make tariff arrangements. Denmark also wanted this government to agree to take over the inhabitants of the islands as full-fledged American citizens, but this could not be conceded, as congress has absolute authority in that connection. The inhabitants will, therefore, come under the protection of the United States with the same status as that possessed by the Porto Ricans, leaving to congress the determination of the question of how the islands shall be governed and the political standing of their people.

TREATY WITH DENMARK.

Those West Indian Islands Soon Will Belong to America.

Copenhagen, Jan. 25.—Yesterday authority to sign the Danish West Indies treaty was cabled to the Danish minister at Washington, C. Brun. It is expected that the treaty will be signed to-day. It is understood here that it will be immediately transmitted to the senate. Its prompt ratification is expected.

CONGRESS.

Effort to Shove a Schley Resolution Through the Senate Fails.

Washington, Jan. 24.—An effort was made in the senate yesterday by Mr. Mason of Illinois to obtain consideration for a joint resolution which he introduced, extending the thanks of congress to Winfield Scott Schley "for his brave and able conduct of the American fleet at the victorious battle of Santiago." The effort, however, was not successful. Mr. Mason's resolution, in addition to the thanks of congress, provided that Admiral Schley should be presented a sword, that bronze medals commemorative of the battle of Santiago should be distributed among the officers and men "under the command of Schley during said battle" and that $10,000 be appropriated to meet the expenses of the resolution. On motion of Mr. Hale the resolution was referred to the committee on naval affairs.

The resolution introduced by Mr. Teller providing for intervention on the part of this government in behalf of Gen. Scheepers, sentenced to death by the British South African authorities, was postponed indefinitely as Scheepers already has been executed.

The department of commerce bill was under consideration the greater part of the session but no definite progress was made.

In the House.

The consideration of the urgent deficiency bill, which has been under debate in the house since Monday, was completed yesterday, but owing to the lateness of the hour, passage of the bill was postponed until to-day. A successful effort was made to increase the pay of rural mail carriers from $500 to $600 per annum. Mr. Hill of Connecticut made the motion to increase the appropriation for this purpose. It was resisted by Mr. Cannon and Mr. Loud, chairman of the postoffice committee, on the ground that the method was irregular, but the members with rural constituencies supported it and it was adopted—109 to 78.

PRESENTS FROM THE PRINCE.

Americans Will Receive Mementoes of Henry's Visit.

Berlin, Jan. 25.—Admiral Prince Henry of Prussia yesterday selected at the court jeweler's about fifty presents for Americans with whom he will come especially in contact during his visit to the United States. The presents consist of gold and silver boxes, set with diamonds, and having the emperor's monogram on the top; gold and silver cups, gold and silver cigarette cases on which his majesty's autograph is traced in small diamonds, and small compasses encased in gold and silver boxes with "Hohenzollern" enameled on them, besides larger and more valuable gifts. A number of cuff links, brooches and scarf pins, with the initial "H" in diamonds, are also included among the presents. The latter are intended for less important persons. Official secrecy is maintained as to what the emperor and Prince Henry will present to the president, Rear Admiral Robley D. Evans and Miss Alice Roosevelt, although it is well known that his majesty will send Miss Roosevelt a jeweled bracelet and Prince Henry probably will offer the president a fine hunting gun, with interchangeable shot and rifle barrels, and its accompanying equipment.

APPEALS TO THE PRESIDENT.

Rough Rider Who Is West Writes to His Former Colonel.

Toledo, Ohio, Jan. 25—A letter appealing for assistance is speeding on its way to President Roosevelt on behalf of Edward Lentz, who served with "Teddy" through the war as a rough rider and was fighting next to "Ham" Fish when that young hero's life was spent. He was also a messmate of Fish. Lentz is suffering from rheumatism, the result of exposure during the war. He enlisted in Arizona and now has a family in Illinois. He is a fireman, but lately has been unable to do much work. He applied for a pension some time since, but no action has been taken. He has applied for admission into the Sandusky soldiers' home and his application is soon to be acted upon. The rough rider has confidence in his Hearing was then had on ditch petition of M. O. Harlow and others.

On motion carried unanimously the petition was accepted.

Commissioner Hanson offered the following resolution and moved its adoption.

Resolution appointing engineer in ditch proceedings.

In the matter of the petition of M. O. Harlow and others for a public ditch in the County of Red Lake, State of Minnesota.

State of Minnesota, }
County of Red Lake. } ss.

Whereas, a petition bearing date the 11th day of November, 1901, signed by M. O. Harlow and others praying for the establishment of a certain public ditch in said county, the route of which is more fully described in said petition and a proper bond accompanying the same, have been filed with the county Auditor of said county, as by law required;

And Whereas, It appears, by satisfactory proof to the Board of County Commissioners of Red Lake county, that due notice of the pendency of said petition, and the time and place at which the same would be heard, has been given as required by law.

Now, Therefore, We, the Board of County Commissioners of said county of Red Lake, at a regular session held this day, do hereby appoint W C. Smiley as a competent and experienced engineer to make an accurate survey of the line of said public ditch from its source to its outlet, as provided and specified in and by Chapter 258 of the general laws of 1901, and after completing his duties as such engineer to make and file his report with the County Auditor of said county, on or before the 10th day of February 1902.

Dated January 9th, 1902.

All He Knew About It.

"Here! Here!" said the rich old widower. "What are you doing?"

"I'm pinchin' your legs to see which of them's the wooden one," said little Willie.

"Boy," the old man testily replied, "you bother me. Run away. What do you mean by one of my legs being wooden? I haven't any wooden leg."

"Well, when Sister Fannie said the other night that she didn't want to marry you even with all your money mother told her not to be foolish, because you had one foot in the grave and wouldn't last long. So that's all I know about it."—Chicago Record-Herald.

A Nibble Game.

A funny game is to tie several crullers by long strings between the folding doors. Let the crullers hang so as to be opposite, or nearly so, the mouths of the boys and girls who are to engage in the contest. Upon a given signal the contestants stand in a line with hands tied behind their backs and nibble the crullers. The first who succeeds in eating all his, or hers without any portion falling upon the floor wins the prize.

How She Knew.

"Charley, dear," said young Mrs. Torkins, "why didn't you tell me you were going hunting yesterday? It would have relieved my mind ever so much, for I half suspected you were going to the races without taking me."

"How—er—how did you know I went hunting?"

"Because you were talking all night in your sleep about long shots."—Washington Star.

HUMOR OF THE HOUR

Notice to Burglars.

A certain Woodbridge street merchant who has been frequently a victim of safe blowers has adopted a novel and somewhat humorous plan of safeguarding his money vaults from depredations that might be contemplated by individuals of the burglarious fraternity. After his last dear experience he decided that a safe wasn't the "safest" place in the world for valuables, and he now makes a practice of promptly banking his profits and of taking whatever of value is in the safe at the close of the day's business home with him. He says the ambitious cracksman that should tackle his safe now o' nights would find "poor pickings." Posted over the front of the safe in black, conspicuous type is this sign: "Notice.—Please do not blow open the safe. Here is the key."

And, sure enough, the key to the safe hangs over the sign, being suspended from one of the hinges.—Detroit Free Press.

Hay Versus Oats.

"I see," said the truck horse as he looked over the top of his morning paper—"I see that the price of oats is going up."

"Well," said the sagacious old nag that drew the doctor's phaeton, "there is one sure thing, and that is they can't put hay into its place."

"And why not?" inquired the truck horse.

"Because it would go against the grain," replied the doctor's nag.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

The Proof.

Then the defiant militant spirit took possession of the devoted missionary.

"You think I'm a pudding!" he cried. "I'll show you I am not!"

"The proof of the pudding is in the eating," rejoined the savage darkly.—Detroit Free Press.

The Mysterious Box.

Once upon a time there was a very old couple living in a wood which was full of all kinds of wild animals. One morning the old man went to gather some wood in the forest, leaving his old wife at home.

A little before noon the good woman went to the creek to wash clothes, when, to her astonishment, she saw a fine, large peach floating upon the water directly in front of her. She picked it up, but did not eat it at once. She thought she would save it and share it with her dear old man at dinner, so she put it safely away in the cupboard.

At noon when her husband came home she cooked him a nice dinner. While they were sitting at the table she thought of the peach she had found in the creek and went to get it. When she opened the door of the cupboard, to her great surprise she saw a little baby coming out of the peach.

"Oh, wonderful! Oh, wonderful!" was all the old woman could say.

The old man, hearing the exclamation, immediately went to see what was the matter. He was as much astonished as his wife at the sight of the baby.

"It is very good, dear wife," said he, "for we have no child of our own, so we will take this one and bring it up as ours."

So she took the baby and wrapped it carefully and put it into a basket and placed it by the window.

In a few days the child grew so large that it was impossible to keep it in the basket, so she took a strong string and tied one end to the baby and the other to a millstone to keep it from getting away. But notwithstanding the child was so strong that it went about through the woods with the millstone and did a great deal of mischief.

In a few days the baby had grown to the size of a giant and worked with all a giant's strength helping the old man upon his little farm.

About this time the daughter of the Japanese king had been stolen by an oni (an imp) and carried far away to an iron castle on the oni's island, where she was imprisoned and tormented by fierce and ugly creatures.

The chief of the onis often tried to persuade her to marry him and become his queen, but she would not accept the oni's throne. But the oni persisted in wooing her and tried in many ways to make her consent.

When the old king, her father, heard of this wonderful child, who was so young and yet so very strong, he sent one of his servants to bid him come to his palace at once, so the child obeyed the king's order and went to the palace and was carried into the king's private chamber.

The king asked him if he would bring back his daughter from the Onlga Shuia. The peach child told him he would try to do it, as he did not feel at all afraid of the oni. Then the king promised him that if he should succeed he would give him his daughter's hand in marriage as a reward for his great service.

Early the next morning the peach child assembled all the warriors together that were to accompany him on his expedition to Onlga Shuia and made them a speech, and he promised to reward all that would serve the king's cause faithfully in the expedition against the oni. They were to have three rice biscuits apiece.

Then all agreed to obey the commands of the peach child, who at once assumed control of these loyal warriors, and the journey commenced.

When the whole army reached the Onlga Shuia all the onis made great preparation to give the peach boy's warriors battle.

Next morning both armies met on the great plains of the Onlga Shuia, where they fought a terrible battle until night put an end to the conflict. The fortunes of the day decided against the oni's party and an immense number was slaughtered, and their blood covered the plain.

Next morning, the peach child's army having completely routed the oni's hosts and captured the iron castle of their prince, after a diligent search in the castle they found the beautiful and lovely daughter of the king confined in a dark dungeon.

When the victorious army opened the oni's treasury, they found numerous precious things. Among them were two suits of winged dresses and a mysterious Japanese box.

The peach child and the king's daughter put on the winged dresses and flew back to the king's palace in a few minutes and told the king what had happened in the Onlga Shuia.

The old king was very much pleased and gave his daughter in marriage to the peach child, who after the old king's death ascended the Japanese throne.

The wonder of his age and reign was the mysterious box which was taken from the oni, out of which the king could obtain anything he wanted.—New York News.

Remarkable Memories.

There was a Corsican boy who could rehearse 40,000 words, whether sense or nonsense, as they were dictated and then repeat them in the reversed order without making a single mistake. A physician about sixty years ago could repeat the whole of "Paradise Lost" without making a single mistake, although he had not read it for twenty years. Euler, the great mathematician, when he became blind could repeat the whole of Virgil's "Æneid" and could remember the first line and last line of every page of the particular edition which he had been accustomed to read before he became blind.—Spare Moments.

ONLY A SLIP OF PAPER

Twelve years ago the firm of Wade, Scale & Co. of Chicago received an order from John Fox for 400 bags of sugar, each bag to weigh 100 pounds. The order was filled, the bill paid, and the transaction closed.

One day recently a man with a sombrero on strolled into the office of Wade, Scales & Co. He took the blank slip of paper offered him and wrote this on it:

Mr. Nobody, from Nowhere. This is my name until after our conversation.

"Give that to the boss," he said, "and tell him I think he'll be glad to see me."

Curiosity more than anything else led the staid and dignified Mr. Wade to allow this unconventional visitor a chance to get into his private office. Once there, Mr. Nobody said, "If I'll show you where there is $1,500 due this firm and easily collectable, $1,500 that you know nothing about, what will the information be worth to me?"

"I don't see how it's possible," said Mr. Wade, "that even with our great business there could be that large amount due us and we know nothing about it."

"Tell me what it's worth to me if my information is correct—and I'll prove to you by your own books inside of five minutes that it is correct—and then we'll proceed to business."

"Information that this firm is so foolish as not to know that an easy collectable $1,500 is due is worth $50 to any man who will prove it. Show me that we are such business idiots, and I'll give you $50 right out of my own pocket. More than that, if by the faintest chance what you say should prove true and we can collect the $1,500, I'll give you a third of it."

The sombreroed stranger went down into an inside pocket. "Go to your books Sept. 12, 1889," he said.

Mr. Wade went to his books. There, after the stranger had mentioned an invoice number, they found what in a nutshell was this: "Shipped to John Fox, Bicknell, Ariz., 400 bags of sugar of 100 pounds each—40,000 pounds."

"Now turn to your books of Jan. 14, 1890."

It did not take Mr. Wade and his bookkeeper more than a minute to find out that instead of sending a bill for 40,000 pounds of sugar to John Fox they had sent him a bill for 400 pounds, a bill which he had paid promptly. A receipt had been sent Mr. Fox and the transaction closed, and the error had never been discovered. There was due the firm of Wade & Scales from John Fox $1,500 and interest thereon for something like twelve years.

"You see," said the visitor, "I was Mr. Fox's bookkeeper for years and years. When the bill for 400 pounds of sugar came in, I said, 'I'll pay the bill as it stands, and if they ever send a bill for the remaining 3,600 pounds I'll pay that, too, but I guess we don't need to worry about the mistake.' The other day John Fox kicked me out of his employment for a trivial mistake—kicked me out penniless at that. What I am doing now you may consider a piece of revenge. So it is largely, but I also need money."

The westerner left the place with $50 in his pocket, and the next mail took a bill to John Fox for $1,500 plus the interest for twelve years. Actuated by curiosity to know how the man would explain the matter, Mr. Wade inclosed with the bill a query as to why, having received 40,000 pounds of sugar, Mr. Fox had sent on pay for only 400 pounds.

Within a week a check for the full amount of the bill and interest was received. John Fox was too good a business man not to know that he must pay instantly, but as far as his dishonesty was concerned this is what he said in his letter, the only bit of writing that appeared except the name and figures on the check:

I make it a point never to pay until bills are presented. You never sent the bill for the extra 3,600 pounds. JOHN FOX.

Was Fox a thief or simply commercially shrewd?

In the years that had passed John Fox had become a multimillionaire. Recently he wished to open a great establishment in Chicago. A real estate agent found him a finely located building near the heart of the business district. Fox came way on to look at it. He went to the agent's office and found him looking somewhat downcast, as a man might look who was out a fat commission.

"Mr. Fox," said the agent, "I was utterly dumfounded this morning when informed by the owners of the building selected for you that they would not let you have it under any circumstances. The owners are a firm of wholesale grocers. When I pressed them for a reason for refusing to let the property to you, the head of the firm handed me a slip of paper and said: 'I understand Mr. Fox is to come to see you today. When he asks you for our reason in declining to rent to him, simply give him this piece of paper.'"

John Fox held out his hand and received the slip of paper from the agent. He unfolded it. He saw that it was one of his own letterheads, and below the printing he read this, written in his own hand:

Wade, Scales & Co.:
Gentlemen—I make it a point never to pay until bills are presented. JOHN FOX.

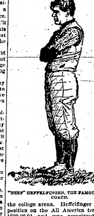
A Feathered Thief.

A Parisian actress who had for some time been suffering losses of jewelry determined to set a trap for the thief. So she left a diamond bracelet on her bureau, retired into an adjoining room and began to watch through the keyhole. Presently a starling hopped through the window, seized the bracelet and deposited it in the chimney, where all the missing jewelry was subsequently found.

The SPORTING WORLD

The coach is always one of the most important factors in developing a winning football team. In the college world large salaries are paid to players of fame for their services during the whole or part of the pigskin chasing season.

"Beef" Heffelfinger, now one of the coaches of the Yale eleven, is one of the best judges of gridiron play in the country. He is looked up to as a sort of demigod by this year's New Haven team, and whatever "Beef" says "goes." Heffelfinger was a guard at Yale in 1889-90-91. During those three years he was the best man in the position in the college arena. Heffelfinger held a position on the All America teams of 1889-90-91 and was associated with such famous players as Gill, Stagg, McClung, Hartwell and Hinkey of Yale, Channing, Ames, Riggs, Homans and King of Princeton, Lee, Hallowell, Newell and Lake of Harvard and Adams of the University of Pennsylvania.



"BEEF" HEFFELFINGER, THE FAMOUS YALE COACH.

Heffelfinger gives his attention especially to the line men. He is peculiarly fitted to instruct the center men in the possibilities of their positions, and to his efforts are due the extremely creditable performances of the Eli guards and center during the season now closing.

Auto Racing Records.

The breaking of automobile records is getting to be an almost daily occurrence, and the minimum time in which a high geared, many horsepower machine can circle a mile track seems to be still unfixed. Within a month the record has been lowered several times, and a machine now that cannot whirl the distance in at least a minute and a quarter need not hope to win in the race. The contests for lower record have been intensified by the international element entering into the sport by the hot rivalry between French and American makers. Until recently it was necessary in order to get a really fast machine to go to the foreign makers.

The two chauffeurs who have been most prominent in the automobile world lately are A. C. Bostwick, the young millionaire sportsman, who is one of the vice presidents of the Automobile Club of America, and Henri Fournier, the well known French chauffeur, who won the long distance race from Paris to Berlin this year and who has won many competitions on this side of the water. Fournier was the mentor of William K. Vanderbilt, Jr., in the sport, and Vanderbilt has been his companion in some of his most sensational rides.

World's Turf Bodies Agree.

That an agreement between the leading horse racing bodies of England and the United States of America will be made, whereby the authorities of the turf will have control of all racing affairs, has been settled beyond the shadow of a doubt by the recent statement made by August Belmont, one of the organizers of the Jockey Club of America and for several terms president of that organization.

Mr. Belmont is now in England and has had important conferences with the authorities of the English turf. He also visited France, where he talked with the leading men in French racing affairs and, as was stated afterward by French turf writers, induced the French Jockey club to agree to an arrangement whereby the relations between the French and the American turf shall be reciprocal.

Mr. Belmont saw the English turf authorities on the same matter and from all reports obtained an agreement on the subject. When seen, he declined to talk further than to state that he had discussed turf affairs with the officials of both the English and the French turf and that they had displayed the most friendly spirit toward the Jockey Club of the United States.

Fiercest Baseball War.

President Watkins of Indianapolis has been through several baseball wars, but he thinks the present struggle the fiercest he has ever known. He is astounded at the prices the American league people are paying the National league stars they have claimed to have under contract.

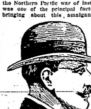
Trotting Board of Appeals.

The next regular meeting of the board of appeals of the American Trotting association will be held at the Auditorium hotel, Chicago, Tuesday, Dec. 3, at 10 a. m.

PEOPLE OF THE DAY

In the Big Railway Deal.

The largest railway deal ever made or even attempted has been consummated under the title of the Northern Securities company. In the combination are the vast properties of the Union Pacific, Southern Pacific, Northern Pacific, Great Northern, Chicago and Northwestern, Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Pau, and the Burlington, making a total of over 47,000 mileage. E. H. Harriman, who was a prominent figure in the Northern Pacific war of last May, was one of the principal factors in bringing about this amalgamation.



E. H. HARRIMAN.

Among others interested in this greatest of railway transactions were J. P. Morgan, J. J. Hill, James M. Stillman, W. K. Vanderbilt and John D. Rockefeller.

Russell Sage says this latest move of the railway kings is a menace to the country, because it means the destruction of competition in railway transportation.

The Oldest Living General.

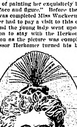
After the Duke of Luxemburg, the Grand Duke of Mecklenburg-Strelitz—a brother-in-law of the Duke of Cambridge—who recently celebrated the sixtieth anniversary of his enrollment in the Prussian army, is now the oldest living general. He is, moreover, the third oldest sovereign in Europe, the Duke of Luxemburg being the oldest and King Christian the second oldest. He was eighty-two on the 17th of October and has for many years been totally blind. He is a great favorite of King Edward and spent some time at Homburg with him last month.

Oldest Man.

James Farrell of Barboursville, W. Va., recently celebrated the one hundred and fifth anniversary of his birth. He is now probably the oldest man in the United States. Mr. Farrell served in the war of 1812 and later was in Mexico, under Jefferson Davis. When the war between the states broke out, he enlisted, although no longer a young man, and saw four years of service. He was probably the oldest veteran to offer his services to the government when the Spanish war broke out.

A Defamed American.

Considerable interest is taken both in England and the United States over the trouble that has arisen between an American girl and an English artist. Miss Vanderbilt Wackerman, a beautiful New York woman, has resided abroad several years in company with her mother. The young lady has been painted by several famous European artists, and not long ago Professor Herkomer, the well known London artist, solicited "the honor of painting her exquisitely beautiful face and figure." Before the picture was completed Miss Wackerman's mother had to pay a visit to this country, and the young lady went upon invitation to stay with the Herkomers. As soon as the picture was completed Professor Herkomer turned his beautiful model from his door under circumstances and with words that constituted a serious reflection upon the young lady's character. No specific charges were made, and those who know Miss Wackerman became very indignant at what they call the defamation of her character. Worry over the cruel insinuations made against her by the artist has unbalanced the mind of Miss Wackerman, and she has been committed to a London hospital for the insane.



MISS VANDERBILT WACKERMAN.

What steps will be taken by the parents and friends of the injured young lady to bring Professor Herkomer to account for his unjust and uncalled for attack remains to be seen.

GEN. CHAFFEE IS DEALING OUT JUSTICE WITH A STERN HAND.

FILIPINO MURDERERS MUST HANG

TEN NATIVES ARE TRIED BEFORE THE MILITARY COMMISSION.

DEATH FOR ALMOST ALL OF THEM

IN EVERY CASE EXCEPT ONE THE PERSON MURDERED WAS A NATIVE.

Washington, Jan. 28.—Maj. Gen. Chaffee is dealing out justice with a stern hand to natives of the Philippines who have been indulging in murder and pillage under the pretense of fighting for independence.

The official mail from Manila just received by the war department contains the orders in ten cases of natives tried before military commissions for murder. In every case except one the person murdered was a native. The one exception was that of an American soldier whose body, strangely enough, could not be identified by the military authorities. Nearly all the accused were sentenced to death and in a majority of cases the sentences were approved by Gen. Chaffee. In a case where the native convicted was sentenced to twenty years' imprisonment, Gen. Chaffee expressed the opinion that the sentence was inadequate.

One of the natives tried, Augustin to their death as the result of an explos- Ilocos, Luzon, was a leader of the Filipino secret society known as the Sandataban. He was charged with killing Antonio Abaya, who was supposed to be an American spy. On the witness stand Aguilar gave as a reason for the murder that the community wanted to get rid of Abaya because he had "a bad sickness." Aguilar's sentence was death, but Gen. Chaffee commuted it to imprisonment for life.

AN ENGINE RUNS AWAY.

Gets Beyond Control and Is Badly Wrecked.

Spring Valley, Minn., Jan. 28.—An accident on the Milwaukee road about five miles east of this city occurred about 1 o'clock yesterday morning. An engine of a west-bound extra freight had to run to this place for water, and in returning the engine got beyond control and crashed into its train. The engineer reversed and told all to jump. The four persons in the cab made the leap safely, except the engineer and Frank Deyo of this place, who were injured. The engine, being reversed, started rapidly ahead. Engineer Knudson managed to crawl on again, but a wild ride of over two miles was made before the engine could be stopped. The engine and one car were badly wrecked.

TWO LOUISIANA NEGROES LYNCHED

They Kill a Police Juror Who Had Caught Them in the Act of Killing His Hogs.

New Orleans, Jan. 28.—Two negroes were lynched in a distant portion of West Carroll parish, La., Saturday night for the murder of G. N. Grant, police judge from Floyd. Mr. Grant, while out hunting with a friend named McKay, came upon some negroes who had killed and were cleaning hogs. Mr. Grant found that they were his own hogs, and attempted to arrest the negroes, when one of them fired at him, blowing out his brains. McKay aroused the whites in the neighborhood with news of the murder. A posse was hastily formed and three of the negroes were captured and two of them lynched at once.

FROZEN TO DEATH.

Boy Loses His Life in a Blizzard in Oregon.

Huntington, Or., Jan. 28.—Grover F. Locke, aged thirteen, son of S. Locke, a stockman and broker of Huntington, was frozen to death in the blizzard.

The boy started for his father's ranch, twelve miles distant. When near the summit of a range of mountains his horse refused to face the storm and young Locke started to travel the remaining distance on foot. He had gone only a short distance when he fell face downward in the snow. His body was found in this position by a searching party.

ISLAND IS TERRORIZED.

Bolomen Under Fanatical Leader Cause Trouble in Negros.

Manila, Jan. 28.—Col. Charles W. Miner of the Sixth infantry reports the conditions on the island of Negros to be unsatisfactory, and that 400 bolomen and 40 men armed with rifles, under the command of the fanatical bandit leader, Papaisio, are terrorizing the people.

Cattle in Good Condition.

Sturgis, S. D., Jan. 28.—S. G. Sheffield, one of the prominent cattlemen of this place, has returned from the Moreau country and reports very little snow north of the Belle Fourche river. Cattle are looking better than in years.

Boer General Captured.

London, Jan. 28.—A report sent by Lord Kitchener, in Johannesburg, tells of the important capture of Gen. B. Viljoen, in the neighborhood of Lydenburg, as well as the captures of small parties of Boers elsewhere.

Several Buildings Destroyed.

New York, Jan. 28.—Fire at Montclair, N. J., yesterday destroyed several buildings in the business section. Other buildings were badly damaged. The loss is estimated at from $90,000 to $100,000 and the insurance at two-thirds that amount.

Increase of Billions.

Washington, Jan. 28.—According to statistics collected by the census bureau the gross value of the products of manufacture in the United States in 1900 was $13,003,127,687, and increase of 38.73 per cent over 1890.

STORM'S DISASTROUS WORK.

Heavy Losses Among Cattle in Parts of Nebraska.

Omaha, Jan. 28.—Predictions made as to the probable disastrous effects of the blizzard which raged all day Saturday and yesterday were partially verified in reports received here yesterday and last night from points in Nebraska. A remarkable condition exists in the vicinity of Ogalalla, where the storm was more severe than in any other portion of the state, except in the northwest quarter. It was expected that the losses among cattle in that district would be enormous, but authentic reports received from several points in the cattle district affirm that actually no loss was sustained, the cattle finding necessary shelter. Reports from the northwestern portion of the state are not so flattering, however, while those from Kimball and Banner counties, the farthermost counties on the west side of the state, indicate that heavy losses have occurred.

IN THE NORTHWEST.

Subzero Weather With Snow and a Strong Wind.

Sioux Falls, S. D., Jan. 28.—Yesterday was the coldest experienced here for many weeks. Thermometers this morning registered 15 below. The storm, with blizzardly aspects, which prevailed yesterday and last night, has ceased. Several inches of snow fell throughout the section.

Plainfield, Wis., Jan. 27.—The worst snowstorm of the season prevailed steadily all day over Central Wisconsin. Several inches of snow has fallen.

La Crosse, Wis., Jan. 27.—The heaviest snowstorm of the season fell yesterday. The thermometer is falling rapidly. The mercury is now 10 below and still falling.

IOWA MINE DISASTER.

Explosion Caused by a Shot Fired by a Miner Who Is Among Those Killed.

Oskaloosa, Iowa, Jan. 28.—An inquest was held over the remains of twenty miners who were killed in the dust explosion at the Lost Creek coal mine Friday afternoon. A verdict was rendered to the effect that the men came to their death as the result of an explosion caused by a shot fired by a miner named Andy Pesh, who was among the killed. The mine was examined by the state inspector, who said the mine was in as good condition as any in the state at the last examination. Funeral services of the victims are being conducted by the Lost Creek company. The list of the dead now numbers twenty-two. Oliver Mable died yesterday afternoon. He had his arm broken and was terribly burned about the face and head.

BOERS JOINING BRITISH ARMY.

Gen. Vilonel Notifies Steyn That a Force of 1,500 Will Fight Against Old Comrades.

Pretoria, Jan. 28.—Lord Kitchener has authorized Gen. Vilonel, a surrendered burgher, to raise an additional Boer corps of 1,500 men. Gen. Vilonel has written a letter to ex-President Steyn, warning the latter of his intention to form such a corps and adding that the Boers in the concentration camps are tired of the useless struggle and are determined to help the British end it.

WOMAN DYING FROM SNEEZING.

Miss Sarah Mackey of Taylorville, Ill., Weakening Under the Strain.

Taylorville, Ill., Jan. 28.—Miss Sarah Mackey, who has been sneezing almost constantly during the last ten days, broke all previous records when she sneezed 700 times in an hour and a quarter by actual count. She is beginning to show great weakness, but all efforts by the physicians to stop the sneezing have proved unavailing.

BATTLE IN COLOMBIA.

More Than Four Hundred Men Are Killed.

Colon, Jan. 28.—A battle was fought between the government troops and insurgents about forty miles from Bogota, in which the insurgents were routed. Three hundred and fifty of the insurgents and 10 0one the government troops were killed. The number of wounded is not given.

Dose of Poison.

Huron, S. D., Jan. 28.—L. P. Jones, formerly agent for the Northwestern railway at Redfield, suicided at that place, taking a dose of poison. Jones had been discharged from the employ of the company for an alleged shortage, and at the time of his death was running a bucket shop at Redfield without a license. He had been arrested by the government officials and placed under bonds for appearance at the next term of United States court.

Creamery Prosperous.

Cokato, Minn., Jan. 28.—The Cokato Creamery company held its annual meeting and elected as president J. N. Love; secretary, Gustaf P. Olson; treasurer, Jacob Ojanpera. From the secretary's reports there appears to have been delivered at the creamery the past year 3,825,702 pounds of milk and 74,676 pounds of cream; total butter made, 196,113 pounds; paid to patrons and expense, $39,418.70, received for butter, etc., $38,845.65. Few creameries in this state can show any better report.

Storm Did Much Damage.

Port Townsend, Wash., Jan. 28.—The first boat from down the straits for two days arrived yesterday and reports Friday's storm as doing much damage at small towns and to farms. At Port Angeles a boathouse was carried away, and one or two small wharves were wrecked. G. M. Lauridzen lost much property and in an effort to save his goods had both legs broken. The Port Angeles water supply is cut off on account of the waterworks being frozen.

Fitz Brings Suit.

New York, Jan. 28.—Robert Fitzsimmons has instituted a suit for $50,000 damages against Percy Williams, owner of the Orpheum theater, for injuries sustained in falling down a flight of steps leading from the lobby of the theater to the rathskeller.

Gift to Cooper Union.

New York, Jan. 29.—Andrew Carnegie has, within the last few days, given $300,000 to Cooper Union. This is Mr. Carnegie's second gift to the institution, the first one being of a like amount, says the Evening Post.

LOW SLAPS BACK

MAYOR OF GREATER NEW YORK WRITES A VERY VIGOROUS LETTER.

REPLIES TO REV. PARKHURST

SHOWS WHAT AN UNDERTAKING IT IS TO ENFORCE EVERY LAW.

QUIET AND ORDERLY SUNDAYS

MORE PERFECTLY SECURED THAN FOR FOUR YEARS PAST.

New York, Jan. 23.—Mayor Low to-day replied in part as follows to the demand made upon him by the Rev. Parkhurst and Thaddeus D. Kenneson, as president and secretary of the Society for the Prevention of Crime, for the enforcement of the Sunday closing law:

"Your letter of Jan. 17 is at hand. Brushing aside all minor questions, it alleges, in effect, that no attempt has been made since Jan. 1 to enforce the excise law so far as it relates to Sunday selling; it admits that the law is 'quite likely unenforceable,' and yet it argues that the foundations of civic morality are threatened because it is not enforced.

Not a Dead Letter.

"I think it will clear the air if we try to arrive at some common meaning for the word 'enforced' for, as you use it, you give the impression that the law is treated by the administration as a dead letter.

"This is very far from being the case. By virtue of this law the public sale of liquor has been stopped and a peaceable and orderly Sunday has been already more perfectly secured, since the first of January as I judge from the public press, than certainly at any time for four years past. Because, however, it may have been possible, as you imply, to buy liquor in many saloons behind closed doors on Sunday, it pleases you to say, in effect, that the law is treated by the administration as though it did not exist.

Parkhurst Quoted.

"Coming from any one less familiar with the problem than yourselves, this assumption would suggest one of the easy and sweeping inferences often made by those who speak without knowledge. Read, however, in the light of the interview of the honored president of your society, which appeared on the 20th instant, it bears a very different aspect. In that interview Dr. Parkhurst said:

"'It impresses me that the present excise law will be exceedingly hard to enforce. Roosevelt bent all his wonderful energy to attain this end, and we had three dry Sundays as a result. That does not seem to predict success for any effort the present administration may make. The whole police force was used in carrying out Roosevelt's determination and there was practically an open field for the perpetration of other crimes.'

"To sum up: The attitude of this administration toward the excise law can be clearly defined. It will continue to enforce the excise law as one of the general body of laws which it is called upon to enforce, in the best manner practicable with the means at its disposal."

HOBSON WILL RETIRE.

Hero of the Merrimac Will Enter the Political Arena.

Washington, Jan. 23.—Capt. Richmond P. Hobson, the naval constructor who sank the Merrimac in the mouth of the Santiago harbor, appeared to-day before the retiring board at the Washington navy yard. He will receive a pension of $3,000 annually for the remainder of his life if his application meets the approval of President Roosevelt.

Capt. Hobson's application for retirement is the preliminary, it is believed, to his entrance into politics. He himself declines to discuss his political aspirations, but his friends don't doubt that if his district in Alabama desires to send him to congress he will be willing to accept the nomination.

The district is now represented by Mr. Bankhead, one of the leaders of the minority in the house. Mr. Bankhead is an astute politician and has no intention of relinquishing his position. To secure even the nomination Capt. Hobson will have a hard fight on his hands.

YOUNG BOY DRUNKARD.

Sad Case of Mistaken Greediness Comes Up in a New York Police Court.

New York, Jan. 23.—John Conaty, ten years old, of 546 West Forty-sixth street was arraigned to-day in the West side police court, charged with intoxication.

Policeman Murtha of the West Forty-seventh street station picked him up late on Wednesday night at Ninth avenue and Forty-seventh street. The little fellow was so helpless by drink that he had to be taken to Roosevelt hospital.

The boy told the court to-day that he had stolen several bottles of beer from a grocery store and drank too much of it. Magistrate Dial sent the boy to the children's society.

PEACE PROPOSALS FROM BOERS.

Were Presented to Lord Rosebery by a Boer Delegate.

London, Jan. 24.—It is rumored in the lobbies of the house of commons that a Boer delegate from Acting President Schalkburger last June saw Lord Rosebery and submitted peace proposals to him. Lord Rosebery acquainted Lord Salisbury, the premier, with this fact, but, according to the rumor, the cabinet declined to consider the matter on the ground that the war was coming to an end with the unconditional surrender of the Boers.

OPPOSE CONSOLIDATION.

Maryland Proposes to Prevent Consolidation of Competing Lines.

Annapolis, Md., Jan. 24.—A bill was introduced in the house of delegates which, if passed, will effectually prevent the purchase of the Western Maryland railway by any corporation controlling a railroad in this state competing with the Western Maryland.

Elected by Export Lumbermen.

Cincinnati, Jan. 23.—The National Lumber Exporters' association to-day adjourned to meet next January in New Orleans. The following officers were elected: President, Ernest M. Price, New York; treasurer, Richard W. Price, Baltimore; general counsel, John J. McKelvey, New York; secretary and treasurer, Elliott Lang, Memphis. Resolutions were adopted making exporters of packing house products, linseed, cottonwood machinery, grain, dairy and other products eligible to membership.

INDIAN OUTBREAK FEARED.

Reds Will Not Submit Tamely to the Hair-Cutting Process.

La Crosse, Wis., Jan. 23.—It is feared there will be an Indian outbreak in this vicinity should the government order compelling Indians to abolish their old customs of wearing long hair and blankets and painting their faces be enforced. Chief White Eagle of the Winnebago camp opposite this city declares these are sacred privileges and that they will protect their customs by the shedding of blood if necessary.

PAPERS WERE DEFECTIVE.

E. Le Roy Miller, Wanted in Iowa, Released on Habeas Corpus.

Fargo, N. D., Jan. 23.—Judge Pollock granted a writ of habeas corpus and ordered the release of E. Le Roy Miller, arrested on complaint of Iowa authorities charging larceny. Defective papers were the cause of the issuance of the writ. Miller was in a partnership kinetoscope deal and says he left the machine in Iowa as so many dates had to be canceled on account of smallpox.

CAUGHT IN NEW ORLEANS.

Sheldon of West Superior Is Arrested and Held.

New Orleans, Jan. 23.—Nathaiel A. Sheldon of West Superior, Wis., is under arrest here on the charge of forgery. The man was apprehended on the request from Sheriff Sommer of West Superior. Sheldon has been traveling under the name of J. S. Sloan and he is charged with having embezzled a lot of railroad tickets and also with forgery. When arrested he admitted his identity. Sheriff Somer will send a deputy to take the prisoner back to Wisconsin.

MONTANA'S CAPITOL FINISHED.

Building Turned Over to the Commission.

Helena, Mont., Jan. 23.—Montana's new state house was formally turned over to the commission by H. L. Frank, president of the Montana Building company, and the contract was approved by the commission. The commission decided to dedicate the building on July 4, which is just three years after the corner stone was laid by the Masonic grand lodge.

IRISH FUNDS LOW.

Forcing the Retirement of Nationalist Members of Parliament.

Dublin, Jan. 23.—The recent and prospective retirements of Nationalist members of the house of commons are attributed in some quarters to the depleted condition of the Nationalist treasury. It is said that the parliamentary fund for 1902 thus far totals only £1,100, over half of which amount came from the United States.

RESPITE GRANTED.

Gov. Toole of Montana Postpones a Hanging.

Helena, Mont., Jan. 23.—Gov. Toole yesterday respited William Hardie, under sentence of death at Glasgow for the murder of a companion in Valley county four months ago. He was to have been hung Jan. 24, but was given a respite until March 10 in order that he may perfect his appeal.

SCALDED AND BURNED.

Iowa Five-Year-Old Falls Into a Kettle of Boiling Feed.

Marshalltown, Iowa, Jan. 23.—The five-year-old son of Charles Robinson at Dougherty, fell head first into a kettle of boiling feed and was so badly burned that he died a few hours afterward. The father was cooking feed in a large kettle out doors.

Talks to Farmers.

Montevideo, Minn., Jan. 23.—A farmers' institute opened here for a two-day session with the usual corps of instructors. Nearly 300 farmers and others attended the opening session. The talks given on clover, grasses and soils were listened to with much interest, and the failure of clover to grow successfully in this vicinity was so carefully explained that many farmers who had practically abandoned this important crop intend to make a new attempt to grow the same.

Refused to Prosecute.

Jamestown, N. D., Jan. 23.—Judge Glaspell is holding a term of court at Fessenden. The case against Buttz, the aged Wells county farmer who shot Caplis, a Bowdon saloonkeeper in the head, has been dropped. Caplis recovered, and, admitting that he was wrong in the quarrel, refused to prosecute.

Modern Antiquities.

Janesville, Wis., Jan. 23.—A report has reached here that an old man and his son have been engaged on their farm near this city manufacturing Indian war relics which were supposed to have been made by the Wisconsin Indians in past ages. These supposed relics have brought fancy prices.

Reform in Yankton.

Yankton, S. D., Jan. 23.—Gambling is entirely closed in Yankton. Mayor Powers and Marshal Pierson served notice on every house yesterday to close and remain closed. All slot machines were also taken out.

Struck by a Big Rock.

Lead, S. D., Jan. 23.—Frank Hartin, a miner employed in the Wasp No. 2 mine on Yellow creek, was struck in the fact by a heavy rock, fracturing his frontal bone. He is in a critical condition.

Rush for Land.

Pierre, S. D., Jan. 23.—The present fine weather is bringing many people into this country to take advantage of the free government land. The long-expected rush for these lands is now on.

H. P. Graham Stricken.

Eau Claire, Wis., Jan. 23.—H. P. Graham, aged 82, has been stricken by paralysis. There is grave doubt of his recovery. He was the first mayor of Eau Claire and is president of the Phoenix Manufacturing company.

Child Drinks Carbolic Acid.

St. Paul, Jan. 23.—The four-year-old daughter of Morris Sandin of 545 Fairview avenue, Merriam Park, got hold of a carbolic acid bottle last evening. She drank nearly an ounce of the acid and is not expected to live.

HILL IS QUIZZED

MAGNATE TESTIFIES BEFORE THE INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION.

ON THE STAND OVER THREE HOURS

DECLARES THAT COMPETITION DOES NOT LOWER TRAFFIC RATES.

TELLS ALL ABOUT THE MERGER

GIVES REASON MORE SIMPLE THAN HAS BEEN CONJECTURED.

Chicago, Jan. 26.—James J. Hill, president of the Northern Securities company and president of the Great Northern Railway company, testified for three and a quarter hours before the interstate commerce commission here yesterday. In answer to questions tending to show the effect of the community of interests plan on rates, the veteran railroad man declared that competition does not lower rates, but on the contrary, he believed that it advanced them. He declared that in the Northwest, where for twenty years the Northern Pacific and Great Northern have been at peace, where one road has agreed with the other on rates and maintained the agreements, rates were lower than in any other part of the country.

In regard to the purchase of the Burlington by the Northern Pacific and Great Northern, Mr. Hill declared that the purchase was a and was not due to "a movement in line with the trust idea." He testified to the formation of the Northern Securities company, and in doing so, gave a reason far more simple than has generally been conjectured.

"There are some old men—some very old men—interested in the management of the Great Northern," said he. "Two of them are over eighty and several over seventy years. They wanted to form a close corporation into which they could confide their interests with the assurance that the road would be managed along the lines which have made it a success. It was to have taken over one-third of the stock of the road. The plan seemed to be a good one, and then it was proposed to let all the stockholders in—not alone the few owners of the one-third—but all of them. The plan and then it broadened into the idea of taking in the Northern Pacific also. The roads had worked in harmony for twenty years and the change in the holder of securities would make no difference. It can make no difference and will make no difference."

Met With Approval

Mr. Hill talked vigorously and earnestly. At the close of the session, when Chairman Knapp offered to allow Mr. Hill to leave for New York if the latter felt that staying in Chicago would inconvenience him seriously, Mr. Hill declared that his time belonged to the commission, and that he desired in every way to aid them to the extent of his ability. Chairman Knapp thereupon said that Mr. Hill would be again called to the stand to-day.

SCHEME OF STEAMSHIP COMPANIES

There Will Not Be a Merger, but Instead a Combination to Control the Rates.

New York, Jan. 26.—The White Star steamer Celtic arrived yesterday from Liverpool and Queenstown. Among her passengers were a number of English shipping men whose mission, it was rumored, was to form a combine of transatlantic passenger and freight lines. There was a general denial that a merger was in prospect. It was intimated, however, that the various lines mentioned in connection with the proposed consolidation will propose the policy of uniform traffic rates. In this manner it is hoped to increase the annual earnings of the various companies, at the same time permitting them to retain their individuality.

TRAMPS SEIZE A TRAIN.

But They Will Pay for Their Fun by Serving 150 Days in Jail.

Pueblo, Colo., Jan. 26.—Four armed tramps took possession of an east-bound Denver & Rio Grande freight train yesterday five miles east of Florence, drove the brakeman into the caboose and held the train by force until the Pueblo water works, three and a half miles west of this city, were reached. Pueblo policemen who had been notified by the railroad authorities of the seizure of the train, captured the gang. They were sentenced by the police court to serve 150 days each in jail for vagrancy and will be prosecuted later on graver charges.

BLACKLIST IS SUSTAINED.

Ohio Supreme Court Renders Its Decision.

Columbus, Ohio, Jan. 26.—The syllabus of the supreme court's decision in the case of the Nickel Plate Railway vs. Frank Shaeffer, on appeal from the circuit court of Huron county, involving the "blacklist," which was given but yesterday, sustains the railroad company. Shaeffer was discharged by the railway company for participating in a strike. He claimed that he could not secure employment on any other road because the company refused to give him a certificate of service, and he sued for damages.

Killed by Falling From Bucket.

Calumet, Mich., Jan. 26.—Joseph Plese, a miner employed at the Tamarack mine, was killed by falling from a bucket. Plese was in the bucket with several other miners while it was ascending, when a shover caught in the timbering, throwing him out.

Found a Pearl Worth $250.

La Crosse, Wis., Jan. 26.—George Holshammer brought to this city a pearl valued by local jewelers at $250, found by winter clam fishers, who get them through the ice.

ROOSEVELT TO INVESTIGATE.

Personal Action on the Appeal of Admiral Schley.

Washington, Jan. 25.—A conference concerning the appeal of Rear Admiral Schley from the conclusions of the court of inquiry was held at the White House yesterday between President Roosevelt, Secretary Long and E. P. Hanna, solicitor of the judge advocate of the Schley court. The utmost reticence in regard to the nature of the conference is shown by those who know what passed at the White House, but it is learned that the president made many inquiries and indicated an intention to investigate personally the contentions made in the appeal. He will do the work carefully and no executive action may be expected for a long time.

VICTORY FOR BOERS.

Over a Score of Yeomen Surrendered to Superior Force.

Pretoria, Jan. 25.—A party of imperial yeomanry who were protecting native grass cutters at Linriquespruit were attacked by 150 Boers and forced to surrender. The Boers lost six killed and four wounded. The British casualties were one killed and seven wounded. Four natives were killed.

COUNTRYMAN IS GRAND MASTER.

Appleton Man Chosen by the Masonic Grand Lodge.

St. Paul, Jan. 25.—The Minnesota grand lodge of Masons closed its annual session yesterday and elected the following officers: Grand master, A. D. Countryman, Appleton; deputy grand master, Henry R. Adams, Minneapolis; senior grand warden, William A. McGonagle, Duluth; junior grand warden, Enoch Scott, Winona; grand treasurer, D. W. Knowlton, Minneapolis; grand secretary, Thomas Montgomery, St. Paul.

"PA" GRAFF RETIRES.

He Has Supplied Soda Water to Fifteen Generations of Students.

Iowa City, Iowa, Jan. 25.—W. H. Graff, proprietor of the favorite soda water stand of the University of Iowa students, has retired from business after over thirty years spent following the bowl and pestle. He was known to fifteen generations of Iowa students as "Pa" Graff. During his long period of service in his drug store he was never away from it for a day, save for a three-day vacation taken almost on compulsion.

FIRE AT KALISPELL.

Ten Thousand Dollar Loss in Montana City.

Kalispell, Mont., Jan. 25.—Fire yesterday morning destroyed the millinery store of Mrs. L. E. Thompson on Main street. The flames then spread to the adjoining buildings, burning over four lots on Main street and doing damage to property valued at $10,000. There was $2,000 insurance. It is thought to have been the work of incendiaries, and officers are working on the case.

MINERS' WAGES REDUCED.

Copper Companies Will Cut 10 Per Cent From Employes.

Houghton, Mich., Jan. 25.—Lake Superior copper mining companies will reduce wages probably about March 1. The cut will likely be 10 per cent. These steps are rendered necessary by the drop in copper, which will reduce the value of the Houghton county production $10,000,000 to $12,000,000 this year, on the basis of the present market price.

HIS RIGHT TO KILL.

Contention of a Sioux Falls Man Charged With Murder.

Sioux City, Iowa, Jan. 25.—The grand jury in Sioux county has found an indictment against F. W. Reynolds of Sioux Falls, S. D., charging him with the murder of Rev. Samuel Crofton, a negro preacher, near Ireton, Iowa, last August. Reynolds has engaged counsel and will make a strong fight to prove justification.

Had Possession of Another's Horse.

Fargo, N. D., Jan. 25.—William Hawthorne, who has been foreman of the ranch of Adolph Hans, near Sheldon, was arrested here on the charge of stealing a horse and buggy. The horse belonged to his former employer, and some of the other stuff in his possession was the property of a Leonard liveryman. Just before his arrest he endeavored to sell the horse to a deputy sheriff who impersonated a buyer.

Wolves Are Bold.

Minot, N. D., Jan. 25.—Reports of the ravages done by wolves continue to be most alarming. In many cases large numbers of the prowlers invade corrals and kill calves and young cattle. In many instances large numbers of wolves approach wayfarers, though none have yet been bold enough to do injury. A systematic effort will be made by cattlemen and farmers to exterminate the breed.

New Court House at Parker.

Parker, S. D., Jan. 25.—The commissioners have decided on the general outline of the new court house. The building will be 56x96 feet in size, the first story to be of stone and the second story of brick. The plans include court room, county offices, jail, etc. The building will cost $30,000. Of this amount Parker contributes $10,000 in cash.

Pass Primary Election.

Fergus Falls, Minn., Jan. 25.—This city will not have a primary election this spring. The county attorney holds that Wednesday was the last day for filing applications for places on the primary ballots, and no one has filed. The candidates will all go on by petition as independents, and the expense of holding primaries will thus be saved.

Iowan Convicted of Bigamy.

Sioux City, Iowa, Jan. 25.—John Kelly was convicted at Sidney of bigamy. His real wife lives here. His supposed spouse, is Isora Carter, and the two have been living at Hamburg. He tried to prove he was not Kelly.

Schools Close at Brownsville.

La Crosse, Wis., Jan. 25.—The schools at Brownsville have closed on account of smallpox. It has just been found that Miss Maggie Hackett had the disease and the whole town has been exposed.

ONLY A SLIP OF PAPER

Twelve years ago the firm of Wade, Scale & Co. of Chicago received an order from John Fox for 400 bags of sugar, each bag to weigh 100 pounds. The order was filled, the bill paid, and the transaction closed.

One day recently a man with a sombrero on strolled into the office of Wade, Scales & Co. He took the blank slip of paper offered him and wrote this on it:

Mr. Nobody, from Nowhere. This is my name until after our conversation.

"Give that to the boss," he said, "and tell him I think he'll be glad to see me."

Curiosity more than anything else led the staid and dignified Mr. Wade to allow this unconventional visitor a chance to get into his private office. Once there, Mr. Nobody said, "If I'll show you where there is $1,500 due this firm and easily collectable, $1,500 that you know nothing about, what will the information be worth to me?"

"I don't see how it's possible," said Mr. Wade, "that even with our great business there could be that large amount due us and we know nothing about it."

"Tell me what it's worth to me if my information is correct—and I'll prove to you by your own books inside of five minutes that it is correct—and then we'll proceed to business."

"Information that this firm is so foolish as not to know that an easy collectable $1,500 is due is worth $50 to any man who will prove it. Show me that we are such business idiots, and I'll give you $50 right out of my own pocket. More than that, if by the faintest chance what you say should prove true and we can collect the $1,500, I'll give you a third of it."

The sombreroed stranger went down into an inside pocket. "Go to your books Sept. 12, 1889," he said.

Mr. Wade went to his books. There, after the stranger had mentioned an invoice number, they found what in a nutshell was this: "Shipped to John Fox, Bicknell, Ariz., 400 bags of sugar of 100 pounds each—40,000 pounds."

"Now turn to your books of Jan. 14, 1890."

It did not take Mr. Wade and his bookkeeper more than a minute to find out that instead of sending a bill for 40,000 pounds of sugar to John Fox they had sent him a bill for 400 pounds, a bill which he had paid promptly. A receipt had been sent Mr. Fox and the transaction closed, and the error had never been discovered. There was due the firm of Wade & Scales from John Fox $1,500 and interest thereon for something like twelve years.

"You see," said the visitor, "I was Mr. Fox's bookkeeper for years and years. When the bill for 400 pounds of sugar came in, I said, 'I'll pay the bill as it stands, and if they ever send a bill for the remaining 3,600 pounds I'll pay that, too, but I guess we don't need to worry about the mistake.' The other day John Fox kicked me out of his employment for a trivial mistake—kicked me out penniless at that. What I am doing now you may consider a piece of revenge. So it is largely; but I also need money."

The westerner left the place with $50 in his pocket, and the next mail took a bill to John Fox for $1,500 plus the interest for twelve years. Actuated by curiosity to know how the man would explain the matter, Mr. Wade inclosed with the bill a query as to why, having received 40,000 pounds of sugar, Mr. Fox had sent on pay for only 400 pounds.

Within a week a check for the full amount of the bill and interest was received. John Fox was too good a business man not to know that he must pay instantly, but as far as his dishonesty was concerned this is what he said in his letter, the only bit of writing that appeared except the name and figures on the check:

I make it a point never to pay until bills are presented. You never sent the bill for the extra 3,600 pounds. JOHN FOX.

Was Fox a thief or simply commercially shrewd?

In the years that had passed John Fox had become a multimillionaire. Recently he wished to open a great establishment in Chicago. A real estate agent found him a finely located building near the heart of the business district. Fox came way on to look at it. He went to the agent's office and found him looking somewhat downcast, as a man might look who was out a fat commission.

"Mr. Fox," said the agent, "I was utterly dumfounded this morning when informed by the owners of the building selected for you that they would not let you have it under any circumstances. The owners are a firm of wholesale grocers. When I pressed them for a reason for refusing to let the property to you, the head of the firm handed me a slip of paper and said: 'I understand Mr. Fox is to come to see you today. When he asks you for our reason in declining to rent to him, simply give him this piece of paper.'"

John Fox held out his hand and received the slip of paper from the agent. He unfolded it. He saw that it was one of his own letterheads, and below the printing he read this, written in his own hand:

Wade, Scales & Co.:
Gentlemen—I make it a point never to pay until bills are presented. JOHN FOX.

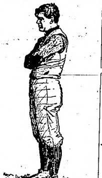
A Feathered Thief.

A Parisian actress who had for some time been suffering losses of jewelry determined to set a trap for the thief. So she left a diamond bracelet on her bureau, retired into an adjoining room and began to watch through the keyhole. Presently a starling hopped through the window, seized the bracelet and deposited it in the chimney, where all the missing jewelry was subsequently found.

The SPORTING WORLD

The coach is always one of the most important factors in developing a winning football team. In the college world large salaries are paid to players of fame for their services during the whole or part of the pigskin chasing season.

"Beef" Heffelfinger, now one of the coaches of the Yale eleven, is one of the best judges of gridiron play in the country. He is looked up to as a sort of demigod by this year's New Haven team, and whatever "Beef" says "goes." Heffelfinger was a guard at Yale in 1889-90-91. During those three years he was the best man in the position in the college arena. Heffelfinger held a position on the All America teams of 1889-90-91 and was associated with such famous players as Gill, Stagg, McClung, Hartwell and Hinkey of Yale, Channing, Ames, Riggs, Homans and King of Princeton, Lee, Hallowell, Newell and Lake of Harvard and Adams of the University of Pennsylvania.



"BEEF" HEFFELFINGER, THE FAMOUS YALE COACH.

Heffelfinger gives his attention especially to the line men. He is peculiarly fitted to instruct the center men in the possibilities of their positions, and to his efforts are due the extremely creditable performances of the Eli guards and center during the season now closing.

Auto Racing Records.

The breaking of automobile records is getting to be an almost daily occurrence, and the minimum time in which a high geared, many horsepower machine can circle a mile track seems to be still unfixed. Within a month the record has been lowered several times, and a machine now that cannot whirl the distance in at least a minute and a quarter need not hope to win in the race. The contests for lower record have been intensified by the international element entering into the sport by the hot rivalry between French and American makers. Until recently it was necessary in order to get a really fast machine to go to the foreign makers.

The two chauffeurs who have been most prominent in the automobile world lately are A. C. Bostwick, the young millionaire sportsman, who is one of the vice presidents of the Automobile Club of America, and Henri Fournier, the well known French chauffeur, who won the long distance race from Paris to Berlin this year and who has won many competitions on this side of the water. Fournier was the mentor of William K. Vanderbilt, Jr., in the sport, and Vanderbilt has been his companion in some of his most sensational rides.

World's Turf Bodies Agree.

That an agreement between the leading horse racing bodies of England and the United States of America will be made, whereby the authorities of the turf will have control of all racing affairs, has been settled beyond the shadow of a doubt by the recent statement made by August Belmont, one of the organizers of the Jockey Club of America and for several terms president of that organization.

Mr. Belmont is now in England and has had important conferences with the authorities of the English turf. He also visited France, where he talked with the leading men in French racing affairs and, as was stated afterward by French turf writers, induced the French Jockey club to agree to an arrangement whereby the relations between the French and the American turf shall be reciprocal.

Mr. Belmont saw the English turf authorities on the same matter and from all reports obtained an agreement on the subject. When seen, he declined to talk further than to state that he had discussed turf affairs with the officials of both the English and the French turf and that they had displayed the most friendly spirit toward the Jockey Club of the United States.

Fiercest Baseball War.

President Watkins of Indianapolis has been through several baseball wars, but he thinks the present struggle the fiercest he has ever known. He is astounded at the prices the American league people are paying the National league stars they have claimed to have under contract.

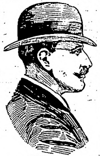
PEOPLE OF THE DAY

In the Big Railway Deal.

The largest railway deal ever made or even attempted has been consummated under the title of the Northern Securities company. In the combination are the vast properties of the Union Pacific, Southern Pacific, Northern Pacific, Great Northern, Chicago and Northwestern, Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul and the Burlington, making a total of over 47,000 mileage. E. H. Harriman, who was a prominent figure in the Northern Pacific war of last May, was one of the principal factors in bringing about this amalgamation.



E. H. HARRIMAN.

Among others interested in this greatest of railway transactions were J. P. Morgan, J. J. Hill, James M. Stillman, W. K. Vanderbilt and John D. Rockefeller.

Russell Sage says this latest move of the railway kings is a menace to the country, because it means the destruction of competition in railway transportation.

The Oldest Living General.

After the Duke of Luxemburg, the Grand Duke of Mecklenburg-Strelitz—a brother-in-law of the Duke of Cambridge—who recently celebrated the sixtieth anniversary of his enrollment in the Prussian army, is now the oldest living general. He is, moreover, the third oldest sovereign in Europe, the Duke of Luxemburg being the oldest and King Christian the second oldest. He was eighty-two on the 17th of October and has for many years been totally blind. He is a great favorite of King Edward and spent some time at Homburg with him last month.

Oldest Man.

James Farrell of Barboursville, W. Va., recently celebrated the one hundred and fifth anniversary of his birth. He is now probably the oldest man in the United States. Mr. Farrell served in the war of 1812 and later was in Mexico, under Jefferson Davis. When the war between the states broke out, he enlisted, although no longer a young man, and saw four years of service. He was probably the oldest veteran to offer his services to the government when the Spanish war broke out.

GEN. CHAFFEE IS DEALING OUT JUSTICE WITH A STERN HAND.

FILIPINO MURDERERS MUST HANG

TEN NATIVES ARE TRIED BEFORE THE MILITARY COMMISSION.

DEATH FOR ALMOST ALL OF THEM

IN EVERY CASE EXCEPT ONE THE PERSON MURDERED WAS A NATIVE.

Washington, Jan. 28.—Maj. Gen. Chaffee is dealing out justice with a stern hand to natives of the Philippines who have been indulging in murder and pillage under the pretense of fighting for independence.

The official mail from Manila just received by the war department contains the orders in ten cases of natives tried before military commissions for murder. In every case except one the person murdered was a native. The one exception was that of an American soldier whose body, strangely enough, could not be identified by the military authorities. Nearly all the accused were sentenced to death and in a majority of cases the sentences were approved by Gen. Chaffee. In a case where the native convicted was sentenced to twenty years' imprisonment, Gen. Chaffee expressed the opinion that the sentence was inadequate.

One of the natives tried, Augustin to their death as the result of an explos- Ilocos, Luzon, was a leader of the Filipino secret society known as the Sandataban. He was charged with killing Antonio Abaya, who was supposed to be an American spy. On the witness stand Aguilar gave as a reason for the murder that the community wanted to get rid of Abaya because he had "a bad sickness." Aguilar's sentence was death, but Gen. Chaffee commuted it to imprisonment for life.

AN ENGINE RUNS AWAY.

Gets Beyond Control and Is Badly Wrecked.

Spring Valley, Minn., Jan. 28.—An accident on the Milwaukee road about five miles east of this city occurred about 1 o'clock yesterday morning. An engine of a west-bound extra freight had to run to this place for water, and on returning the engine got beyond control and crashed into its train. The engineer reversed and told all to jump. The four persons in the cab made the leap safely, except the engineer and Frank Deyo of this place, who were injured. The engine, being reversed, started rapidly ahead. Engineer Knudson managed to crawl on again, but a wild ride of over two miles was made before the engine could be stopped. The engine and one car were badly wrecked.

TWO LOUISIANA NEGROES LYNCHED

New Orleans, Jan. 28.—Two negroes were lynched in a distant portion of West Carroll parish, La., Saturday night for the murder of G. N. Grant, the gross value of the products of manufacture in the United States in 1900 was $12,003,127,682, and increase of 35.75 per cent ober 1890.

STORM'S DISASTROUS WORK.

Heavy Losses Among Cattle in Parts of Nebraska.

Omaha, Jan. 28.—Predictions made as to the probable disastrous effects of the blizzard which raged all day Saturday and yesterday were partially verified in reports received here yesterday and last night from points in Nebraska. A remarkable condition exists in the vicinity of Ogalalla, where the storm was more severe than in any other portion of the state, except in the northwest quarter. It was expected that the losses among cattle in that district would be enormous, but authentic reports received from several points in the cattle district affirm that actually no loss was sustained, the cattle finding necessary shelter. Reports from the northwestern portion of the state are not so flattering, however, while those from Kimball and Banner counties, the farthermost counties on the west side of the state, indicate that heavy losses have occurred.

IN THE NORTHWEST.

Subzero Weather With Snow and a Strong Wind.

Sioux Falls, S. D., Jan. 28.—Yesterday was the coldest experienced here for many weeks. Thermometers this morning registered 15 below. The storm, with blizzardly aspects, which prevailed yesterday and last night, has ceased. Several inches of snow fell throughout the section.

Plainfield, Wis., Jan. 27.—The worst snowstorm of the season prevailed steadily all day over Central Wisconsin. Several inches of snow has fallen.

La Crosse, Wis., Jan. 27.—The heaviest snowstorm of the season fell yesterday. The thermometer is falling rapidly. The mercury is now 10 below and still falling.

IOWA MINE DISASTER.

Explosion Caused by a Shot Fired by a Miner Who Is Among Those Killed.

Oskaloosa, Iowa, Jan. 28.—An inquest was held over the remains of twenty miners who were killed in the dust explosion at the Lost Creek coal mine Friday afternoon. A verdict was rendered to the effect that the men came to their death as the result of an explosion caused by a shot fired by a miner named Andy Pesh, who was among the killed. The mine was examined by the state inspector, who said the mine was in as good condition as any in the state at the last examination. Funeral services of the victims are being conducted by the Lost Creek company. The list of the dead now numbers twenty-two. Oliver Mable died yesterday afternoon. He had his arm broken and was terribly burned about the face and head.

BOERS JOINING BRITISH ARMY.

Gen. Vilonel Notifies Steyn That a Force of 1,500 Will Fight Against Old Comrades.

Pretoria, Jan. 28.—Lord Kitchener has authorized Gen. Vilonel, a surrendered burgher, to raise an additional Boer corps of 1,500 men. Gen. Vilonel has written a letter to ex-President Steyn, warning the latter of his intention to form such a corps and adding that the Boers in the concentration camps are tired of the useless struggle and are determined to help the British end it.

WOMAN DYING FROM SNEEZING.

Miss Sarah Mackey of Taylorville, Ill., Weakening Under the Strain.

Taylorville, Ill., Jan. 28.—Miss Sarah Mackey, who has been sneezing almost constantly during the last ten days, broke all previous records when she $100,000 to Cooper Union. This is Mr. Carnegie's second gift to the institution, the first one being of a like amount, says the Evening Post.

LOW SLAPS BACK

MAYOR OF GREATER NEW YORK WRITES A VERY VIGOROUS LETTER.

REPLIES TO REV. PARKHURST

SHOWS WHAT AN UNDERTAKING IT IS TO ENFORCE EVERY LAW.

QUIET AND ORDERLY SUNDAYS

MORE PERFECTLY SECURED THAN FOR FOUR YEARS PAST.

New York, Jan. 23.—Mayor Low to-day replied in part as follows to the demand made upon him by the Rev. Parkhurst and Thaddeus D. Kenneson, as president and secretary of the Society for the Prevention of Crime, for the enforcement of the Sunday closing law:

"Your letter of Jan. 17 is at hand. Brushing aside al minor questions, it alleges, in effect, that no attempt has been made since Jan. 1 to enforce the excise law so far as it relates to Sunday selling; it admits that the law is 'quite likely unenforceable,' and yet it argues that the foundations of civic morality are threatened because it is not enforced.

Not a Dead Letter.

"I think it will clear the air if we try to arrive at some common meaning for the word 'enforced' for, as you use it, you give the impression that the law is treated by the administration as a dead letter.

"This is very far from being the case. By virtue of this law the public sale of liquor has been stopped and a peaceable and orderly Sunday has been already more perfectly secured, since the first of January as I judge from the public press, than certainly at any time for four years past. Because, however, it may have been possible, as you imply, to buy liquor in many saloons behind closed doors on Sunday, it pleases you to say, in effect, that the law is treated by the administration as though it did not exist.

Parkhurst Quoted.

"Coming from any one less familiar with the problem than yourselves, this assumption would suggest one of the easy and sweeping inferences often made by those who speak without knowledge. Read, however, in the light of the interview of the honored president of your society, which appeared on the 20th instant, it bears a very different aspect. In that interview Dr. Parkhurst said:

"'It impresses me that the present excise law will be exceedingly hard to enforce. Roosevelt bent all his wonderful energy to attain this end, and we had three dry Sundays as a result. That does not seem to predict success for any effort the present administration may make. The whole police force was used in carrying out Roosevelt's determination and there was practically an open field for the perpetration of other crimes.'

"To sum up: The attitude of this administration toward the excise law can be clearly defined. It will continue to enforce the excise law as one of the general body of laws which it is called upon to enforce, in the best manner practicable with the means at its disposal."

HOBSON WILL RETIRE.

Hero of the Merrimac Will Enter the Political Arena.

Washington, Jan. 23.—Capt. Richmond P. Hobson, the naval constructor who sank the Merrimac in the mouth of the Santiago harbor, appeared to-day before the retiring board at the Washington navy yard. He will receive a pension of $3,000 annually for the remainder of his life if his application meets the approval of President Roosevelt.

Capt. Hobson's application for retirement is the preliminary, it is believed, to his entrance into politics. He himself declines to discuss his political aspirations, but his friends don't doubt that if his district in Alabama desires to send him to congress he will be willing to accept the nomination.

The district is now represented by Mr. Bankhead, one of the leaders of the minority in the house. Mr. Bankhead is an astute politician and has no intention of relinquishing his position. To secure even the nomination Capt. Hobson will have a hard fight on his hands.

YOUNG BOY DRUNKARD.

Sad Case of Mistaken Greediness Comes Up in a New York Police Court.

New York, Jan. 23.—John Conaty, ten years old, of 540 West Forty-sixth street was arraigned to-day in the West side police court, charged with intoxication. Policeman Murtha of the West Forty-seventh street station picked him up late on Wednesday night at Ninth avenue and Forty-seventh street. The little fellow was so helpless by drink that he had to be taken to Roosevelt hospital.

The boy told the court to-day that he had stolen several bottles of beer from a grocery store and drank too much of it. Magistrate Dial sent the boy to the children's society.

PEACE PROPOSALS FROM BOERS.

Were Presented to Lord Rosebery by a Boer Delegate.

London, Jan. 24.—It is rumored in the lobbies of the house of commons that a Boer delegate from Acting President Schalkburger last June saw Lord Rosebery and submitted peace proposals to him. Lord Rosebery acquainted Lord Salisbury, the premier, with this fact, but, according to the rumor, the cabinet declined to consider the matter on the ground that the war was coming to an end with the unconditional surrender of the Boers.

OPPOSE CONSOLIDATION.

Maryland Proposes to Prevent Consolidation of Competing Lines.

Annapolis, Md., Jan. 24.—A bill was introduced in the house of delegates which, if passed, will effectually prevent the purchase of the Western Maryland railway by any corporation controlling a railroad in this state competing with the Western Maryland.

Elected by Export Lumbermen.

Cincinnati, Jan. 23.—The National Lumber Exporters' association to-day adjourned to meet next January in New Orleans. The following officers were elected: President, Ernest M. Price, New York; treasurer, Richard W. Price, Baltimore; general counsel, John J. McKelvey, New York; secretary and treasurer, Elliott Lang, Memphis. Resolutions were adopted making exporters of packing house products, linseed, cottonwood machinery, grain, dairy and other products eligible to membership.

INDIAN OUTBREAK FEARED.

Reds Will Not Submit Tamely to the Hair-Cutting Process.

La Crosse, Wis., Jan. 23.—It is feared there will be an Indian outbreak in this vicinity should the government order compelling Indians to abolish their old customs of wearing long hair and blankets and painting their faces be enforced. Chief White Eagle of the Winnebago camp opposite this city declares these are sacred privileges and that they will protect their customs by the shedding of blood if necessary.

PAPERS WERE DEFECTIVE.

E. Le Roy Miller, Wanted in Iowa, Released on Habeas Corpus.

Fargo, N. D., Jan. 23.—Judge Pollock granted a writ of habeas corpus and ordered the release of E. Le Roy Miller, arrested on complaint of Iowa authorities charging larceny. Defective papers were the cause of the issuance of the writ. Miller was in a partnership kinetoscope deal and says he left the machine in Iowa as so many dates had to be canceled on account of smallpox.

CAUGHT IN NEW ORLEANS.

Sheldon of West Superior Is Arrested and Held.

New Orleans, Jan. 23.—Nathaiel A. Sheldon of West Superior, Wis., is under arrest here on the charge of forgery. The man was apprehended on the request from Sheriff Sommer of West Superior. Sheldon has been traveling under the name of J. S. Sloan and he is charged with having embezzled a lot of railroad tickets and also with forgery. When arrested he admitted his identity. Sheriff Somer will send a deputy to take the prisoner back to Wisconsin.

MONTANA'S CAPITOL FINISHED.

Building Turned Over to the Commission.

Helena, Mont., Jan. 23. — Montana's new state house was formally turned over to the commission by H. L. Frank, president of the Montana Building company, and the contract was approved by the commission. The commission decided to dedicate the building on July 4, which is just three years after the corner stone was laid by the Masonic grand lodge.

IRISH FUNDS LOW.

Forcing the Retirement of Nationalist Members of Parliament.

Dublin, Jan. 23.—The recent and prospective retirements of Nationalist members of the house of commons are attributed in some quarters to the depleted condition of the Nationalist treasury. It is said that the parliamentary fund for 1902 thus far totals only £1,100, over half of which amount came from the United States.

RESPITE GRANTED.

Gov. Toole of Montana Postpones a Hanging.

Helena, Mont., Jan. 23.—Gov. Toole yesterday respited William Hardie, under sentence of death at Glasgow for the murder of a companion in Valley county four months ago. He was to have been hung Jan. 24, but was given a respite until March 10 in order that he may perfect his appeal.

SCALDED AND BURNED.

Iowa Five-Year-Old Falls Into a Kettle of Boiling Feed.

Marshalltown, Iowa, Jan. 23. — The five-year-old son of Charles Robinson at Dougherty, fell head first into a kettle of boiling feed and was so badly burned that he died a few hours afterward. The father was cooking feed in a large kettle out doors.

Talks to Farmers.

Montevideo, Minn., Jan. 23.—A farmers' institute opened here for a two-day session with the usual corps of instructors. Nearly 300 farmers and others attended the opening session. The talks given on clover, grasses and soils were listened to with much interest, and the failure of clover to grow successfully in this vicinity was so carefully explained that many farmers who had practically abandoned this important crop intend to make a new attempt to grow the same.

Refused to Prosecute.

Jamestown, N. D., Jan. 23. — Judge Glaspell is holding a term of court at Fessenden. The case against Butts, the aged Wells county farmer who shot Caplis, a Bowdon saloonkeeper in the head, has been dropped. Caplis recovered, and, admitting that he was wrong in the quarrel, refused to prosecute.

Modern Antiquities.

Janesville, Wis., Jan. 23. — A report has reached here that an old man and his son have been engaged on their farm near this city manufacturing Indian war relics which were supposed to have been made by the Wisconsin Indians in past ages. These supposed relics have brought fancy prices.

Reform in Yankton.

Yankton, S. D., Jan. 23.—Gambling is entirely closed in Yankton. Mayor Powers and Marshal Pierson served notice on every house yesterday to close and remain closed. All slot machines were also taken out.

Struck by a Big Rock.

Lead, S. D., Jan. 23.—Frank Hartin, a miner employed in the Wasp No. 2 mine on Yellow creek, was struck in the face by a heavy rock, fracturing his frontal bone. He is in a critical condition.

Rush for Land.

Pierre, S. D., Jan. 23. — The present fine weather is bringing many people into this country to take advantage of the free government land. The long-expected rush for these lands is now on.

H. P. Graham Stricken.

Eau Claire, Wis., Jan. 23.—H. P. Graham, aged 83, has been stricken by paralysis. There is grave doubt of his recovery. He was the first mayor of Eau Claire and is president of the Phoenix Manufacturing company.

Child Drinks Carbolic Acid.

St. Paul, Jan. 23.—The four-year-old daughter of Morris Sandin of 545 Fairview avenue, Merriam Park, got hold of a carbolic acid bottle last evening. She drank nearly an ounce of the acid and is not expected to live.

HILL IS QUIZZED

MAGNATE TESTIFIES BEFORE THE INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION.

ON THE STAND OVER THREE HOURS

DECLARES THAT COMPETITION DOES NOT LOWER TRAFFIC RATES.

TELLS ALL ABOUT THE MERGER

GIVES REASON MORE SIMPLE THAN HAS BEEN CONJECTURED.

Chicago, Jan. 26.—James J. Hill, president of the Northern Securities company and president of the Great Northern Railway company, testified for three and a quarter hours before the interstate commerce commission here yesterday. In answer to questions tending to show the effect of the community of interests plan on rates, the veteran railroad man declared that competition does not lower rates, but on the contrary, he believed that it advanced them. He declared that in the Northwest, where for twenty years the Northern Pacific and Great Northern have been at peace, where one road has agreed with the other on rates and maintained the agreements, rates were lower than in any other part of the country.

In regard to the purchase of the Burlington by the Northern Pacific and Great Northern, Mr. Hill declared that the purchase was a

and was not due to "a movement in line with the trust idea." He testified to the formation of the Northern Securities company, and in doing so, gave a reason far more simple than has generally been conjectured.

"There are some old men—some very old men—interested in the management of the Great Northern," said he. "Two of them are over eighty and several over seventy years. They wanted to form a close corporation into which they could confide their interests with the assurance that the road would be managed along the lines which have made it a success. It was to have taken over one-third of the stock of the road. The plan seemed to be a good one, and then it was proposed to let all the stockholders in—not alone the few owners of the one-third—but all of them. The plan and then it broadened into the idea of taking in the Northern Pacific also. The roads had worked in harmony for twenty years and the change in the holder of securities would make no difference. It can make no difference and will make no difference."

Mr. Hill talked vigorously and earnestly. At the close of the session, when Chairman Knapp offered to allow Mr. Hill to leave for New York if the latter felt that staying in Chicago would inconvenience him seriously, Mr. Hill declared that his time belonged to the commission, and that he desired in every way to aid them to the extent of his ability. Chairman Knapp thereupon said that Mr. Hill would be again called to the stand to-day.

SCHEME OF STEAMSHIP COMPANIES

There Will Not Be a Merger, but Instead a Combination to Control the Rates.

New York, Jan. 26.—The White Star steamer Celtic arrived yesterday from Liverpool and Queenstown. Among her passengers were a number of English shipping men whose mission, it was rumored, was to form a combine of transatlantic passenger and freight lines. There was a general denial that a merger was in prospect. It was intimated, however, that the various lines mentioned in connection with the proposed consolidation will propose the policy of uniform traffic rates. In this manner it is hoped to increase the annual earnings of the various companies, at the same time permitting them to retain their individuality.

TRAMPS SEIZE A TRAIN.

But They Will Pay for Their Fun by Serving 150 Days in Jail.

Pueblo, Colo., Jan. 26.—Four armed tramps took possession of an east-bound Denver & Rio Grande freight train yesterday five miles east of Florence, drove the brakeman into the caboose and held the train by force until the Pueblo water works, three and a half miles west of this city, were reached. Pueblo policemen who had been notified by the railroad authorities of the seizure of the train, captured the gang. They were sentenced by the police court to serve 150 days each in jail for vagrancy and will be prosecuted later on graver charges.

BLACKLIST IS SUSTAINED.

Ohio Supreme Court Renders Its Decision.

Columbus, Ohio, Jan. 26.—The syllabus of the supreme court's decision in the case of the Nickel Plate Railway vs. Frank Shaeffer, on appeal from the circuit court of Huron county, involving the "blacklist," which was given out yesterday, sustains the railroad company. Shaeffer was discharged by the railway company for participating in a strike. He claimed that he could not secure employment on any other road because the company refused to give him a certificate of service, and he sued for damages.

Killed by Falling From Bucket.

Calumet, Mich., Jan. 26. — Joseph Piese, a miner employed at the Tamarack mine, was killed by falling from a bucket. Piese was in the bucket with several other miners while it was ascending, when a shover caught in the timbering, throwing him out.

Found a Pearl Worth $250.

La Crosse, Wis., Jan. 26. — George Holzhammer brought to this city a pearl valued by local jewelers at $250, found by winter clam fishers, who get them through the ice.

ROOSEVELT TO INVESTIGATE.

Personal Action on the Appeal of Admiral Schley.

Washington, Jan. 25.—A conference concerning the appeal of Rear Admiral Schley from the conclusions of the court of inquiry was held at the White House yesterday between President Roosevelt, Secretary Long and E. P. Hanna, solicitor of the judge advocate of the Schley court. The utmost reticence in regard to the nature of the conference is shown by those who know what passed at the White House, but it is learned that the president made many inquiries and indicated an intention to investigate personally the contentions made in the appeal. He will do the work carefully and no executive action may be expected for a long time.

VICTORY FOR BOERS.

Over a Score of Yeomen Surrendered to Superior Force.

Pretoria, Jan. 25. — A party of imperial yeomanry who were protecting native grass cutters at Linriquespruit were attacked by 150 Boers and forced to surrender. The Boers lost six killed and four wounded. The British casualties were one killed and seven wounded. Four natives were killed.

COUNTRYMAN IS GRAND MASTER.

Appleton Man Chosen by the Masonic Grand Lodge.

St. Paul, Jan. 25. — The Minnesota grand lodge of Masons closed its annual session yesterday and elected the following officers: Grand master, A. D. Countryman, Appleton; deputy grand master, Henry R. Adams, Minneapolis; senior grand warden, William A. McGonagle, Duluth; junior grand warden, Enoch Scott, Winona; grand treasurer, D. W. Knowlton, Minneapolis; grand secretary, Thomas Montgomery, St. Paul.

"PA" GRAFF RETIRES.

He Has Supplied Soda Water to Fifteen Generations of Students.

Iowa City, Iowa, Jan. 25. — W. H. Graff, proprietor of the favorite soda water stand of the University of Iowa students, has retired from business after over thirty years spent following the bowl and pestle. He was known to fifteen generations of Iowa students as "Pa" Graff. During his long period of service in his drug store he was never away from it for a day, save for a three-day vacation taken almost on compulsion.

FIRE AT KALISPELL.

Ten Thousand Dollar Loss in Montana City.

Kalispell, Mont., Jan. 25.—Fire yesterday morning destroyed the millinery store of Mrs. L. E. Thompson on Main street. The flames then spread to the adjoining buildings, burning over four lots on Main street and doing damage to property valued at $10,000. There was $2,000 insurance. It is thought to have been the work of incendiaries, and officers are working on the case.

MINERS' WAGES REDUCED.

Copper Companies Will Cut 10 Per Cent From Employes.

Houghton, Mich., Jan. 25.—Lake Superior copper mining companies will reduce wages probably about March 1. The cut will likely be 10 per cent. These steps are rendered necessary by the drop in copper, which will reduce the value of the Houghton county production $10,000,000 to $12,000,000 this year, on the basis of the present market price.

HIS RIGHT TO KILL.

Contention of a Sioux Falls Man Charged With Murder.

Sioux City, Iowa, Jan. 25.—The grand jury in Sioux county has found an indictment against F. W. Reynolds of Sioux Falls, S. D., charging him with the murder of Rev. Samuel Crofton, a negro preacher, near Ireton, Iowa, last August. Reynolds has engaged counsel and will make a strong fight to prove justification.

Had Possession of Another's Horse.

Fargo, N. D., Jan. 25.—William Hawthorne, who has been foreman of the ranch of Adolph Hans, near Sheldon, was arrested here on the charge of stealing a horse and buggy. The horse belonged to his former employer, and some of the other stuff in his possession was the property of a Leonard liveryman. Just before his arrest he endeavored to sell the horse to a deputy sheriff who impersonated a buyer.

Wolves Are Bold.

Minot, N. D., Jan. 25.—Reports of the ravages done by wolves continue to be most alarming. In many cases large numbers of the prowlers invade corrals and kill calves and young cattle. In many instances large numbers of wolves approach wayfarers, though none have yet been bold enough to do injury. A systematic effort will be made by cattlemen and farmers to exterminate the breed.

New Court House at Parker.

Parker, S. D., Jan. 25.—The commissioners have decided on the general outline of the new court house. The building will be 56x96 feet in size, the first story to be of stone and the second story of brick. The plans include court room, county offices, jail, etc. The building will cost $30,000. Of this amount Parker contributes $10,000 in cash.

Pass Primary Election.

Fergus Falls, Minn., Jan. 25. — This city will not have a primary election this spring. The county attorney holds that Wednesday was the last day for filing applications for places on the primary ballots, and no one has filed. The candidates will all go on by petition as independents, and the expense of holding primaries will thus be saved.

Iowan Convicted of Bigamy.

Sioux City, Iowa, Jan. 25. — John Kelly was convicted at Sidney of bigamy. His real wife lives here. His supposed spouse is Isora Carter, and the two have been living at Hamburg. He tried to prove he was not Kelly.

Schools Close at Brownsville.

La Crosse, Wis., Jan. 25.—The schools at Brownsville have closed on account of smallpox. It has just been found that Miss Maggie Hackett had the disease and the whole town has been exposed.

ONLY A SLIP OF PAPER

Twelve years ago the firm of Wade, Scale & Co. of Chicago received an order from John Fox for 400 bags of sugar, each bag to weigh 100 pounds. The order was filled, the bill paid, and the transaction closed.

One day recently a man with a sombrero on strolled into the office of Wade, Scales & Co. He took the blank slip of paper offered him and wrote this on it:

Mr. Nobody, from Nowhere. This is my name until after our conversation.

"Give that to the boss," he said, "and tell him I think he'll be glad to see me."

Curiosity more than anything else led the staid and dignified Mr. Wade to allow this unconventional visitor a chance to get into his private office. Once there, Mr. Nobody said, "If I'll show you where there is $1,500 due this firm and easily collectable, $1,500 that you know nothing about, what will the information be worth to me?"

"I don't see how it's possible," said Mr. Wade, "that even with our great business there could be that large amount due us and we know nothing about it."

"Tell me what it's worth to me if my information is correct—and I'll prove to you by your own books inside of five minutes that it is correct—and then we'll proceed to business."

"Information that this firm is so foolish as not to know that an easy collectable $1,500 is due is worth $50 to any man who will prove it. Show me that we are such business idiots, and I'll give you $50 right out of my own pocket. More than that, if by the faintest chance what you say should prove true and we can collect the $1,500, I'll give you a third of it."

The sombreroed stranger went down into an inside pocket. "Go to your books Sept. 12, 1889," he said.

Mr. Wade went to his books. There, after the stranger had mentioned an invoice number, they found what in a nutshell was this: "Shipped to John Fox, Bicknell, Ariz., 400 bags of sugar of 100 pounds each—40,000 pounds."

"Now turn to your books of Jan. 14, 1890."

It did not take Mr. Wade and his bookkeeper more than a minute to find out that instead of sending a bill for 40,000 pounds of sugar to John Fox they had sent him a bill for 400 pounds, a bill which he had paid promptly. A receipt had been sent Mr. Fox and the transaction closed, and the error had never been discovered. There was due the firm of Wade & Scales from John Fox $1,500 and interest thereon for something like twelve years.

"You see," said the visitor, "I was Mr. Fox's bookkeeper for years and years. When the bill for 400 pounds of sugar came in, I said, 'I'll pay the bill as it stands, and if they ever send a bill for the remaining 3,600 pounds I'll pay that, too, but I guess we don't need to worry about the mistake.' The other day John Fox kicked me out of his employment for a trivial mistake—kicked me out penniless at that. What I am doing now you may consider a piece of revenge. So it is largely, but I also need money."

The westerner left the place with $50 in his pocket, and the next mail took a bill to John Fox for $1,500 plus the interest for twelve years. Actuated by curiosity to know how the man would explain the matter, Mr. Wade inclosed with the bill a query as to why, having received 40,000 pounds of sugar, Mr. Fox had sent on pay for only 400 pounds.

Within a week a check for the full amount of the bill and interest was received. John Fox was too good a business man not to know that he must pay instantly, but as far as his dishonesty was concerned this is what he said in his letter, the only bit of writing that appeared except the name and figures on the check:

I make it a point never to pay until bills are presented. You never sent the bill for the extra 3,600 pounds. JOHN FOX.

Was Fox a thief or simply commercially shrewd?

In the years that had passed John Fox had become a multimillionaire. Recently he wished to open a great establishment in Chicago. A real estate agent found him a finely located building near the heart of the business district. Fox came way on to look at it. He went to the agent's office and found him looking somewhat downcast, as a man might look who was out a fat commission.

"Mr. Fox," said the agent, "I was utterly dumfounded this morning when informed by the owners of the building selected for you that they would not let you have it under any circumstances. The owners are a firm of wholesale grocers. When I pressed them for a reason for refusing to let the property to you, the head of the firm handed me a slip of paper and said: 'I understand Mr. Fox is to come to see you today. When he asks you for our reason in declining to rent to him, simply give him this piece of paper.'"

John Fox held out his hand and received the slip of paper from the agent. He unfolded it. He saw that it was one of his own letterheads, and below the printing he read this, written in his own hand:

Wade, Scales & Co.:
Gentlemen—I make it a point never to pay until bills are presented. JOHN FOX.

A Feathered Thief.

A Parisian actress who had for some time been suffering losses of jewelry determined to set a trap for the thief. So she left a diamond bracelet on her bureau, retired into an adjoining room and began to watch through the keyhole. Presently a starling hopped through the window, seized the bracelet and deposited it in the chimney, where all the missing jewelry was subsequently found.

The SPORTING WORLD

The coach is always one of the most important factors in developing a winning football team. In the college world large salaries are paid to players of fame for their services during the whole or part of the pigskin chasing season.

"Beef" Heffelfinger, now one of the coaches of the Yale eleven, is one of the best judges of gridiron play in the country. He is looked up to as a sort of demigod by this year's New Haven team, and whatever "Beef" says "goes." Heffelfinger was a guard at Yale in 1889-90-91. During those three years he was the best man in the position in the college arena. Heffelfinger held a position on the All America teams of 1889-90-91 and was associated with such famous players as Gill, Stagg, McClung, Hartwell and Hinkey of Yale, Channing, Ames, Riggs, Homans and King of Princeton, Lee, Hallowell, Newell and Lake of Harvard and Adams of the University of Pennsylvania.

"BEEF" HEFFELFINGER, THE FAMOUS YALE COACH.

Heffelfinger gives his attention especially to the line men. He is peculiarly fitted to instruct the center men in the possibilities of their positions, and to his efforts are due the extremely creditable performances of the Eli guards and center during the season now closing.

Auto Racing Records.

The breaking of automobile records is getting to be an almost daily occurrence, and the minimum time in which a high geared, many horsepower machine can circle a mile track seems to be still unfixed. Within a month the record has been lowered several times, and a machine now that cannot whirl the distance in at least a minute and a quarter need not hope to win in the race. The contests for lower record have been intensified by the international element entering into the sport by the hot rivalry between French and American makers. Until recently it was necessary in order to get a really fast machine to go to the foreign makers.

The two chauffeurs who have been most prominent in the automobile world lately are A. C. Bostwick, the young millionaire sportsman, who is one of the vice presidents of the Automobile Club of America, and Henri Fournier, the well known French chauffeur, who won the long distance race from Paris to Berlin this year and who has won many competitions on this side of the water. Fournier was the mentor of William K. Vanderbilt, Jr., in the sport, and Vanderbilt has been his companion in some of his most sensational rides.

World's Turf Bodies Agree.

That an agreement between the leading horse racing bodies of England and the United States of America will be made, whereby the authorities of the turf will have control of all racing affairs, has been settled beyond the shadow of a doubt by the recent statement made by August Belmont, one of the organizers of the Jockey Club of America and for several terms president of that organization.

Mr. Belmont is now in England and has had important conferences with the authorities of the English turf. He also visited France, where he talked with the leading men in French racing affairs and, as was stated afterward by French turf writers, induced the French Jockey club to agree to an arrangement whereby the relations between the French and the American turf shall be reciprocal.

Mr. Belmont saw the English turf authorities on the same matter and from all reports obtained an agreement on the subject. When seen, he declined to talk further than to state that he had discussed turf affairs with the officials of both the English and the French turf and that they had displayed the most friendly spirit toward the Jockey Club of the United States.

Fiercest Baseball War.

President Watkins of Indianapolis has been through several baseball wars, but he thinks the present struggle the fiercest he has ever known. He is astounded at the prices the American league people are paying the National league stars they have claimed to have under contract.

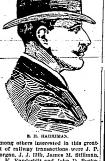
Trotting Board of Appeals.

The next regular meeting of the board of appeals of the American Trotting association will be held at the Auditorium hotel, Chicago, Tuesday, Dec. 3, at 10 a. m.

PEOPLE OF THE DAY

In the Big Railway Deal.

The largest railway deal ever made or even attempted has been consummated under the title of the Northern Securities company. In the combination are the vast properties of the Union Pacific, Southern Pacific, Northern Pacific, Great Northern, Chicago and Northwestern, Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul and the Burlington, making a total of over 47,000 mileage. E. H. Harriman, who was a prominent figure in the Northern Pacific war of last May, was one of the principal factors in bringing about this amalgamation.



E. H. HARRIMAN.

Among others interested in this greatest of railway transactions were J. P. Morgan, J. J. Hill, James M. Stillman, W. K. Vanderbilt and John D. Rockefeller.

Russell Sage says this latest move of the railway kings is a menace to the country, because it means the destruction of competition in railway transportation.

The Oldest Living General.

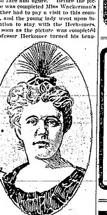
After the Duke of Luxemburg, the Grand Duke of Mecklenburg-Strelitz—a brother-in-law of the Duke of Cambridge—who recently celebrated the sixtieth anniversary of his enrollment in the Prussian army, is now the oldest living general. He is, moreover, the third oldest sovereign in Europe, the Duke of Luxemburg being the oldest and King Christian the second oldest. He was eighty-two on the 17th of October and has for many years been totally blind. He is a great favorite of King Edward and spent some time at Homburg with him last month.

Oldest Man.

James Farrell of Barboursville, W. Va., recently celebrated the one hundred and fifth anniversary of his birth. He is now probably the oldest man in the United States. Mr. Farrell served in the war of 1812 and later was in Mexico, under Jefferson Davis. When the war between the states broke out, he enlisted, although no longer a young man, and saw four years of service. He was probably the oldest veteran to offer his services to the government when the Spanish war broke out.

A Defamed American.

Considerable interest is taken both in England and the United States over the trouble that has arisen between an American girl and an English artist. Miss Vanderbilt Wackerman, a beautiful New York woman, has resided abroad several years in company with her mother. The young lady has been painted by several famous European artists, and not long ago Professor Herkomer, the well known London artist, solicited "the honor of painting her exquisitely beautiful face and figure." Before the picture was completed Miss Wackerman's mother had to pay a visit to this country, and the young lady went upon invitation to stay with the Herkomers. As soon as the picture was completed Professor Herkomer turned his beautiful model from his door under circumstances and with words that constituted a serious reflection upon the young lady's character. No specific charges were made, and those who know Miss Wackerman became very indignant at what they call the defamation of her character. Worry over the cruel insinuations made against her by the artist has unbalanced the mind of Miss Wackerman, and she has been committed to a London hospital for the insane.



MISS VANDERBILT WACKERMAN.

What steps will be taken by the parents and friends of the injured young lady to bring Professor Herkomer to account for his unjust and uncalled for attack remains to be seen.

FASHION-TRUE CLOTHING
Honorably-Made and Staunch FRIEND BROS. CLOTHING
is unique among other kinds. It is care-tailored clothing. The workmanship is of master-treatment by master-hands. The grade of trimmings, so often slighted by job-clothing makers, is one point of excellence with us, but only one. Like the dress of a well-groomed man you cannot pick out one feature in a Friend Bros. garment that overshadows the balance. The result is true harmony and an exceptionally thoroughbred effect. Be sure you find our name in the right hand breast pocket. Leading dealers sell our garments.

TO THE PEOPLE:
Some time ago the "Jack-of-All-Trades" began to tell the people what he could do. He made great claims; promised to do more than ever had been done before, and more than most people believed possible. You all know the success he has attained, and as he became more familiar with the country he was traveling in, he could see the possibilities of greater work, and to accomplish this he has introduced to you a traveling companion. Behold his features in the shape of a 2½ H. P. Geared Base Vertical Gasoline Engine. His specialties are pumping water and general farm use. He is very versatile, and when his time is not wanted for pumping water, by a movement of one of his arms, he can disconnect the gears and his power can be directed for other purposes. He is beginning to travel all over the country from the Canadian Provinces to the Equator, and from the Eastern Coast to the Philippines. He is taking up all sorts of work for all kinds of people, and it is surprising to note the results of his work for the first year. Send for information and catalogue.

GEN. CHAFFEE IS DEALING OUT JUSTICE WITH A STERN HAND.

FILIPINO MURDERERS MUST HANG

TEN NATIVES ARE TRIED BEFORE THE MILITARY COMMISSION.

DEATH FOR ALMOST ALL OF THEM

IN EVERY CASE EXCEPT ONE THE PERSON MURDERED WAS A NATIVE.

Washington, Jan. 28.—Maj. Gen. Chaffee is dealing out justice with a stern hand to natives of the Philippines who have been indulging in murder and pillage under the pretense of fighting for independence.

The official mail from Manila just received by the war department contains the orders in ten cases of natives tried before military commissions for murder. In every case except one the person murdered was a native. The one exception was that of an American soldier whose body, strangely enough, could not be identified by the military authorities. Nearly all the accused were sentenced to death and in a majority of cases the sentences were approved by Gen. Chaffee. In a case where the native convicted was sentenced to twenty years' imprisonment, Gen. Chaffee expressed the opinion that the sentence was inadequate.

One of the natives tried, Augustin to their death as the result of an explos- Ilocos, Luzon, was a leader of the Filipino secret society known as the Sandataban. He was charged with killing Antonio Abaya, who was supposed to be an American spy. On the witness stand Aguilar gave as a reason for the murder that the community wanted to get rid of Abaya because he had "a bad sickness." Aguilar's sentence was death, but Gen. Chaffee commuted it to imprisonment for life.

AN ENGINE RUNS AWAY.

Gets Beyond Control and Is Badly Wrecked.

Spring Valley, Minn., Jan. 28.—An accident on the Milwaukee road about five miles east of this city occurred about 1 o'clock yesterday morning. An engine of a west-bound extra freight had to run to this place for water, and on returning the engine got beyond control and crashed into its train. The engineer reversed and told all to jump. The four persons in the cab made the leap safely, except the engineer and Frank Deyo of this place, who were injured. The engine, being reversed, started rapidly ahead. Engineer Knudson managed to crawl on again, but a wild ride of over two miles was made before the engine could be stopped. The engine and one car were badly wrecked.

TWO LOUISIANA NEGROES LYNCHED

They Kill a Police Juror Who Had Caught Them in the Act of Killing His Hogs.

New Orleans, Jan. 28.—Two negroes were lynched in a distant portion of West Carroll parish, La., Saturday night for the murder of G. N. Grant, police judge from Floyd. Mr. Grant, while out hunting with a friend named McKay, came upon some negroes who had killed and were cleaning hogs. Mr. Grant found that they were his own hogs, and attempted to arrest the negroes, when one of them fired at him, blowing out his brains. McKay aroused the whites in the neighborhood with news of the murder. A posse was hastily formed and three of the negroes were captured and two of them lynched at once.

FROZEN TO DEATH.

Boy Loses His Life in a Blizzard in Oregon.

Huntington, Or., Jan. 28.—Grover F. Locke, aged thirteen, son of S. Locke, a stockman and broker of Huntington, was frozen to death in the blizzard.

The boy started for his father's ranch, twelve miles distant. When near the summit of a range of mountains his horse refused to face the storm and young Locke started to travel the remaining distance on foot. He had gone only a short distance when he fell face downward in the snow. His body was found in this position by a searching party.

ISLAND IS TERRORIZED.

Solomen Under Fanatical Leader Cause Trouble in Negros.

Manila, Jan. 28.—Col. Charles W. Miner of the Sixth infantry reports the conditions on the Island of Negros to be unsatisfactory, and that 400 Solomen and 40 men armed with rifles, under the command of the fanatical bandit leader, Papalsio, are terrorizing the people.

Cattle in Good Condition.

Sturgis, S. D., Jan. 28.—S. G. Sheffield, one of the prominent cattlemen of this place, has returned from the Moreau country and reports very little snow north of the Belle Fourche river. Cattle are looking better than in years.

Boer General Captured.

London, Jan. 28.—A report sent by Lord Kitchener, in Johannesburg, tells of the important capture of Gen. B. Viljoen, in the neighborhood of Lydenburg, as well as the captures of small parties of Boers elsewhere.

Several Buildings Destroyed.

New York, Jan. 28.—Fire at Montclair, N. J., yesterday destroyed several buildings in the business section. Other buildings were badly damaged. The loss is estimated at from $90,000 to $100,000 and the insurance at two-thirds that amount.

Increase of Billions.

Washington, Jan. 28.—According to statistics collected by the census bureau the gross value of the products of manufacture in the United States in 1900 was $13,003,127,682, and increase of 38.72 per cent ober 1890.

STORM'S DISASTROUS WORK.

Heavy Losses Among Cattle in Parts of Nebraska.

Omaha, Jan. 28.—Predictions made as to the probable disastrous effects of the blizzard which raged all day Saturday and yesterday were partially verified in reports received here yesterday and last night from points in Nebraska. A remarkable condition exists in the vicinity of Ogallala, where the storm was more severe than in any other portion of the state, except in the northwest quarter. It was expected that the losses among cattle in that district would be enormous, but authentic reports received from several points in the cattle district affirm that actually no loss was sustained, the cattle finding necessary shelter. Reports from the northwestern portion of the state are not so flattering, however, while these from Kimball and Banner counties, the farthermost counties on the west side of the state, indicate that heavy losses have occurred.

IN THE NORTHWEST.

Subzero Weather With Snow and a Strong Wind.

Sioux Falls, S. D., Jan. 28.—Yesterday was the coldest experienced here for many weeks. Thermometers this morning registered 16 below. The storm, with blizzardly aspects, which prevailed yesterday and last night, has ceased. Several inches of snow fell throughout the section.

Plainfield, Wis., Jan. 27.—The worst snowstorm of the season prevailed steadily all day over Central Wisconsin. Several inches of snow has fallen.

La Crosse, Wis., Jan. 27.—The heaviest snowstorm of the season fell yesterday. The thermometer is falling rapidly. The mercury is now 10 below and still falling.

IOWA MINE DISASTER.

Explosion Caused by a Shot Fired by a Miner Who Is Among Those Killed.

Oskaloosa, Iowa, Jan. 28.—An inquest was held over the remains of twenty miners who were killed in the dust explosion at the Lost Creek coal mine Friday afternoon. A verdict was rendered to the effect that the men came to their death as the result of an explosion caused by a shot fired by a miner named Andy Pesh, who was among the killed. The mine was examined by the state inspector, who said the mine was in as good condition as any in the state at the last examination. Funeral services of the victims are being conducted by the Lost Creek company. The list of the dead now numbers twenty-two. Oliver Mable died yesterday afternoon. He had his arm broken and was terribly burned about the face and head.

BOERS JOINING BRITISH ARMY.

Gen. Vilonel Notifies Steyn That a Force of 1,500 Will Fight Against Old Comrades.

Pretoria, Jan. 28.—Lord Kitchener has authorized Gen. Vilonel, a surrendered burgher, to raise an additional Boer corps of 1,500 men. Gen. Vilonel has written a letter to ex-President Steyn, warning the latter of his intention to form such a corps and adding that the Boers in the concentration camps are tired of the useless struggle and are determined to help the British end it.

WOMAN DYING FROM SNEEZING.

Miss Sarah Mackey of Taylorville, Ill., Weakening Under the Strain.

Taylorville, Ill., Jan. 28.—Miss Sarah Mackey, who has been sneezing almost constantly during the last ten days, broke all previous records when she sneezed 700 times in an hour and a quarter by actual count. She is beginning to show great weakness, but all efforts by the physicians to stop the sneezing have proved unavailing.

BATTLE IN COLOMBIA.

More Than Four Hundred Men Are Killed.

Colon, Jan. 28.—A battle was fought between the government troops and insurgents about forty miles from Bogota, in which the insurgents were routed. Three hundred and fifty of the insurgents and 10 0one the government troops were killed. The number of wounded is not given.

Dose of Poison.

Huron, S. D., Jan. 28.—L. P. Jones, formerly agent for the Northwestern railway at Redfield, suicided at that place, taking a dose of poison. Jones had been discharged from the employ of the company for an alleged shortage, and at the time of his death was running a bucket shop at Redfield without a license. He had been arrested by the government officials and placed under bonds for appearance at the next term of United States court.

Creamery Prosperous.

Cokato, Minn., Jan. 28.—The Cokato Creamery company held its annual meeting and elected as president J. N. Love; secretary, Gustaf P. Olson; treasurer, Jacob Ojanpera. From the secretary's reports there appears to have been delivered at the creamery the past year 3,825,702 pounds of milk and 74,676 pounds of cream; total butter made, 196,113 pounds; paid to patrons and expense, $39,418.73, received for butter, etc., $38,845.65. Few creameries in this state can show any better report.

Storm Did Much Damage.

Port Townsend, Wash., Jan. 28.—The first boat from down the straits for two days arrived yesterday and reports Friday's storm as doing much damage at small towns and to farms. At Port Angeles a boathouse was carried away, and one or two small wharves were wrecked. G. M. Lauridzen lost much property and in an effort to save his goods had both legs broken. The Port Angeles water supply is cut off on account of the waterworks being frozen.

Fitz Brings Suit.

New York, Jan. 28.—Robert Fitzsimmons has instituted a suit for $50,000 damages against Percy Williams, owner of the Orpheum theater, for injuries sustained in falling down a flight of steps leading from the lobby of the theater to the rathskeller.

Gift to Cooper-Union.

New York, Jan. 28.—Andrew Carnegie has, within the last few days, given $300,000 to Cooper Union. This is Mr. Carnegie's second gift to the institution, the first one being of a like amount, says the Evening Post.

LOW SLAPS BACK

MAYOR OF GREATER NEW YORK WRITES A VERY VIGOROUS LETTER.

REPLIES TO REV. PARKHURST

SHOWS WHAT AN UNDERTAKING IT IS TO ENFORCE EVERY LAW.

QUIET AND ORDERLY SUNDAYS

MORE PERFECTLY SECURED THAN FOR FOUR YEARS PAST.

New York, Jan. 23.—Mayor Low to-day replied in part as follows to the demand made upon him by the Rev. Parkhurst and Thaddeus D. Kenneson, as president and secretary of the Society for the Prevention of Crime, for the enforcement of the Sunday closing law:

"Your letter of Jan. 17 is at hand. Brushing aside all minor questions, it alleges, in effect, that no attempt has been made since Jan. 1 to enforce the excise law so far as it relates to Sunday selling; it admits that the law is 'quite likely unenforceable,' and yet it argues that the foundations of civic morality are threatened because it is not enforced.

Not a Dead Letter.

"I think it will clear the air if we try to arrive at some common meaning for the word 'enforced' for, as you use it, you give the impression that the law is treated by the administration as a dead letter.

"This is very far from being the case. By virtue of this law the public sale of liquor has been stopped and a peaceable and orderly Sunday has been already more perfectly secured, since the first of January as I judge from the public press, than certainly at any time for four years past. Because, however, it may have been possible, as you imply, to buy liquor in many saloons behind closed doors on Sunday, it pleases you to say, in effect, that the law is treated by the administration as though it did not exist.

Parkhurst Quoted.

"Coming from any one less familiar with the problem than yourselves, this assumption would suggest one of the easy and sweeping inferences often made by those who speak without knowledge. Read, however, in the light of the interview of the honored president of your society, which appeared on the 20th instant, it bears a very different aspect. In that interview Dr. Parkhurst said:

"'It impresses me that the present excise law will be exceedingly hard to enforce. Roosevelt bent all his wonderful energy to attain this end, and we had three dry Sundays as a result. That does not seem to predict success for any effort the present administration may make. The whole police force was used in carrying out Roosevelt's determination and there was practically an open field for the perpetration of other crimes.'

"To sum up: The attitude of this administration toward the excise law can be clearly defined. It will continue to enforce the excise law as one of the general body of laws which it is called upon to enforce, in the best manner practicable with the means at its disposal."

HOBSON WILL RETIRE.

Hero of the Merrimac Will Enter the Political Arena.

Washington, Jan. 23.—Capt. Richmond P. Hobson, the naval constructor who sank the Merrimac in the mouth of the Santiago harbor, appeared to-day before the retiring board at the Washington navy yard. He will receive a pension of $3,000 annually for the remainder of his life if his application meets the approval of President Roosevelt.

Capt. Hobson's application for retirement is the preliminary, it is believed, to his entrance into politics. He himself declines to discuss his political aspirations, but his friends don't doubt that if his district in Alabama desires to send him to congress he will be willing to accept the nomination.

The district is now represented by Mr. Bankhead, one of the leaders of the minority in the house. Mr. Bankhead is an astute politician and has no intention of relinquishing his position. To secure even the nomination Capt. Hobson will have a hard fight on his hands.

YOUNG BOY DRUNKARD.

Sad Case of Mistaken Greediness Comes Up in a New York Police Court.

New York, Jan. 23.—John Conaty, ten years old, of 546 West Forty-sixth street was arraigned to-day in the West side police court, charged with intoxication.

Policeman Murtha of the West Forty-seventh street station picked him up late on Wednesday night at Ninth avenue and Forty-seventh street. The little fellow was so helpless by drink that he had to be taken to Roosevelt hospital.

The boy told the court to-day that he had stolen several bottles of beer from a grocery store and drank too much of it. Magistrate Dial sent the boy to the children's society.

PEACE PROPOSALS FROM BOERS.

Were Presented to Lord Rosebery by a Boer Delegate.

London, Jan. 24.—It is rumored in the lobbies of the house of commons that a Boer delegate from Acting President Schalkburger last June saw Lord Rosebery and submitted peace proposals to him. Lord Rosebery acquainted Lord Salisbury, the premier, with this fact, but, according to the rumor, the cabinet declined to consider the matter on the ground that the war was coming to an end with the unconditional surrender of the Boers.

OPPOSE CONSOLIDATION.

Maryland Proposes to Prevent Consolidation of Competing Lines.

Annapolis, Md., Jan. 24.—A bill was introduced in the house of delegates which, if passed, will effectually prevent the purchase of the Western Maryland railway by any corporation controlling a railroad in this state competing with the Western Maryland.

Elected by Export Lumbermen.

Cincinnati, Jan. 23.—The National Lumber Exporters' association to-day adjourned to meet next January in New Orleans. The following officers were elected: President, Ernest M. Price, New York; treasurer, Richard W. Price, Baltimore; general counsel, John J. McKelvey, New York; secretary and treasurer, Elliott Lang, Memphis. Resolutions were adopted making exporters of packing house products, linseed, cottonwood machinery, grain, dairy and other products eligible to membership.

INDIAN OUTBREAK FEARED.

Reds Will Not Submit Tamely to the Hair-Cutting Process.

La Crosse, Wis., Jan. 23.—It is feared there will be an Indian outbreak in this vicinity should the government order compelling Indians to abolish their old customs of wearing long hair and blankets and painting their faces be enforced. Chief White Eagle of the Winnebago camp opposite this city declares these are sacred privileges and that they will protect their customs by the shedding of blood if necessary.

PAPERS WERE DEFECTIVE.

E. Le Roy Miller, Wanted in Iowa, Released on Habeas Corpus.

Fargo, N. D., Jan. 23.—Judge Pollock granted a writ of habeas corpus and ordered the release of E. Le Roy Miller, arrested on complaint of Iowa authorities charging larceny. Defective papers were the cause of the issuance of the writ. Miller was in a partnership kinetoscope deal and says he left the machine in Iowa as so many dates had to be canceled on account of smallpox.

CAUGHT IN NEW ORLEANS.

Sheldon of West Superior Is Arrested and Held.

New Orleans, Jan. 23.—Nathaniel A. Sheldon of West Superior, Wis., is under arrest here on the charge of forgery. The man was apprehended on the request from Sheriff Sommer of West Superior. Sheldon has been traveling under the name of J. S. Sloan and he is charged with having embezzled a lot of railroad tickets and also with forgery. When arrested he admitted his identity. Sheriff Somer will send a deputy to take the prisoner back to Wisconsin.

MONTANA'S CAPITOL FINISHED.

Building Turned Over to the Commission.

Helena, Mont., Jan. 23. — Montana's new state house was formally turned over to the commission by H. L. Frank, president of the Montana Building company, and the contract was approved by the commission. The commission decided to dedicate the building on July 4, which is just three years after the corner stone was laid by the Masonic grand lodge.

IRISH FUNDS LOW.

Forcing the Retirement of Nationalist Members of Parliament.

Dublin, Jan. 23.—The recent and prospective retirements of Nationalist members of the house of commons are attributed in some quarters to the depleted condition of the Nationalist treasury. It is said that the parliamentary fund for 1902 thus far totals only £1,100, over half of which amount came from the United States.

RESPITE GRANTED.

Gov. Toole of Montana Postpones a Hanging.

Helena, Mont., Jan. 23.—Gov. Toole yesterday respited William Hardie, under sentence of death at Glasgow for the murder of a companion in Valley county four months ago. He was to have been hung Jan. 24, but was given a respite until March 10 in order that he may perfect his appeal.

SCALDED AND BURNED.

Iowa Five-Year-Old Falls Into a Kettle of Boiling Feed.

Marshalltown, Iowa, Jan. 23. — The five-year-old son of Charles Robinson at Dougherty, fell head first into a kettle of boiling feed and was so badly burned that he died a few hours afterward. The father was cooking feed in a large kettle out doors.

Talks to Farmers.

Montevidio, Minn., Jan. 23.—A farmers' institute opened here for a two-day session with the usual corps of instructors. Nearly 300 farmers and others attended the opening session. The talks given on clover, grasses and soils were listened to with much interest, and the failure of clover to grow successfully in this vicinity was so carefully explained that many farmers who had practically abandoned this important crop intend to make a new attempt to grow the same.

Refused to Prosecute.

Jamestown, N. D., Jan. 23. — Judge Glaspell is holding a term of court at Fessenden. The case against Buttz, the aged Wells county farmer who shot Capils, a Bowdon saloonkeeper in the head, has been dropped. Capils recovered, and, admitting that he was wrong in the quarrel, refused to prosecute.

Modern Antiquities.

Janesville, Wis., Jan. 23. — A report has reached here that an old man and his son have been engaged on their farm near this city manufacturing Indian war relics which were supposed to have been made by the Wisconsin Indians in past ages. These supposed relics have brought fancy prices.

Reform in Yankton.

Yankton, S. D., Jan. 23.—Gambling is entirely closed in Yankton. Mayor Powers and Marshal Pierson served notice on every house yesterday to close and remain closed. All slot machines were also taken out.

Struck by a Big Rock.

Lead, S. D., Jan. 23.—Frank Hartin, a miner employed in the Wasp No. 2 mine on Yellow creek, was struck in the fact by a heavy rock, fracturing his frontal bone. He is in a critical condition.

Rush for Land.

Pierre, S. D., Jan. 23. — The present fine weather is bringing many people into this country to take advantage of the free government land. The long-expected rush for these lands is now on.

H. P. Graham Stricken.

Eau Claire, Wis., Jan. 23.—H. P. Graham, aged 82, has been stricken by paralysis. There is grave doubt of his recovery. He was the first mayor of Eau Claire and is president of the Phoenix Manufacturing company.

Child Drinks Carbolic Acid.

St. Paul, Jan. 23.—The four-year-old daughter of Morris Sandin of 545 Fairview avenue, Merriam Park, got hold of a carbolic acid bottle last evening. She drank nearly an ounce of the acid and is not expected to live.

HILL IS QUIZZED

MAGNATE TESTIFIES BEFORE THE INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION.

ON THE STAND OVER THREE HOURS

DECLARES THAT COMPETITION DOES NOT LOWER TRAFFIC RATES.

TELLS ALL ABOUT THE MERGER

GIVES REASON MORE SIMPLE THAN HAS BEEN CONJECTURED.

Chicago, Jan. 26.—James J. Hill, president of the Northern Securities company and president of the Great Northern Railway company, testified for three and a quarter hours before the interstate commerce commission here yesterday. In answer to questions tending to show the effect of the community of interests plan on rates, the veteran railroad man declared that competition does not lower rates, but on the contrary, he believed that it advanced them. He declared that in the Northwest, where for twenty years the Northern Pacific and Great Northern have been at peace, where one road has agreed with the other on rates and maintained the agreements, rates were lower than in any other part of the country.

In regard to the purchase of the Burlington by the Northern Pacific and Great Northern, Mr. Hill declared that the purchase was a

and was not due to "a movement in line with the trust idea." He testified to the formation of the Northern Securities company, and in doing so, gave a reason far more simple than has generally been conjectured.

"There are some old men—some very old men—interested in the management of the Great Northern," said he. "Two of them are over eighty and several over seventy years. They wanted to form a close corporation into which they could confide their interests with the assurance that the road would be managed along the lines which have made it a success. It was to have taken over one-third of the stock of the road. The plan seemed to be a good one, and then it was proposed to let all the stockholders in—not alone the few owners of the one-third—but all of them. The plan and then it broadened into the idea of taking in the Northern Pacific also. The roads had worked in harmony for twenty years and the change in the holder of securities would make no difference. It can make no difference and will make no difference."

Mr. Hill talked vigorously and earnestly. At the close of the session, when Chairman Knapp offered to allow Mr. Hill to leave for New York if the latter felt that staying in Chicago would inconvenience him seriously, Mr. Hill declared that his time belonged to the commission, and that he desired in every way to aid them to the extent of his ability. Chairman Knapp thereupon said that Mr. Hill would be again called to the stand to-day.

SCHEME OF STEAMSHIP COMPANIES

There Will Not Be a Merger, but Instead a Combination to Control the Rates.

New York, Jan. 26.—The White Star steamer Celtic arrived yesterday from Liverpool and Queenstown. Among her passengers were a number of English shipping men whose mission, it was rumored, was to form a combine of transatlantic passenger and freight lines. There was a general denial that a merger was in prospect. It was intimated, however, that the various lines mentioned in connection with the proposed consolidation will propose the policy of uniform traffic rates. In this manner it is hoped to increase the annual earnings of the various companies, at the same time permitting them to retain their individuality.

TRAMPS SEIZE A TRAIN.

But They Will Pay for Their Fun by Serving 150 Days in Jail.

Pueblo, Colo., Jan. 26.—Four armed tramps took possession of an east-bound Denver & Rio Grande freight train yesterday five miles east of Florence, drove the brakeman into the caboose and held the train by force until the Pueblo water works, three and a half miles west of this city, were reached. Pueblo policemen who had been notified by the railroad authorities of the seizure of the train, captured the gang. They were sentenced by the police court to serve 150 days each in jail for vagrancy and will be prosecuted later on graver charges.

BLACKLIST IS SUSTAINED.

Ohio Supreme Court Renders Its Decision.

Columbus, Ohio, Jan. 26.—The syllabus of the supreme court's decision in the case of the Nickel Plate Railway vs. Frank Shaeffer, on appeal from the circuit court of Huron county, involving the "blacklist," which was given out yesterday, sustains the railroad company. Shaeffer was discharged by the railway company for participating in a strike. He claimed that he could not secure employment on any other road because the company refused to give him a certificate of service, and he sued for damages.

Killed by Falling From Bucket.

Calumet, Mich., Jan. 26. — Joseph Plese, a miner employed at the Tamarack mine, was killed by falling from a bucket. Plese was in the bucket with several other miners while it was ascending, when a shover cought in the timbering, throwing him out.

Found a Pearl Worth $250.

La Crosse, Wis., Jan. 26. — George Holzhammer brought to this city a pearl valued by local jewelers at $250, found by winter clam fishers, who get them through the ice.

ROOSEVELT TO INVESTIGATE.

Personal Action on the Appeal of Admiral Schley.

Washington, Jan. 25.—A conference concerning the appeal of Rear Admiral Schley from the conclusions of the court of inquiry was held at the White House yesterday between President Roosevelt, Secretary Long and E. P. Hanna, solicitor of the judge advocate of the Schley court. The utmost reticence in regard to the nature of the conference is shown by those who know what passed at the White House, but it is learned that the president made many inquiries and indicated an intention to investigate personally the contentions made in the appeal. He will do the work carefully and no executive action may be expected for a long time.

VICTORY FOR BOERS.

Over a Score of Yeomen Surrendered to Superior Force.

Pretoria, Jan. 25. — A party of imperial yeomanry who were protecting native grass cutters at Liniquesprult were attacked by 150 Boers and forced to surrender. The Boers lost six killed and four wounded. The British casualties were one killed and seven wounded. Four natives were killed.

COUNTRYMAN IS GRAND MASTER.

Appleton Man Chosen by the Masonic Grand Lodge.

St. Paul, Jan. 25. — The Minnesota grand lodge of Masons closed its annual session yesterday and elected the following officers Grand master, A. D. Countryman, Appleton; deputy grand master, Henry R. Adams, Minneapolis; senior grand warden, William A. McGonagle, Duluth; junior grand warden, Enoch Scott, Winona; grand treasurer, D. W. Knowlton, Minneapolis; grand secretary, Thomas Montgomery, St. Paul.

"PA" GRAFF RETIRES.

He Has Supplied Soda Water to Fifteen Generations of Students.

Iowa City, Iowa, Jan. 25. — W. H. Graff, proprietor of the favorite soda water stand of the University of Iowa students, has retired from business after over thirty years spent following the bowl and pestle. He was known to fifteen generations of Iowa students as "Pa" Graff. During his long period of service in his drug store he was never away from it for a day, save for a three-day vacation taken almost on compulsion.

FIRE AT KALISPELL.

Ten Thousand Dollar Loss in Montana City.

Kalispell, Mont., Jan. 25.—Fire yesterday morning destroyed the millinery store of Mrs. L. E. Thompson on Main street. The flames then spread to the adjoining buildings, burning over four lots on Main street and doing damage to property valued at $10,000. There was $2,000 insurance. It is thought to have been the work of incendiaries, and officers are working on the case.

MINERS' WAGES REDUCED.

Copper Companies Will Cut 10 Per Cent From Employes.

Houghton, Mich., Jan. 25.—Lake Superior copper mining companies will reduce wages probably about March 1. The cut will likely be 10 per cent. These steps are rendered necessary by the drop in copper, which will reduce the value of the Houghton county production $10,000,000 to $12,000,000 this year, on the basis of the present market price.

HIS RIGHT TO KILL.

Contention of a Sioux Falls Man Charged With Murder.

Sioux City, Iowa, Jan. 25.—The grand jury in Sioux county has found an indictment against F. W. Reynolds of Sioux Falls, S. D., charging him with the murder of Rev. Samuel Crofton, a negro preacher, near Ireton, Iowa, last August. Reynolds has engaged counsel and will make a strong fight to prove justification.

Had Possession of Another's Horse.

Fargo, N. D., Jan. 25.—William Hawthorne, who has been foreman of the ranch of Adolph Hans, near Sheldon, was arrested here on the charge of stealing a horse and buggy. The horse belonged to his former employer, and some of the other stuff in his possession was the property of a Leonard liveryman. Just before his arrest he endeavored to sell the horse to a deputy sheriff who impersonated a buyer.

Wolves Are Bold.

Minot, N. D., Jan. 25.—Reports of the ravages done by wolves continue to be most alarming. In many cases large numbers of the prowlers invade corrals and kill calves and young cattle. In many instances large numbers of wolves approach wayfarers, though none have yet been bold enough to do injury. A systematic effort will be made by cattlemen and farmers to exterminate the breed.

New Court House at Parker.

Parker, S. D., Jan. 25.—The commissioners have decided on the general outline of the new court house. The building will be 56x96 feet in size, the first story to be of stone and the second story of brick. The plans include court room, county offices, jail, etc. The building will cost $30,000. Of this amount Parker contributes $10,000 in cash.

Pass Primary Election.

Fergus Falls, Minn., Jan. 25. — This city will not have a primary election this spring. The county attorney holds that Wednesday was the last day for filing applications for places on the primary ballots, and no one has filed. The candidates will all go on by petition as independents, and the expense of holding primaries will thus be saved.

Iowan Convicted of Bigamy.

Sioux City, Iowa, Jan. 25. — John Kelly was convicted at Sidney of bigamy. His real wife lives here. His supposed spouse is Isora Carter, and the two have been living at Humburg. He tried to prove he was not Kelly.

Schools Close at Brownsville.

La Crosse, Wis., Jan. 25.—The schools at Brownsville have closed on account of smallpox. It has just been found that Miss Maggie Hackett had the disease and the whole town has been exposed.

Rickerby's Folly

By TOM GALLON

CHAPTER XIII.

Mrs. Reeks Sits Up Late.

Mrs. Reeks was growing suspicious. In truth, she was a lady given to that form of excitement pretty frequently; perhaps it served to relieve the monotony of a somewhat drab existence. Whatever dreams Mrs. Reeks might once have cherished in regard to Mr. Reeks, or to life in general, had long since been dissipated, and now only returned, in a sort of washed-out form, on the occasion of a hot supper, when luck happened to come in the way of Mr. Reeks, or when, from the pit of a cheap theater, she saw the "Might-Have-Been" behind the footlights and renewed her youth. She was a good woman, and a kindly one; but fate had not treated her well, and she had learned to expect little except buffets and knock-out blows. But she pinned her faith to Mr. Reeks, and was moderately happy.

Now, when things looked blackest, and a big cloud of debt loomed heavy above her, there had come a gleam of hope. This husband, in whom she had never ceased to believe, was, by the sheer power of his intellect and his personality, to secure at least £100. Nay, more—was it not possible that he might permanently take the place of this man who had disappeared; that he might rise to something even more lucrative than either of them imagined? In the full flush of glorious expectation, Mrs. Reeks sent the small servant out for something hot, and prepared to make herself comfortable, pending the triumphant return of Mr. Reeks. Then some dim touch of the old romance came back to the poor, commonplace woman, and she dreamed a dream.

She thought that the days of squalid struggling in Camden town were over; that a newer and a brighter world had opened for them both, and that they sailed out to it over a sunlit sea. She had no notion where they were going, except that she was confident in the strength and power of some promise which had been made to her. She knew with absolute certainty that troublous times were over and done with. She was floating out on a broad, open sea, on the way to a new life, under happy conditions. Then the vessel on which she sailed began to rock and plunge, and Mrs. Reeks, starting awake, found herself nodding in her chair—the fire out—and the clock pointing towards 3 in the morning.

Mrs. Reeks started to her feet and looked about her. It became evident in a moment that Mr. Reeks had not come home, his slippers—like a melancholy ghost of the end of him—stood inside the fender; his pipe lay on the table, ready to his hand, to be smoked before retiring to rest. In a word, Mr. Reeks was, above all things, a model husband; and this was the first occasion on which his wife had ever sat at their humble fireside, at such an hour, alone.

Thoroughly awakened from her dream, Mrs. Reeks shook herself, got up and went to the window, pulled the blind aside and looked out. It was a dark enough night, and it happened that, just under the lamp outside the window, a policeman had halted on his cheerless beat to look about him. Mrs. Reeks instantly dropped the blind, with a gasp, and retired to her chair.

"I don't like it at all," she muttered to herself. "I wish I'd never urged him to go in for it. It's been a hard life, and, heaven knows, we want the money; but if this Gilbert Rickerby is dead (as he well may be, to be advertised for like this) I don't care for the thought that George Reeks is stepping into his shoes. Nearly 3 o'clock! If anything has happened to him I'll never forgive myself. It's false pretenses—goodness knows what it is or what it isn't!"

She started up again and went to the window, looked out, and saw, to her relief, that the policeman was gone. "I thought, perhaps, he was watching the house," she murmured to herself. "Poor George—he's got the heart of a lion; but you could crush him in a moment with unkindness. I hope, if they find him out, they won't be rough with him."

At last, after wandering about the room restlessly for a long time, she caught up the light, with an air of determination, and went up to the bedroom, tied on her bonnet with some fierceness and threw a cloak about her. Then she came down stairs, extinguished the light and went out into the streets, taking the key of the house with her.

She set off rapidly in the direction of St. John's Wood, taking the broader thoroughfares, and only stopping to ask the way once or twice, with something of fear, of a grim-looking constable at a street corner. So she came to the house, and had her unsatisfactory interview with Cornelius, and went away again, buoyed up with the hope that George Reeks had taken another road, and had reached home in her absence. But she found, on arrival, that there was no sign of him; with a sinking heart she let herself in to the little house, and sat down again to wait.

Meanwhile, Mr. Reeks himself had been passing through exciting experiences. After that struggle in the garden, he found himself, as he stood helplessly looking on, grasped by the arm and hurried along at top speed into the darkness. Looking up, timidly, he saw that Gilbert Rickerby was his guide.

"Come along, Mr. Reeks," cried Gilbert; "we haven't a moment to lose. The game is up, I'm afraid; but I don't want to get you mixed up in any of our disasters. There is a way out here; you must leave me to look after myself. Remember, however"—they had got to the little gate leading into the alley at the back of the house; Gilbert stood still, with a hand on the shoulder of the little man before opening the gate—"I rely upon you to-morrow night, or rather, to-night. You know the time and place, near here. I know that woman with whom we spoke a little ago, will keep her word and rescue my dear girl from this house. Will you be there?"

"Yes, yes, I'll be there!" exclaimed Mr. Reeks, with a hand pressed against his forehead. "Oh, you needn't think I am going to fail you; only I've seen such things to-night that this poor head of mine is in a whirl, and I don't know where I am, or what I'm doing. When I came out to-night Mrs. R. assured me that I was Gilbert Rickerby; since then, I've seen ghosts among the trees, and dead men, and fools in sheets, and old women carrying lanterns, and—"

"There, there, never mind all that," broke in Gilbert. "The time will come when all these things will be set right, when you will forget all the tragedy of that horrible place, and when I will not forget how loyally you have helped me. Good-night—until to-morrow."

So Mr. Reeks staggered out into the alley, thence into the streets, and made his way home as rapidly as possible.

It was only when he actually came in sight of the house that he realized how late it was; remembered the scene at the garden gate between Cornelius and Mrs. Reeks; and wondering how that lady would greet him. There had been so much to think of before that this last most important point had slipped his thoughts altogether; but it pressed itself upon him now with remarkable urgency. He put his key in the lock and entered as softly as possible. Before he had fairly got inside the door of the sitting room was pulled open, and Mrs. Reeks stood looking at him.

"Is that you, George Reeks?" she asked. It was, of course, quite a superfluous question, seeing that Mr. Reeks, though small, stood fully revealed; but Mrs. Reeks had to make a beginning somehow and she was absolutely boiling over with questions.

"Yes, my love," responded Mr. Reeks, meekly. "I—I'm afraid I'm a little late."

Mrs. Reeks made no reply; she turned quickly and marched back into the sitting room. Mr. Reeks took off his outer garments, and hung them up, and then followed his wife, nervously. Arrived in the sitting room, he sank into his chair, rested his elbows on the table, and wearily covered his face with his hands.

Mrs. Reeks was growing impatient. She tapped her foot hurriedly, for a few moments, on the floor, and then spoke, in clear tones which seemed to stab the unfortunate man like so many knives:

"George Reeks—you went out tonight for a certain purpose known and approved by me."

"I know, my love—I know," murmured Reeks, without uncovering his face. "I wish you would be kind enough not to mention it."

"But I insist on mentioning it, Mr. Reeks," she retorted. "Are you to come home at such an hour as this, and in the woebegone condition you are in—and tell me not to mention it? I will mention it! What have you been doing all these hours?"

Mr. Reeks shuddered. "I would rather—much rather—not say," he replied. "It's no use, my dear; I know quite well that you are burning to know what has happened. If I told you, you would not believe me; you'd put cooling things on my head, or dose me with something for incipient insanity. Therefore, I won't attempt it. I went out to-night—or last night—I don't know which it was—with the full intention of becoming Gilbert Rickerby. I'm not Gilbert Rickerby, and never shall be. I'm not quite sure that I know who I am; I shouldn't be surprised if you find that you've married the wrong man, after all. Don't ask me anything about it; within a remarkably short space of time I shall either be hanged or make my fortune. And I don't know which."

With this extraordinary statement, Mr. Reeks took up the lamp and declared his intention of going to bed; Mrs. Reeks, utterly at a loss what to do with him, or to say to him, for perhaps the first time in her life, followed him with extraordinary docility.

There was no sleep for Mrs. Reeks that night; she lay awake listening to the disturbed mutterings of her husband, and striving hard to connect them into some definite shape, and so piece together a story to satisfy her curiosity. But, although he talked of dead servants and live masters, and buryings under bushes, he made such a jumble of it all, and plunged about the bed in so wild a fashion and with such horrible gurglings and screamings that Mrs. Reeks was more than glad when daylight fully dawned and she could get and see about her usual household duties.

"Mr. Reeks, hollow-eyed, trembling, and shivering, came down at about midday and pretended to eat some breakfast. This time Mrs. Reeks, remembering her previous defeat, went to work in a more diplomatic fashion; but an artful question or two in her lightest and most pleasing manner. But all to no purpose; Mr. Reeks had so fully made up his mind not to open his mouth that he went so far as to keep that resolution, even in regard to his breakfast, and pushed away everything untasted. Finally, taking advantage of the absence of Mrs. Reeks from the room for a moment or two, he darted out into the hall, got his hat and coat, and slipped out of the house. Mrs. Reeks heard the front door bang, and ran in a great hurry; but too late to stop him or ask him where he was going.

Truth to tell, he would have found it somewhat difficult to answer that question himself. He was afraid to think, and yet afraid to cease thinking; he wanted to work himself out of this tangle in which Fate had wound him; and yet his happy-go-lucky nature urged him to let things drift and hope for the best. It was only after he had been wandering aimlessly for an hour or two that he remembered the appointment for that night, and that he had promised to give Olive Mallory shelter at No. 2, Little Pond street. And then, indeed, he began to fear that he had gone a little too far, and that Mrs. Reeks would have first to be reckoned with.

"I can't explain," he thought, miserably. "How can I tell her that this young girl is out of her mind; that she is being pursued by a villain, and that she is the promised wife of a man whom everyone believes to be dead, and whom I have tried to personate? How can I explain my reason for bringing such a visitor, at so late an hour? how can I make her understand that that visitor is in danger, and must be kept in hiding? Well, I must hope for the best, and trust to luck to pull me out of it somehow."

Still, fearing further questioning on the part of Mrs. Reeks, he wandered about all that day until the time drew near to keep his appointment. It had been settled that Gilbert Rickerby should let the two women—Ursula and Olive—out into the little alley at the back of the house; that Ursula should take the girl to a quiet by-street some distance on the way to Camden Town, and that Mr. Reeks should meet them there and take charge of Olive.

Half-a-dozen times, at least, Mr. Reeks approached the spot agreed upon—and immediately ran away from it. For now Mrs. Reeks did, indeed, loom over the unhappy man, a gigantic figure, in his imagination, of wrath and suspicion and jealousy. But he had that loyalty to Gilbert and that pity for the girl which gradually overcame his fears; and he went back at last, fairly resolute, to meet his charge.

It had been arranged that they should meet at a very late hour—long after midnight, in fact, when the streets would be empty, and when any who might watch their departure from Rickerby' Folly would have retired long before, to rest. The little man had, by Gilbert's instructions, procured a four-wheeled cab, which he had left waiting around the corner of the street. Coming into the street itself, he saw two figures slowly pacing towards him; and at the same time he had a dim feeling that there was another figure in the distance, standing looking after them. Indeed, this last figure impressed him so much that he went quickly towards Ursula and the girl, and asked a question concerning it at the very moment of meeting them.

"Who's that?" he asked. "I thought I saw a man coming this way; he passed under a lamp a moment ago. Are you sure no one has followed you?"

Ursula Sewell had faced about quickly when he spoke, and was looking in the direction he indicated. "There's no one there," she said, looking round at him again. "You're nervous. You forget that there are other people in the streets of London, even so late as this. It would be bad for any one who tried to follow me," she added, with a laugh.

George Reeks looked again in the direction in which he had seen the figure; but it was gone. Reassured, he started off with them towards the cab that was waiting; put Olive in and got in himself. Looking out of the cab window, and seeing Ursula standing alone in the street, he said, with a touch of compunction:

"I don't like the idea of your going back to that house alone. After what you've done to-night, there may be danger for you."

"What should harm me?" she asked, defiantly. "I must go back there; it's the only place that has any ties to draw me to it. Don't be afraid. I know how to take care of myself." She nodded, quietly, and turned and went back the way she had come.

Neither of them noticed, while they spoke together in those few moments before the cab started, that a man had come out of the street, and, stepping briskly into the roadway, had gone around on the other side of the cab, and passed close to the further window—much closer than was necessary—in the act of crossing the road. As the woman had said, London's streets were never really empty, and it was only the little man's nervousness that had made him suspicious of that figure in the distance. But they might have been disturbed, indeed, had they seen this man stop at a little distance and watch this cab as it rolled on towards Camden Town; watch it, with a fist grimly shaken after it, and a little burst of laughter for the simplicity of the people who had tried to outwit him. It was Nugent Leathwood.

"I suppose I might have got hold of the girl in the street while I was following them," he muttered, stroking his chin, thoughtfully. "But that would never have done; there might have been screams and a scene, and, goodness knows, what scandal—and I can't afford to risk that. Never mind; I know where she is, and that's the great thing. And I won't forget sweet Ursula"—he kissed his fingers in the direction she had taken—"what I owe for this night's work. As for you, you bald-headed little rascal, with your talk of Gilbert Rickerby, and diaries and papers—I'm not likely to forget you, either. It's lucky I got that address out of you; I'll call on you presently. There's only one thing which puzzles me; what on earth has induced you to mix up in the business, and who put you on to this? You didn't meet Ursula when you came to the house, that I'll swear, for I saw you out of it myself. There's some fiendish mystery here that I haven't got to the bottom of yet."

He walked on again for a little distance, and then stopped once more in the silent street, in another vain endeavor to thrash out this thing that was puzzling him.

"I wonder if that fellow, Hubbard, has had anything to do with this? I don't know what man or woman to trust; it's horrible to think that some one whom I least suspect may be fitting a rope about my neck at this very moment. There are only two things that hold me to that accursed house—no, three things." He stopped to check them off on his fingers. "First, that horrible thing we hid in the empty house—that must be got rid of; ought to have been got rid of before. Next, there's this girl—she's the mainspring of everything; I'll run any risk rather than give her up. Perhaps, if I got rid of that body and made a bolt of it out of the country, I could take the girl with me. By Jove! that's a good idea. I must get hold of those papers, too; that's the third business. Well, that little scamp has got the papers, and he's got the girl; I can easily deal with him. So far as the body is concerned, perhaps I needn't touch it, or I might leave it to Cornelius. He has no nerves, that fellow; he'd as soon bury it as to bury a dead cat. Well, that can wait; the first thing is to frighten this Mr. George Reeks."

The mention of that name started him off upon another train of thought, while he walked quickly toward Camden Town; another disturbing thing which might, or might not, be helping to beat out a path to the gallows for him.

"George Reeks! Yes; that was the fellow who went to the funeral with him; I wonder who he was? There is a net drawing about me somewhere, and yet I can't put my hand upon a single tangible strand of it to break it down. I am surrounded by unknown terrors; everywhere voices seem to whisper warnings and threats. And the worst threat of all is that the servant is still unaccounted for. The master I've got—dead as twenty door-nails; the servant is lying in wait for me somewhere, I know. And yet—how should he suspect me?"

He began to be comforted by that thought, to take heart from the fact that, after all, the only two witnesses of the murder were safe—Cornelius Veevers, because, for his own sake, he could be relied upon absolutely; Miles Probyn, for the simple reason that he was dead. And so, telling himself that his fears were but idle fancies, after all, he came, in the small hours of the morning, to No. 2, Little Pond Street, Camden Town.

That night Mrs. Reeks had resorted to stratagem; that is to say, she had waited, with what patience she possessed, until the hour grew so late that it was evident Mr. Reeks was about to repeat his performance of the previous night; then the lady, carefully extinguishing the lights, went to bed.

But not to sleep; she knew better than that. Instead, she muffled herself up in bed clothes and sat up in the bed in darkness, listening intently to every sound in the street. After some two hours of waiting she heard the sound of wheels, and a vehicle stopped at the door. Mrs. Reeks got out of bed and tiptoed to the window, softly drew aside the blind and peered down into the darkness.

What she saw was sufficient, it must be admitted, to startle her. In the first place, out of the cab got Mr. George Reeks; following him came the muffled figure of a female. Mrs. Reeks gasped and caught at the window frame for support. She saw her husband, after a momentary glance upwards at the dark windows, pass in at the little garden gate, followed by his companion; then she heard the cautious turning of the key in the lock and the opening of the front door. Moving as softly as her somewhat heavy weight would permit across the room above, Mrs. Reeks passed out on the landing and peered over into the hall. There she saw Mr. Reeks, with a cautionary finger on his lips, drawing the female toward the sitting room. Creeping down a stair or two, Mrs. Reeks found she could hear exactly what was said.

"This way, my child," whispered the little man, drawing Olive into the room. "Don't be frightened; I'll have a light for you in a moment; and I see there's still a morsel of fire."

Mrs. Reeks had thoughts of pinching herself to see if she were really awake, and to determine whether or not this was some hideous nightmare, and whether it really was the voice of that hitherto devoted husband of hers she heard below. The voice was replied to by the quiet tones of the young girl—Mrs. Reeks went down two steps more in order not to miss anything: "You are very kind to me. I will wait here until he sends for me."

"I don't think you will!" muttered Mrs. Reeks, shaking her head in the darkness. "I may have a word or two to say about that!"

After a few moments Mr. Reeks prepared to come up; assured himself, by an anxious question, that his guest was comfortable; and emerged into the hall—shutting the door behind him. Mrs. Reeks scuttled back to bed, drew the bedclothes about her, and resolutely closed her eyes.

The guilty little man came in and stood for a moment or two beside the bed, looking anxiously and intently into the face of the apparently sleeping woman. Mrs. Reeks essayed a gentle snore, as naturally as she could under the trying circumstances. Mr. Reeks heaved a sigh of relief and began to prepare for bed. In less than ten minutes he was sound asleep, utterly worn out with all that he had passed through. Mrs. Reeks, having assured herself that he was not easily awakened, slipped out of bed, hastily threw on some garments, and started to go down stairs.

Half-way down she stopped, listening, as she had heard the little iron gate at the front of the garden creak on its hinges. More than that, there was a cautious footstep coming up the path. She went down the remainder of the stairs at once, utterly ignoring the door of the sitting room, passed on to the door in front of the house, and stood there, trembling and listening.

There was not the least doubt that someone was outside; she could hear the shuffling of feet on the top step, and, in the silence, heavy breathing. On a sudden impulse, although she could scarcely have defined what the impulse was, she opened the door quickly, and faced the man who stood just outside.

Then, to her astonishment, the man stepped in, coolly, thrust her aside and closed the door. Standing there in the darkness with him, she felt his breath against her cheek and heard these words:

"Hush—not a sound! You are Mrs. Reeks, I suppose?"

"Yes. But what—"

"Don't make a noise. This is a matter of danger—danger to your husband. Get a light."

Mrs. Reeks gasped, and moved toward the door of the sitting room; she felt the man moving, too, in the darkness, close beside her.

CHAPTER XIV.

No Time to Be Lost.

Mrs. Reeks remembered, even while her hand was on the knob of the sitting room door, that there stood close beside the door a small shelf on which stood a candlestick. Not knowing who the mysterious visitor was and why he came there so opportunely to fit in with her suspicions, she hesitated to let him into that secret which was hidden by the sitting room door. So she transferred her hand from the knob to the shelf; found the matches, which were on the candlestick, and struck a light. The candle, as it burned into a flame, revealed nothing more alarming than a well-dressed, gentlemanly-looking man, smiling at her reassuringly and beginning—now that he saw that they were alone—to murmur apologies for his intrusion.

"Quite disgraceful, I am sure," he said, in a low voice, "to disturb a lady at such an hour as this. I was hesitating whether to knock when you opened the door. Is Mr. Reeks here?"

Mrs. Reeks nodded, solemnly. "He is here—and in bed," she replied, softly, and with a glance toward the stairs. "He hasn't been in bed five minutes, sir; if you wish to see him—"

"I wouldn't disturb him for the world," broke in the stranger, hurriedly. "My business is rather with yourself, Mrs. Reeks, than with him. I have already said that your husband is in danger. Good-hearted fellow that he is—a creature of impulse—who cares not what danger he plunges into—"

He stopped, because Mrs. Reeks was shaking her head, obstinately. "You've been mixing up George with some other party, sir," she observed. "I never knew George Reeks to go dashing into danger, unless it was by accident—at least, not until to-night."

"Exactly. It is of to-night I wish to speak. Tell me, is it not a fact that your husband has brought a young woman into this house only a little time ago—this very night, in fact?"

Mrs. Reeks bridled. This was touching her on a sore point; and Nugent Lethwood was quick to observe it and to pursue the momentary advantage.

"Believe me," he broke in, before she had time to answer, "I have no desire to say anything against him. But am I right in supposing that he has brought this lady here without consulting you—mysteriously, and in the middle of the night?"

"It's true," replied Mrs. Reeks, beginning to whimper. "In all my life, sir, such a thing has never happened before. He brings some unknown baggage into the house at this hour—packs her up comfortably in the drawing room—and says nothing whatsoever to me. But what am I to do?"

OWNED BY HERSCHEL HEIRS.

First Photographic Portrait Posed for by Miss Dorothy Catherine Draper Many Years Ago.

When Dorothy Catherine Draper, who died at Hastings last week, posed for the first photographic portrait of a person, shortly after Daguerre's announcement, in 1839, of his discovery of the action of sunlight on silver, her face was dusted with a fine white powder, that the impression might be the clearer. The first photographic portrait ever made is still in existence. It is owned by Lord Herschel's heirs in England. The photographer was Miss Draper's distinguished brother, John W. Draper, who succeeded Dr. Valentine Mott as president of New York University's medical college. Miss Draper lived to see the experiment in which she took part develop into one of the most important arts. There have been other men who have alleged that they were first in applying Daguerre's discovery to photographic portraits, but their claims were not well founded. Miss Draper's picture and the date on which it was made were long ago accepted as proof that to John Williams Draper belonged this honor.—New York Sun.

HIS BOOK WASN'T RUBBISH.

Therefore Francis Wilson Refused to Gratify the Desire of the Young Librettist.

An embryo librettist recently approached Francis Wilson with a manuscript and received rather a bewildering reception.

"I cannot agree to read it," said the comedian, amiably. "I am a weak person influenced to merit."

"But my book is very good," argued the librettist.

"Just what I fear, my dear boy," replied Mr. Wilson. "If it proved to be good, I might be tempted to produce it—and lose $20,000. If I did not produce it, I should be uneasy, and I do not wish to add to my discomfort. However, I will read the book on one condition."

"What is it?"

"That you assure me that your book is downright rubbish."

"But it isn't."

"Then I can do nothing for you. Good day."—New York Times.

TOO BASHFUL TO MARRY.

Three Times Dorin's Heart Failed Him at the Supreme Moment—Is Given Up.

The most bashful man in the West is William Dorin, who is connected with the best families in Quincy. Twice all arrangements were made for his wedding, and he ran to cover and was forgiven. The third attempt Miss Nellie Parsons made to wed him resulted in another failure.

There were flowers, carriages, wedding breakfasts and orchestras on hand—but Dorin ran at the supreme moment and disappeared. He said he was willing to marry quietly, but could not face a society wedding. Miss Parsons has given him up.—Quincy (Ill.) Special to New York World.

Expecting Too Much.

Proprietor—It doesn't seem to me that our new superintendent, Mr. Fussabout, accomplishes a great deal of work.

Confidential Man—It wasn't to be expected of him. But he is so sympathetic! He is a great acquisition. By the way, you will have to take on two or three more men and a girl or two to perfect his system. He says it is absolutely imperative.

Proprietor—But when his system is perfected, what then?

Confidential Man—What then? Why, the system will be perfect. What more would you have? You can't expect to have system and work, too.—Boston Transcript.

He Studied Recent History.

"This string," said Tommy, as he impatiently struggled with the task of disengaging a snarl of twine, "reminds me of the Boer war."

"Why does it remind you of the Boer war, Tommy?" inquired his mother.

"Because it has so many ends," was Tommy's response.—Boston Curier.

OLD JOE, THE NIGHT WATCHMAN

(From the Pall Mall Gazette, London.)

How often on returning home late on a dreary winter's night has our sympathy gone out to the poor old night-watchman as he sat huddled up over his cage fire, overlooking the excavations which our city council in their wisdom or otherwise, allow the different water companies to make so frequently in our congested streets. In all weathers and under all climatic conditions, the poor old night-watchman is obliged to keep watch over the companies' property, and to see that the red lights are kept burning. What a life, to be sure; what privations and hardships; no wonder they have aches and pains, which nothing but St. Jacob's Oil can alleviate.

"Old Joe" is in the employ of the Lambeth Water Works, and is well and favorably known. He has been a night-watchman for many years, in the course of which he has undergone many experiences. What with wet and cold, he contracted rheumatism and sciatica, which fairly doubled him up, and it began to look a serious matter for old Joe whether he would much longer be able to perform his duties, on which his good wife and himself depended for a livelihood; but as it happened, a passerby, who had for some nights noticed Old Joe's painful condition, presented him with a bottle of St. Jacob's Oil, and told him to use it. Old Joe followed the advice given; he crawled home the next morning and bade his wife rub his aching back with the St. Jacob's Oil "a gentleman gave him," and undoubtedly his wife did rub, for when old Joe went on duty at night he met his friend and benefactor, to whom he remarked: "Them Oils you gave me, Guv'nor, did give me a doing; they was like pins and needles for a time, but look at me now," and old Joe began to run and jump about like a young colt. All pain, stiffness and soreness had gone; he had been telling everybody he met what St. Jacob's Oil had done for him. Old Joe says now he has but one ambition in life, and that is to always to be able to keep a bottle of St. Jacob's Oil by him for he says there is nothing like it in the world.

St. Jacob's Oil serves the rich and the poor, high and low the same way. It has conquered pain for fifty years, and it will do the same to the end of time. It has no equal, consequently no competitor; it has many cheap imitations, but simple facts like the above tell an honest tale with which nothing on earth can compete.

All Over Again.

"Here are half a dozen prescriptions I should like to have you fill as soon as you can," wheezed Rivers.

"I can see they are all for the cure of a cold," remarked the druggist, looking them over.

"It's this way," explained Rivers. "When I had the other cold I tried all these. One of them cured me, and I can't remember now, confound it, which one it was."—Chicago Tribune.

FROM SASKATCHEWAN, WESTERN CANADA.

In a letter written from Prince Albert, Saskatchewan, one of the districts of western Canada, by Henry Laughlin to Dr. C. T. Field of Chase, Michigan, and which appeared in the Reed City (Michigan) Clarion, appeared the following:

"If any one should ask you how I like it up here, tell them I am perfectly well satisfied; for me it is just the place. I have as good a piece of land as ever laid outdoors. Wouldn't exchange it for the whole of Lake County; or at least the township of Chase.

"Of course, I have not been here very long, but as much of the country as I have seen it cannot be beat anywhere. We had as good crops here last fall as I ever saw, and everything gets ripe in good shape. We had as good ripe potatoes as I ever ate in my life. There is no better place for stock on the continent than here. Horses and cattle will do as good running out all winter here as they do where they are fed all winter there. Have built me a residence and now all I want is a wife to keep house for me. I have some breaking already done on my place, but next summer I intend to have more done and then I will be ready for business.

"We have had a very fine winter so far. It has not been much below zero, if any, excepting about a week in the middle of November. It has been quite cold the past day or two. We are in log shanties, and they are just muddied up on the outside, and nothing has frozen on the inside as yet. There is no wind or rain, just nice steady weather all the time."

Lasted Until Nine.

At the recent meeting of the Pennsylvania society, one of the guests, who was seated next to Augustus Thomas, the playwright, and the president of the Missouri society, asked Mr. Thomas why the menu cards designated the dinner as the "annual festival."

"That's easy," said Mr. Thomas. "The menu cards were gotten up by a Philadelphia man, and every Philadelphia man who goes to an entertainment which lasts beyond 9 o'clock at night, regards it as a festival."—New York Times.

A Widow Only One Week.

The following message was received in this city:

"Married—On Saturday, Dec. 28, at the residence of the archbishop, in New York, Baron Zdzislaw Bestecki, of Austria, and Mrs. Mary Ross Hummell, daughter of the late Andrew Ross."

Mrs. Mary Ross Hummell formerly resided in this city, but for several months has been living in Manhattan. She was born and raised near New Cumberland, and is a member of one of the prominent families of this part of the state. Her former husband, Valentine Hummell, died a week from yesterday, and three days after his burial she remarried. Mr. Hummell separated from his wife some time ago, and divorce proceedings were pending in court when he died.—Harrisburg Special to Philadelphia Record.

Is Diabetes Curable?

Hale, Ind., Jan. 27th.—In answer, Mrs. L. C. Bowers, of this place has this to say:

"I had Kidney Trouble which, neglected, finally ran into diabetes; my teeth all got loose and part of them came out; I passed from one and a half to two gallons of water in twenty-four hours, and such a burning sensation attended it that I could hardly bear it. I lost forty pounds in flesh and was very much discouraged.

"Two doctors treated me, and I took every Kidney Medicine I could hear of, but got no relief whatever from anything till I began to use Dodd's Kidney Pills.

"Seven boxes of this remedy drove away every symptom I have mentioned."

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease, and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address

DAIRY AND POULTRY.

INTERESTING CHAPTERS FOR OUR RURAL READERS.

How Successful Farmers Operate This Department of the Farm—A Few Hints as to the Care of Live Stock and Poultry.

Utilizing Our Best Feeds.

The dairymen of the West should utilize every pound of by-products made by our mills and factories. For more than ten years men like Prof. Henry of Wisconsin have been asking the farmers here why they permitted this class of feeds to be shipped off east, when they themselves had enough animals to consume all of it, if those animals were rightly fed. Some of our by-products rich in protein are bought by Europeans and fed to high-priced cattle on high-priced land. The Danes, under such conditions, buy the feeds we let go past our doors. They pay heavy charges for shipment and reshipment, and then feed those feeds to their dairy cows. The butter they make by the help of those feeds they sell in the London market at from 20 to 25 cents per pound, a price no better than good creamery butter brings in Chicago almost the year round. The problem presents itself to us in this way:

If the Danes can pay a heavy advance on what we would have to pay and still make money out of the use of these feeds, why cannot our dairymen make more money than do the Danes by keeping these feeds at home and feeding them out on our farms? Our most successful dairymen long ago answered the question in the affirmative and are feeding these valuable feeds to as large an extent as the number of their cows will permit.

What is true of the European buyer of concentrated feeding stuffs is true in a lesser degree of the farmers of New England. They have awakened to the profit of utilizing these nitrogenous feeds. A short time ago the writer was talking with an agent of one of our glucose factories. He had just returned from New England, where he had been to look after the sale and delivery of some of the by-products of their factory. He went to be gone ten days, but remained ten weeks instead, so much were the farmers of New England interested in the concentrates being disposed of. The wonder to the writer was and is that his whole time was not taken up selling gluten feeds in Illinois and adjoining states, rather than in New England.

The dairyman in the corn belt can get the by-products of corn with little expense in the way of freights. These by-products are far richer in the nitrogenous elements than is the corn in its original state, generally three times as valuable or more. For the uses of commerce only the starch has been taken out, and starch is in such abundance in our common feeds that we cannot afford to pay a very high price for it. In fact, we need not worry about the carbo-hydrates (starch, sugar, glucose) at all; we need only concern ourselves about getting the protein, and that is the very thing not taken out of the by-products of corn.

This is the element that costs in the foods used on the farm. It is quite a common thing for unscientific feeders to try to dodge this expense by using cheaper feeds less rich in protein. But the method of escape is more costly than would be the purchasing and use of the feeds, for the reason that the digestive system of our animals will take a certain proportion of protein to a certain proportion of carbo-hydrates, and the surplus of the carbohydrates is thrown away. These proportions are quite constant, though slightly varying. The man, therefore, that feeds an oversupply of carbo-hydrates is simply feeding the manure pile with undigested food. If he wants more carbo-hydrates used he must feed more protein to help use them.
